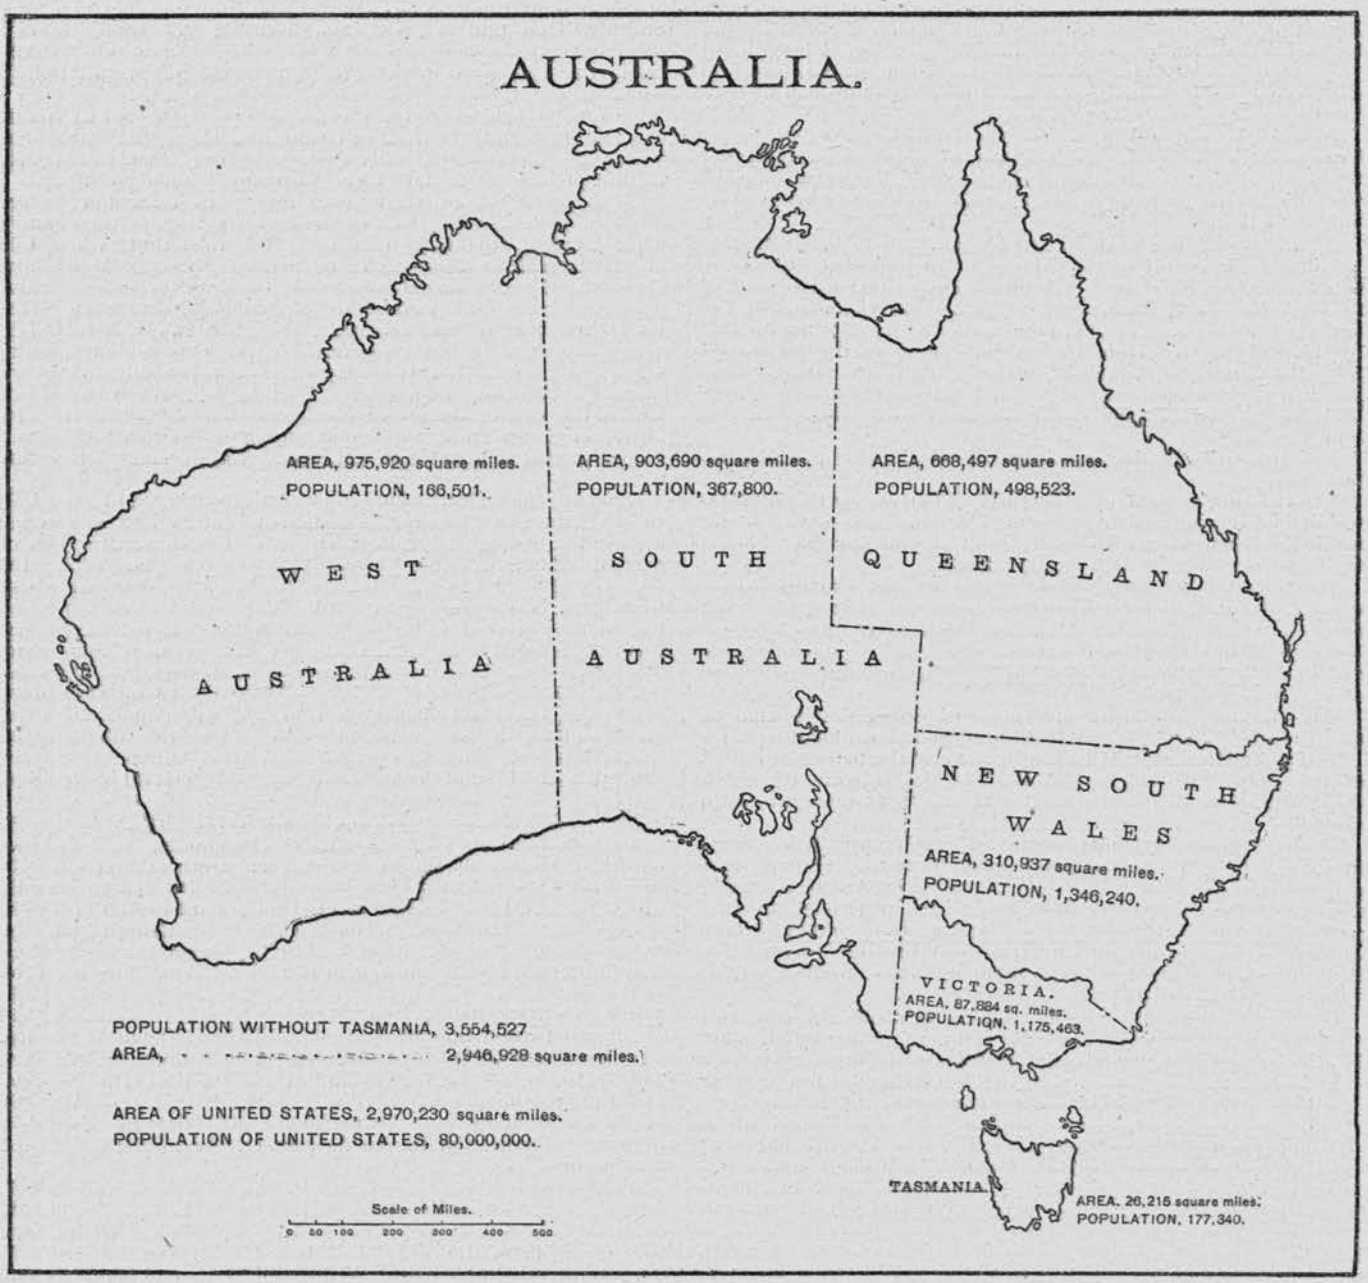
I will not speak of Belgium, which is about three-quarters as large as the State of New York, nor of Switzerland, which is still smaller than Belgium, for if I should refer to them in this connection the claim would at once be made that they are small countries and would not be considered as fair comparisons in area, population, or distances with the United States, although an investigation of this subject in these countries is both interesting and profitable. I shall not attempt at this time to discuss in detail any other phase of this most interesting question, except the subject of rates. Wherever the postal telegraph has been adopted it has been at once followed by a reduction in price and by an increase in the number and kinds of messages, and notably has this been the case in what is known as "social messages."

The effect produced by high and low rates is forcibly illustrated in France, where the rate was reduced 35 per cent; it was followed by an increase of 64 per cent in messages. In Prussia a reduction of 33 per cent in the rate was followed the first month after the change by an increase of 70 per cent in messages. In Switzerland the rate was reduced 50 per cent, and in the first three months there was an increase of 90 per cent in the inland messages over the corresponding months in the preceding year. In England a reduction of 33 per cent on three-tenths of the messages and 50 per cent on the remainder caused an increase of 100 per cent in two years. In Belgium when the rates were high 13 per cent of the messages were on social matters; at low rates, 59 per cent. A reduction of 66 per cent in the rates increased the inland messages 800 per cent in five years and reduced the expenses on each message nearly 50 per cent. "The Belgian director writes that the reduction in rates has been a great boon to the people."

I might cite other countries to the same purpose, and I have no doubt that like or even better results would be produced in the United States.

The Western Union Telegraph Company has repeatedly asserted that rates is a matter of distance, and that the distances are greater here than in England, France, Belgium, and Switzerland, and tables of distances and charges have been presented from time to time for the purpose of proving this assertion, but I will be glad to know what reply they have to make in this connection when rates, distances, and population in Australia are compared with rates, distances, and population in America.

Through the kindness of the publishers of the North American Review I am permitted to use an article on "the Australian Telegraph System," by Hugh A. Lusk, barrister, which appeared in that popular magazine in the November number of 1904:



"The people of Australia own their own telegraph system, and it is managed as a part of the postal system of the country. This arose in the beginning from the fact that, when telegraphs were first constructed, no private company would have taken the risk of making telegraphic communication pay a dividend on the capital required to construct and work the lines. As in the case of the railroads, the choice lay between telegraphs constructed and managed by the Government and no telegraphs at all, and the people of Australia adopted a system of government ownership. Each of the five colonies into which the great island-continent was divided began the construction of telegraph lines, and pushed them forward as fast as the spread of population appeared likely to make any return on the outlay.

Australia has always been a wealthy country and especially so since the gold discoveries of half a century ago, and it has always had a tendency to be lavish rather than niggardly in all matters of public expenditure. This tendency has been illustrated in its telegraph system as much perhaps as anywhere. Lines were made, and afterwards extended, in districts where the demand seemed to be small, and where the population was certainly scanty, to an extent which would not have commended itself to the business instincts of a great corporation, and could not have been expected to yield a large return on the capital invested. The result has been that Australia, more than any other country in the world, presents a field for investigating the effects may be expected to flow from the public ownership of a great public convenience like the telegraph system of to-day.

"The whole question was brought into prominence by the debates that took place in the Federal Parliament in connection with the passage of the new postal act of the Commonwealth. In each of the colonies—now the States of the federation—the telegraph had always been treated as a part of the post-office system; and, therefore, when the Federal Constitution was framed it was agreed, as a matter of course, that the lines should go to the Commonwealth instead of remaining the property of the States, like the railroads. The fact that the colonies had been wholly distinct had led to considerable differences, both in administration and in charges, and the purpose of the new postal act was to establish uniform rates throughout the Commonwealth on a scale that should at once be liberal to the users and fair to the revenue. It was natural, therefore, that the whole question of cost, management, and charges should be thoroughly ventilated in the debates on the measure before it became law.

"The circumstances of Australia and the conditions of its settlement have had the effect of making both its railroads and its telegraphs unusually extensive in comparison with the numbers of its population, and this is markedly the case with its mileage of telegraph lines. At present the great island is only settled on a strip of country bordering on the coast, and even that strip does not include the more northern shores either on the east or west, and takes in no part of the north side at all. The consequence is that a line of telegraph which connects the settlements of Queensland, on the northeast of Australia, with those of West Australia, on the west coast—a distance, in a direct line, of about 2,500 miles—covers fully double that distance from the necessity of keeping in touch with the settled districts. There is, indeed, one line of telegraph which of necessity ignores this rule and passes for nearly its whole length of about 1,700 miles, from the south to the northwestern corner of the island, through an unsettled country. The purpose of this line is to connect settled Australia with the rest of the world by way of Java and India, and it passes through great districts of the interior, which were first explored for the purpose of its construction. Under the circumstances it was not possible that telegraph facilities could be supplied in Australia on a small scale or at a trifling cost.

"The telegraph lines now owned and operated by the Federal Government for the people of Australia have a length of fully 48,000 miles, while the length of the wires is considerably more than a hundred thousand miles. Thus it will be seen the people of Australia and their government have a considerable experience of the cost both of constructing and operating a telegraph system. The mileage of their lines is actually greater than that of any European country, with the exception of Russia, Germany, and France, while in proportion to the number of inhabitants it is, probably, nearly six times as great as that of any other country in the world, with the single exception of its near neighbor, New Zealand. There are upward of 3,000 telegraph stations kept open for the convenience of a population which does not exceed 4,000,000, and the revenue derived from messages is shown to be sufficient to defray the cost of operating and maintaining the lines, as well as defraying the interest charges on the cost of construction at the annual rate of 3 per cent.

"Under the circumstances, it would be natural to suppose that the charges for telegraphic service in Australia must be very high, and it is here that the debates in the Commonwealth parliament and the schedule of rates finally appended to the act throw an unexpected light on the question. It appears that in no part of Australia has the cost of telegraphy ever been high, and the rates now adopted as those which will secure the revenue from loss under the three heads of operating, maintaining, and paying interest on the money invested are remarkably moderate when compared with those in force in most parts of the world, and not least in America. The rates finally settled were these: For town and suburban messages—suburban meaning practically a radius of 10 miles beyond the city limits—the rate fixed is 12 cents for a message not exceeding sixteen words, which includes the address and signature. For messages to any point within the same State from which they are sent the charge is fixed at 18 cents for the same number of words. For messages to any other State within the Commonwealth the charge for a message of similar length is 24 cents. In all cases the charge for extra words beyond the sixteen is a uniform rate of 2 cents a word. Delivery is made within a radius of 1 mile from the receiving office, and for this there is no extra charge.

"It will be seen at once that these charges are remarkable for their moderation, in comparison with any experience the people of America have yet had. They are, in fact, lower for the service rendered and the distances traversed than the rates established in any other country except New Zealand, but they are fully justified by the experience of the three principal States of the Commonwealth—New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland—the tariffs of which have practically been adopted. When it is remembered that Australia, as a whole, is a country of the same area as the United States and that the distances actually traversed are very much greater than those between any points of telegraph communication in America, it will be seen that the charge of 24 cents for a sixteen-word message is very much less than one-half, and would probably work out at about one-third, the amount charged in America. The great area of the five States occupying the mainland—three of the five being each more than two and a half times as large as Texas and a fourth four-fifths of its size—renders the State rate of 18 cents for similar messages equally cheap compared with American rates, while the city and suburban tariff of 12 cents has no parallel in American experience.

"The question which naturally arises at once is, How is it done? We have here a population of four millions of white men, scattered along a coastal belt of country some 5,000 miles in length, with widely separated centers of population, enjoying the most modern facilities of communication to an extent far greater in proportion to their numbers and at less than half the cost at which the same facilities are supplied to a population nearly twenty times as great and far less widely scattered. At the first glance there seems to be no reasonable way of accounting for the difference. To the advocates of public ownership and management of the great necessaries of modern civilized life it would seem that the problem is by no means so serious. In the course of the debate in the Australian Federal Parliament the postmaster-general of the Commonwealth stated boldly that not only was the Australian telegraph system as efficient as any in the world, and, with the single exception of that of New Zealand, by far the cheapest, but that it was so owing to its public ownership and to the economies naturally attending the system. A very brief examination of the facts will show that this claim is at any rate very largely founded on facts.

"The three branches of expenditure dealt with by the Australian minister for postal services were the interest on the cost of constructing the lines, the cost of maintaining the lines in good order when constructed, and the working expenses of the service, including, of course, salaries of officials and workmen of all grades, office expenses and rentals, and the supply of electricity. Every telegraph system must provide for all these in some form or other, but a government system, if honestly worked in the public interests, as the postal system is in this and other civilized countries, has great advantages in the direction of economy in two out of the three branches of expenditure. In the first place, the credit of a whole people is always better than the credit of any part of it, and therefore loans required by nations with a stable government and a reasonable character for honesty can always be obtained on the most favorable terms. Australia is a young though a wealthy community, and as a rule the value of money is somewhat higher there than in older countries; but the $18,000,000 of borrowed money spent by its various colonial governments on the construction of telegraph lines costs to-day in interest only a small fraction beyond 3 per cent. It need hardly be pointed out that such a return as this would not meet the views of any great mercantile corporation. It may fairly be said that the expenses coming under the second head of telegraph expenditure—that is to say, the actual cost of producing the necessary supply of electricity—would be quite as little in private hands as it could be made in the hands of a government department. This, of course, is true; but there is no reason why it should be any less, except the foolish and shameful one that intelligence and honesty are not to be obtained for the service of the public. It is in the third class of the expenditure requisite for conducting a telegraph system, however—the department of salaries and office expenses—where, it is claimed, the advantage of public ownership becomes an element of startling magnitude.

"In Australia the telegraph and telephone services are both incorporated with the post-office, and as such they require few, if any, separate offices. There are fully 3,000 telegraph stations in the country for the convenience of the public, and nearly every one of these is also the district post-office. There are in the United States about 27,000 telegraph stations, but there are not less than 77,000 post-offices for the use of the people; that is to say, there is a post-office for every thousand, but a telegraph station for every three thousand. In the newer, poorer, and far less thickly settled country of Australia there are fully 6,000 post-offices to meet the requirements of 4,000,000 people, or 1 to every 666 people; and more than 3,000 of these are also telegraph stations, being 1 to about 1,300 persons. The contrast is suggestive, but it is most suggestive of all in its financial aspect. If every second post-office in this country were also a telegraph station, the public would be nearly as well supplied with the means of rapid communication as the settlers in Australia now are, instead of one-third as well, and they would also be saved a great deal of money. In America it would then be, as it now is in the commonwealth of the South Pacific, each telegraph station would be at the natural center of population, where it would require no separate offices and no separate staff of clerks and operators, except in cities of considerable size. Every country postmaster or clerk would in that case be required also to be a competent telegraph operator, and thus an endless duplication, both of offices and officials, would be avoided.

"It is in this way that the Australian postmaster-general accounts for the cheapness of his telegraph system when compared with the cost in other and older countries; but this is not all. The cost of production is low and the machinery for carrying on the service is economical indeed, but these things alone would not enable him to make both ends meet. The secret of its success is not only that it is economically conducted; not only that it is not loaded with heavy interest and big dividends, but, more than either, because it is appreciated and made use of by the people to an extent unknown where charges are higher and conveniences are less. Of European nations, Great Britain makes most use of the telegraph, but her population is concentrated within a small area and therefore is easily reached. Her people use the telegraph to the extent of rather more than two messages a year for every inhabitant of the country. In the United States the population is more scattered and therefore more difficult to reach. Three years ago the American people sent, as nearly as possible, one message over the telegraph wires for each inhabitant. In Australia population is more widely scattered than in America and vastly more so than in England, yet three years ago two and a half messages for every inhabitant of the country passed over the telegraph wires of the Government. There is, it appears from the statement of the Australian postmaster-general, only one country in the world that has supplied greater telegraphic facilities for its people, and has charged even lower rates than those of Australia, and that is in the neighboring country of New Zealand. There, he admits, the Government supplies a post-office for every 500 people and a telegraph station for every 800, and there, too, the rates are somewhat lower than even in Australia. He also adds, and the addition is a significant one, that there the people three years ago sent four telegrams for each inhabitant, and the revenue from the telegraphs was even more satisfactory than in Australia.

"The lesson taught by the experience of Australia and enforced by the official head of its postal department is by no means a new one. It is, after all, neither more nor less than the stock argument in favor of the system of trusts, which are advocated as a practical necessity in these days of competition, because, owing to the greatness of the scale on which they operate, they can save immensely on the cost of working, and therefore can, presumably, afford to give the public a better article at a lower price. This is exactly what, the Australian postmaster-general asserts (and apparently beyond the reach of contradiction), the system of government telegraphy does for the people of Australia. Only by the operation of this great public trust, managed for the people by the people, would it be possible in a new country of wide extent and thinly populated to supply the facilities for speedy and reliable communication, except at a cost so enormous as to be prohibitory. Only by giving the public the facilities which such a public trust alone can give can they be induced to use the convenience on a scale so large as to make it pay. Such would seem to be the experience of Australia, and to even a greater extent of New Zealand."

When one knows the results of the postal telegraph in Australia and then claims that it would cost our Government more to run the telegraph under Government than under private enterprise, it simply reflects upon the intelligence and honesty of our own people.

Here, then, are the Australian rates:

(a) For town and suburban messages—suburban meaning, practically, a radius of 10 miles beyond the city limits—the rate fixed is 12 cents for a message not exceeding sixteen words, which includes the address and signature.

There are in this body 225 Members from cities, to say nothing of those from towns of various sizes. What excuse can we give that equal, if not better, privileges are not accorded those whom we directly represent?

(b) For messages to any point within the same State from which they are sent the charge is fixed at 18 cents for the same number of words.

Suppose the Members from New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, or Illinois were to caucus upon this proposition and decide that the people of their respective States were justly entitled to as good, or even better, rates than the people of the respective States in Australia, who doubts what the result would be?

(c) For messages to any other States within the Commonwealth the charge for a similar message is 24 cents.

Think of it. Compare these rates with rates from one point to another in the United States. I beg to call your attention to rates from Washington—viz, the cheapest rate to some point in every State in the Union by either the Western Union or the Postal Telegraph.

NOTE.—No. 1 shows the lowest day rate at place in given State. No. 2 shows highest day rate at different places in given State.

No. 3 shows Australian rate for twenty-word messages, including address and signature, to places named in column A, and you will note that we are giving the telegraph companies a decided advantage in this computation, for former President Green, of the Western Union Telegraph Company has testified that the average address and signature contains seven words, and in this computation we have allowed ten in addition to a ten-word message.

The uniform rate for each additional word in Australia is 2 cents. In the United States it is from 2 to 7 cents.

Behold an empire in itself stretching from the Mississippi to the Atlantic Ocean. South Australia has a greater area than all the twenty-six States east of the Mississippi River. (Population of twenty-six States, 54,744,795; area, 881,655 square miles.)

West Australia has an area even greater than all of these twenty-six States with either of the States Minnesota, Iowa, Arkansas, or Louisiana added. (Area of Minnesota, 83,365 square miles.)

West Australia is more than one and one-half times larger than North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas. (Population of this group, 6,704,552.)

Larger than Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, New Mexico, Idaho, Utah, Arizona, Washington, and Oregon. (Population of this group, 2,563,961.)

Three and one-half times larger than Texas. (Population, 3,048,710.)

Six times larger than California. (Population, 1,485,053.)

Nine times larger than Colorado.

Ten times larger than either Idaho, Utah, or Oregon.

Fourteen times larger than either Washington or Missouri. (Population of Missouri, 3,106,665.)

Sixteen times larger than either Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Arkansas, North Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, or Florida. (Population of Illinois, 4,821,550.)

Almost twenty times larger than New York. (Population, 7,268,894.)

Twenty-one and one-half times larger than either Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Tennessee, or South Carolina. (Population of Pennsylvania, 6,302,115.)

Twenty-nine and one-half times larger than Maine. (Population, 694,466.)

When you consider the population of these several States and groups of States, which is many times more than the population of West Australia, you must be further convinced that we are paying exorbitant rates for telegraphing.

For example, in New York the population is thirty-nine times that of West Australia, yet in area it is not one-twentieth as large. Why should not the people in the State of New York enjoy even cheaper rates than they do in West Australia?

What would happen if two or three Members from each State would take an active interest in this question? What would happen if we all, who claim we are here in the interests of the people, became thoroughly aroused? Why, we would have postal telegraph and rates much less reduced from what we are now receiving. When you think of it and compare the distances and area of Australia and its population of three and one-half millions with distances and a like area in the United States and a population of eighty million, what can we say for ourselves and to our constituency except that telegraph rates ought, in right and justice, to be reduced, even though we might conclude that we would prefer some other method than by government ownership.

The Western Union Telegraph Company was incorporated under act of Wisconsin, March 4, 1856, and act of New York, April 4, 1856, through consolidation of "Erie and Michigan" and "New York and Mississippi Valley Printing Telegraph" companies, with a united capital of $500,000.

Its present capitalization is $97,370,000, having increased its capitalization almost $97,000,000 in fifty years.

Let us see how this has been done.

The following statement of Western Union transactions will give a good idea of their methods:

The National Board of Trade (by report of executive committee November 15, 1882) says: "In 1858 the Western Union had a capital of $385,700. Eight years later the stock had expanded to $22,000,000, of which $3,322,000 was issued in purchase of competing lines, while nearly $18,000,000 was issued as stock dividends. This was the first attempt to spread out an increased paper capital which should hereafter afford a plausible pretext for imposing on the public an oppressive tariff of charges. The next step was the purchase of the United States Telegraph Company, for which purpose $7,216,300 of stock was issued, an amount alleged to be five times the true value of the property. Next came the absorption of the American Telegraph Company. The stock of that company was almost as much inflated as that of the Western Union and amounted, water and all, to $3,833,100, yet $11,833,100 of Western Union stock was issued to get possession of that line."

"These are not the words of theorists or of enthusiastic reformers, but of hard-headed business men who are thoroughly familiar with corporation methods and know whereof they speak."

I quote from Senator Hill, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, for the year 1884:

"In respect to the stock capital of the Western Union Company, amounting to $80,000,000, nearly the whole of it has arisen from stock dividends and from purchases made of the lines of other companies which were paid for by issues of stock. In 1863 its stock capital was only $3,000,000, and even of that amount, small as it seems in comparison with the present stock capital of $80,000,000, it is quite certain that at least five-sixths consisted of what is known in stock manipulations as 'water.' The original line of the Western Union was from New York to Louisville, via Buffalo, Cleveland, and Cincinnati, and was constructed at a cost of about $150,000. It early acquired by purchase at very low rates the property of embarrassed western telegraph companies owning lines from Buffalo to Milwaukee and from Cleveland to Cincinnati, and built a line from Pittsburg to Philadelphia; but even then its actual cash investment is affirmed by those who have carefully investigated the subject not to have exceeded $300,000.

"In 1863 the stock property of $3,000,000 was doubled by a stock dividend, and during 1863 and 1864 $5,000,000 was added to represent extensions and purchases of new lines paid for in stock. The capital being thus swollen to $11,000,000, was, in 1864, doubled by a stock dividend, and thereby made $22,000,000.

"Eighteen hundred and sixty-six was a year memorable for new consolidations, the stock capital having then been increased to $41,000,000 by the issue of $19,000,000 of new stock. Since 1866 the stock capital has been carried up to its present amount of $80,000,000, partly by the issue of stock for the purchase of new lines, but mainly by the three following stock dividends: In 1879, $5,960,600; in 1881, $15,526,590 and $4,320,000; total, $25,807,190."

This nation will ever owe a debt of gratitude to Postmaster-General Wanamaker for his efforts in trying to secure postal telegraph while he was a member of President Harrison's Cabinet, during which time he made the following statement; and, so far as I know, it remains unchallenged:

"According to uncontroverted statements made before your honorable committee the capital stock of the Western Union Telegraph Company in 1858 was $385,700. The stock dividends declared between 1858 and 1866 amounted to $17,810,146, and the stock issued for new lines was $1,937,950, so that the capital stock on July 1, 1866, was $20,133,800. In 1866 new stock was created to the amount of $20,450,500, so that the total capital of the Western Union on the 1st of July, 1867, was $40,568,300. The largest dividend declared by the company up to 1874 was 414 per cent. The largest amount of stock ever divided at one time was $10,000,000, and for a period of seven years the dividends were about 100 per cent a year on its average capital. It was by adding dividends to dividends and by piling the one up on top of the other that this tremendous amount of $46,000,000 of capital and debt was created. The history of the company shows no change of policy.

"In 1874 the company bought up its own stock and the stock of other telegraph companies and accumulated a fund of over $15,000,000, which was held in one shape or another in the treasury of the company. An investment of $1,000 in 1858 in Western Union stock would have received up to the present time (1890) stock dividends of more than $50,000 and cash dividends equal to $100,000, or 300 per cent of dividends a year. These have been some of the dividends declared: In 1862, 27 per cent; in 1863, 100 per cent; in 1864, 100 per cent; in 1878, $6,000,000; in 1881, one of $15,000,000 and another of $4,300,000; in 1886, 25 per cent. The Western Union plant, exclusive of its contracts with railroads, could be duplicated for $35,000,000. Its present capital (1890) is $85,960,000. It has realized $100,000,000 of net profits in twenty-five years by its high charges."

Congressman RAYNER (now Senator) used this language:

"Of all the monopolies I submit that the telegraph system of this country, substantially owned and controlled by one man, is the worst and most dangerous of them all. It is no longer safe or expedient to intrust into the hands of one overpowering monopoly the telegraph business of this country. It is a power that not only can be used, but has been perverted, for purposes hostile to the best interests of the people. The markets of the country, its finances, and its commercial interests to so large an extent depend upon the honest and honorable administration of the business of this company that the people are not in a mood to repose a trust of this character any longer without competition in the hands of a stock-jobbing corporation."

Zachariah Chandler, from the Committee on Commerce, in the Senate of the United States, in 1872, said:

"The policy of the Western Union Telegraph Company from the beginning of its existence to the present time has been of a uniform character.

"It has been to ridicule, belittle, cripple, destroy, acquire, consolidate, and absorb all rival lines, until now it virtually controls the telegraph business of the whole country. The statements made in the report containing the history of this company, its unparalleled growth, and future possibilities are eloquent with meaning beyond that expressed in the words. With its network of wires covering the face of the land it holds the incalculable commercial interests of the people of this nation in its grasp as securely as the spider holds the struggling prey in the meshes of its web.

"There is no power but in Congress to grapple with this monster monopoly and afford adequate relief to the heavily taxed commercial interests of the country. Under the present telegraphic management, with its excessive rates and arbitrary restrictions, commerce has fastened upon it the most burdensome tax arising from any source, and the duty of Congress is clearly to devise and put in operation some measure whereby relief may be obtained, by unbinding the fetters and unloosening the chains by which she is now dragged helplessly bound to the victorious car of this grievous monopoly."

Senator Chandler was made of the right kind of stuff. He was one of the heroic men of Michigan who was admired for his rugged qualities of sincerity, honesty, and the courage of his convictions. What better can we, the Members from Michigan, do, who have been permitted to follow him into the halls of Congress, than to imitate his example and seek, so far as is within our power, to right the wrongs of the people.

I submit a list of the board of directors of the Western Union Telegraph Company:

Board of directors.—Thomas T. Eckert (chairman), Robert C. Clowry, John T. Terry, Russell Sage, George J. Gould, Samuel Sloan, Edwin Gould, Frank J. Gould, Jacob H. Schiff, James H. Hyde, William L. Bull, Louis Fitzgerald, J. Pierpont Morgan, Charles Lanier, Chauncey M. Depew, Henry M. Flagler, John Jacob Astor, Oliver Ames, C. Sidney Shepard, J. B. Van Every, James Stillman, Thomas F. Clark, Morris K. Jesup, E. H. Harriman, Samuel Spencer, Howard Gould, John J. Mitchell, Henry A. Bishop, Harris C. Fahnestock, Thomas H. Hubbard.

A glance at their names will be sufficient to satisfy anyone that it is not a case of dire necessity to continue to give these gentlemen the almost exclusive control of this monopoly to the great detriment and injury of millions of our people.

Every name represents some great interest. "They are among the richest, best, and most influential in the financial world." There are 12,932 registered holders of Western Union stock, but no doubt these gentlemen own and control the bulk of the stock.

The Postal Telegraph and Cable Company is only a side show—and I say it respectfully—to the main performance, to wit, the Western Union Telegraph Company, for in the main, where they have offices in the same locality, rates are identical.

A comparison of rates from Washington to points all over this broad Union shows but few slight differences in the rates charged by these two companies, leading one to believe and understand that this is not purely accidental, but that there must be some common understanding between these two great corporations, and if these conditions exist elsewhere, as they doubtless do, you will at once see that we are not enjoying any advantages by reason of competition, but we are led to the certain conclusion that these two great corporations are in collusion for the purpose of extracting from the people every dollar which they possibly can in order to add to their dividends.

The last dividend of the Western Union was 5 per cent annual, payable quarterly, on a capitalization nearly three times, if not quite, its true valuation, besides putting to the reserve fund $1,092,780.97, making a total surplus, June 30, 1905, of $15,974,209.25, equal to almost one-sixth of their present capitalization.

In the last annual report of the Western Union Company they give as the operating and general expenses, including taxes, $16,165,198.73. Who can tell how much of this was for salaries, and if you do not know, are you able to say where the information can be obtained? I have most respectfully asked for this information from the presidents of both the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies, and have been unable to receive it. Can you conceive any reason why they should decline to give this information, except that it would demonstrate that a large portion of the receipts are being used for salaries in excess of what a fair and just compensation would be, which, added to the 5 per cent annual dividend upon a capitalization of nearly three times its true value, which added to the amount that is annually put to the reserve fund, would clearly demonstrate that instead of a 5 per cent dividend they are probably receiving nearly 25 or 30 per cent? I think there should be some power lodged in the Interstate Commerce Commission so that we may be able to get reliable information upon this subject.

Why are rates higher here than in Europe? Because the companies are seeking, in the main, for dividends, while public enterprise is usually satisfied to serve the people as near at cost as is possible. The Baltimore and Ohio Company had a 10-cent rate for a long time on nineteen routes and made a profit on their business—for example, from New York to Portland, Me., and intermediate points, 10 cents; New York to Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, 10 cents; New York to Chicago, 15 cents; New York to St. Louis, 20 cents; New York to New Orleans, 50 cents; from New York to Galveston, Tex., 75 cents. The average charge on all messages was 16½ cents; and at one time the Western Union carried from New York to Bradford, between the oil exchanges, a distance of four or five hundred miles, at the rate of 10 cents a message.

I know some one is waiting to ask if the Baltimore and Ohio Company did not lose money at the rates which I have quoted. D. H. Bates, manager of the Baltimore and Ohio Telegraph Company, testified that the company made a profit in spite of its low rates, and that the Western Union succeeded in buying up the Baltimore and Ohio lines, not because they proved unprofitable, but because disaster overtook the road in other departments, and it sold its telegraph business as the most available source of realizing the funds necessary to right itself.

I am indebted to my friend Mr. S. H. Bell, formerly of the International Union Telegraph committee, for many valuable suggestions, and especially for the following information:

"At one of the meetings of the National Board of Trade, held in the city of Washington a few years ago, reference was made to a line of telegraph connecting Chicago with Milwaukee, which line had been constructed by a number of business men of the two cities. Their patience had been exhausted by the inordinate greed of the Western Union, and rather than tamely submit to a continuance of the robbery they wisely concluded that it would be much better and cheaper to build, own, and operate a line of their own. This they proceeded to do, and the results were surprising.

Among the interesting speakers on that debate was Hon. R. W. Dunham, then a Member of Congress from Illinois and one of the delegates from the Chicago Board of Trade, who said:

"My friend Mr. Pope has alluded to a telegraph line running between Chicago and Milwaukee. I happen to have had some stock in that company from its commencement to this time. I know what it has been doing. That line between Chicago and Milwaukee—85 miles—cost about $14,000. As Mr. Pope has stated, it was built upon the highway. We were refused permission to run along the railroad lines. Within two years after commencing the business there was paid back to the stockholders 90 per cent of the money they had paid in. The business had been done for 10 cents a message, or 1 cent a word. After that time the company decided to be a little more liberal with their patrons than they had been at the start. They said to their patrons that from that time on they would do their business in this way—for instance, a party sending a message to Chicago or Milwaukee, containing an order to transact business, should pay a cent a word. A party in Chicago or Milwaukee desiring to telegraph simply the market to a friend at the other end of the line, that business could be done for 5 cents a message. We went further than that. At the end of each month we figured up the cost of doing the business, deducted 7 per cent per annum for the stockholders, and then paid all the balance back to the patrons. In my own business over the lines—and the same has been true of others—I have had as high as 40 per cent back at the end of the month after having paid only 5 cents a message. [Applause.] Business went on in that way for about two years. Then the stockholders concluded that as something might happen sometime in the way of unusual expense they would water the stock [laughter], and we doubled our stock, from $14,000 to $28,000. Still the result is about the same. From 25 to 40 per cent is still paid back on the 5 cents a message paid by the patrons, and we are getting our 14 per cent on nothing." [Applause.]

Mr. Bell says:

"A more convincing exhibit of the value of the telegraph as a money-maker can not very readily be produced. If a little line of only 85 miles, established by a few disgusted business men, mainly for their own convenience, has been able to show such surprising results, what may not reasonably be anticipated when we have a governmental system connecting every post-office in the land? With the above statement before us, it is not very much to be wondered at that the Western Union octopus in one year declared dividends which reached the astounding figures of 414 per cent. How much longer will the people of this country submit to such high-handed and barefaced robbery in connection with a business which is in every way as much of a public function as the transmission of letters, newspapers, and parcels, so satisfactorily and cheaply performed by the post-office?"

I do not believe any valid excuse can be given why there should not be a uniformity of rates in this country, as in Australia and in other countries. The claim is made by the telegraph companies that the country is divided into squares of 50 miles each, and in this respect that the rates are uniform; but this is not true, for I can telegraph by either the Western Union or the Postal Telegraph to Saginaw or Bay City, respectively, 60 and 70 miles beyond my home city, Pontiac, Mich., for 40 cents, while it costs 50 cents by either of these companies from Washington to Pontiac, and I assume this condition exists in many other portions of the country.

While I am a sincere believer in the Government ownership of the telegraph, I have introduced a bill for limited postal telegraph; but I am not a stickler for this particular legislation. I earnestly feel that we ought to have a reduction of telegraph rates, and believing that we can sooner and best accomplish these results in behalf of the people, I have introduced a bill which will avoid many complications which might longer delay this much-needed reform if we were to insist upon getting this relief only through the medium of Government ownership.

Here are a few of the leading objections: "A public telegraph will paternalize the Government," "It will put the Government into the field of private enterprise," "It is not the Government's business," "It is out of the Government's sphere," "The increase of patronage will be dangerous," "The Government could not be sued," "The secrecy of messages will be violated," "It will injure innocent purchasers" (for example, like the present officers of the Western Union). To all of these most satisfactory answers can be given, if time permitted. Here is perhaps the most serious objection: "It will cost too much." It need not cost the people one dollar of taxes to establish the postal telegraph. Capital has been ready to build the lines for the Government, introduce low rates, and agree to turn the plant over to the nation for actual value at the end of a period of years to be agreed upon, or allow the service to pay for the plant gradually. In this way the people will have a clear title in a few years, even at rates much lower than those now in force.

Here is still one further objection that has been often urged: "The postal telegraph may be all right in Europe, but not in America. We don't want to imitate the monarchial system and institutions of the Old World."

I hope the time has gone by when such silly and foolish objections will have any weight with our people. Let us seek for the best whenever and wherever we can find it, always bearing in mind that what is for the public good should be the supreme law.

The Western Union and the Postal Telegraph will be found to be the only visible opponents in this effort to secure for the people their just rights.

It is an undeniable fact that the present telegraph companies are honeycombed with rust and inefficiency, loaded with immense amounts of watered stock, and hampered by the most stupid exhibitions of nonprogressiveness to be seen in this enlightened age. It is literally true that in this electrical age, in this electrical country, telegraphy is the only thing touched by electricity that is still in the ox-cart condition.

"Telegraphy is still pounding along with hand labor, very much as Morse devised it nearly seventy-five years ago. It can never be cheap or fast until machinery is used to prepare the messages and to hurl them at higher speed over the wires."

I have no hesitancy in saying that, notwithstanding for many years over the doors of the telegraph companies has been written the legend, "No inventors or scientific men wanted," inventive genius has perfected, tried, and approved machines for telegraphing, which, if put into use, would revolutionize present conditions, and the fact that these modern inventions are not utilized by the telegraph companies is evidence to me that if they were used it would be apparent to all that telegraphy could be greatly cheapened.

It is sixty-two years since lightning was harnessed to language and literature, yet we are still practically in the hands of Russel Sage, the Goulds, and John T. Terry, for I have recently received from a most reliable source the information that the stock of the Western Union is almost wholly in the possession or control of these people.

I repeat, in substance, what I said in part in connection with the rate bill. It is my judgment that the people will never come into the full possession of all their rights and privileges until the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of our Government, both in the nation and State, shall be denied the right to use free passes and free transportation upon the railroads and telegraph and express franks, and I have felt that it would be bettter if these privileges were denied to all who are in either the national or State service in whatever capacity.

Here are a few of the papers, representing every phase of political opinion, that have advocated the measure: Chicago Tribune, New York Herald, Washington Post, Boston Globe, Washington Star, Omaha Bee, Denver Republican, Cincinnati Enquirer, Atlanta Constitution, Buffalo Express, Galveston News, Harper's Weekly, New Haven Journal and Courier, New Haven Palladium, New Haven News, Hartford Times, Vicksburg Herald, Memphis Appeal, St. Paul Pioneer-Press, New York Evening Post, Reading Times, Mobile Register, New York Star, Boston Traveller, Boston Journal, Rome Sentinel, Detroit Free Press, Salt Lake Tribune, Wheeling Register, Springfield Republican, Trenton Times, Denver News, Sacramento Record-Union, San Francisco Examiner, Albany Express, Philadelphia Press, New Bedford Mercury, Erie Dispatch, Waterbury American, Rochester Herald, San Francisco Post, Adrian Times, New Orleans Times-Democrat, Pittsburg Dispatch, Richmond Dispatch, Macon Telegraph, and many more.

I appeal to the press throughout the land, to the national, State, and local; commercial, manufacturing, agricultural, and labor associations, and to all the people to use their influence and best efforts to encourage and help this movement to the end that we may have cheaper rates of telegraph, and if this question is not adjusted in the meantime—and I trust it may be—I hope the Republican, Democratic, and all other political parties will write a plank in their next national platform demanding that the Government adjust this matter in some satisfactory way to accomplish this purpose.

No one, however humble or distinguished, should fail to unite his efforts with those of President Grant, Senators Clay, Sumner, Hamlin, Edmunds, Dawes, Chandler, Ramsey, Hill, Sherman, and Platt; Representatives Palmer, C. C. Washburn, Butler, E. B. Washburn; Postmasters-General Johnson, Randall, Maynard, Howe, Cresswell, and Wanamaker; Professor Morse, the inventor of the telegraph; Cyrus W. Field, the founder of the Atlantic cable; James Gordon Bennett; Professors Parsons and Ely; Lyman Abbott, Judge Clark, B. O. Flower, T. V. Powderly, Samuel Gompers, and a host of other eminent men in every walk of life who have championed the cause of the people.

It was the late lamented Senator Platt who used this language, "The telegraph is the rich man's mail."

Let us hasten to give to the people, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, in all the walks of life a blessing commensurate and coextensive with that which was given to the farmers of the nation by the free delivery of the mails, the greatest boon that has come to them since the birth of the Republic.

I hope I have said something to enlist every lover of mankind, justice, and fair play for lower telegraph rates. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I have a very good speech prepared for this occasion, but there is another one prepared by my good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RHODES], and so I am going to yield to him twenty-five minutes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House not that I have anything new to offer, either on the pending bill, or on any of the many interesting subjects that have occupied the attention of Congress thus far during the session; but I desire to call the attention of the House in a general way to a very old subject, one which is not only older than the Republic itself, but which is a well-defined and well-fixed policy of government, viz, to the subject of pension legislation. Particularly I desire to call the attention of the House to a bill in which many of the citizens of my State are interested, and in which the entire Missouri delegation in Congress is interested. This bill was introduced early in the session and has not yet been reported. It seeks to extend the provisions of the pension act of June 27, 1890, to certain militia organizations of the State of Missouri actually engaged in the military service of the United States under command of Regular Army officers of the military Department of the West, or the Department of the Missouri, in the suppression of the war of the rebellion. These organizations having been called into the service of the United States by virtue of a special agreement entered into between Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, and Governor Gamble, of the State of Missouri, made necessary by certain local conditions existing in Missouri at that time, were not technically mustered into the United States service. These organizations are known in the official war records, or rebellion records, as militia of Missouri, and of this militia force there were several different organizations. These war records were compiled and published in 1902, under the direction of Hon. Elihu Root, Secretary of War, and are unquestionably authentic. It shall be my purpose in this discussion to show that these militia forces provided for in this bill were under command of regular United States Army officers, that their services were accepted by the United States, that they rendered substantial service to the United States in suppressing the rebellion as a part of the great Union Army. However, before entering into a discussion of the subject proper, I desire to address myself briefly to the history of pension legislation in the United States relating to the militia soldier. I wish to do this because I shall be able to show we are committed to a policy favoring liberal pensions to our loyal soldiers, which is so old that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary. I wish to show also our Government is committed to a policy which has recognized by general law the service of the militia soldier of every war through which our country has ever gone, except the war of the rebellion, and if I can but arrest the attention of Congress long enough to be heard on this question, I feel sure it will be decided the militia soldier of the great civil war should be no exception to the well-fixed rule.

Doctor Glasson, in his work on Military Pension Legislation, defines a military pension to be "A regular allowance made by a government to one who has been in its military service, or to his widow or dependent relatives." It occurs to me this definition is so comprehensive that no further proof ought to be required of the soldier claiming the right to participate in the benefits of pension laws than to prove he was in the military service of the United States. Since the Government has the right to demand the service of its citizen in time of war, it is but proper that the soldier be cared for by the Government in old age or in adversity. I believe the paying of a pension not only to be a proper act of gratuity, which the world concedes to be right, but the discharge of an equitable obligation. Pensions in our country by various acts of Congress have been classified as "invalid pensions" and "service pensions."

An invalid pension is one granted the soldier on account of wounds or injury received or disease contracted in the military service. A service pension is one granted the soldier who has been in the service a specified length of time, without regard to the question whether he has incurred injury or disability in the service. Our country at various times has granted both invalid and service pensions to its loyal soldiers. The act of June 27, 1890, partakes of both the invalid and service pension features. I say the policy of our Governemnt to grant liberal pensions to its loyal soldiers is older than the Republic. The first national pension law written upon the statute books in the United States was enacted August 26, 1776. This law was consistent with the colonial system of pension legislation which had been practiced in the New World for more than a century. It provided half pay for life or during disability to every officer, soldier, or sailor who lost a limb in any engagement, or being so disabled in the service of the United States as to render him incapable of earning a livelihood. The first colonial pension law was enacted by the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth, in 1636, and was the first pension law enacted in America. Its provisions were very similar to the provisions of the act last mentioned, and contained these words: "Every man who shall be sent forth as a soldier and returned maimed shall be maintained competently during his life." You will observe the right of the government to demand the service of its citizen in time of war is clearly set out in this language, as well as the duty of the government to maintain its dependent loyal soldier. Washington was a strong advocate of pensions and advocated a policy so broad and liberal as to bring within its provisions all regulars, volunteers, and militia forces. The only requirement being that the soldier must have fought against the common enemy in defense of his country.

Formerly pension laws were more liberal than now. March 23, 1792, a law was enacted providing that judges of courts of record—State, Territorial, and Federal—were authorized to take testimony supporting the claim of a soldier for pension. The judge thus taking the testimony was then required to transmit the same to the Secretary of War, whose duty it was to enter the name of the applicant upon the pension rolls if found worthy. The effect of this law caused much friction between the legislative and judicial branches of the Government.

John Jay, then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, in passing upon an application for a writ of mandamus relating to a certain claim for pension under the act of 1792, in refusing the writ, declared, with great boldness, the independence of the judiciary as a distinct and coordinate branch of Government. Congress soon repealed this act and created other methods by which proof was to be made.

April 10, 1806, Congress enacted its first general and most liberal invalid-pension law. This act provided pension for all volunteers, State troops, and militia forces who served against the common enemy in the Revolutionary war. To this act I invite your special attention for two particular reasons: First, it provided specifically a pensionable status for the militia soldier, and established the precedent for recognizing his services along with other loyal soldiers. In the second place, the result of this act was that regulations were established for the first time in the history of our country providing that an increase of pension might be granted by Congress in cases where justice demanded—in other words, that Congress might grant special pension bills—and, I am advised, this practice has been followed even down to the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The important point I wish to make in this connection is, the militia soldier of the Revolutionary war was placed upon the same plane with the volunteer and the regular and with them given a pensionable status. By act of Congress approved April 24, 1816, Congress enacted an invalid-pension law providing pensions for the militia soldiers who served in the United States Army in the war of 1812.

Many acts were passed recognizing the militiaman, and by general law approved February 13, 1871, which was a service-pension act, the militia soldier of the war of 1812 was given a pensionable status. This act contained the following provision: "All surviving officers and enlisted and drafted men, including militia and volunteers, who served sixty days in the United States service in the second war with Great Britain" (war of 1812) were given a pensionable status. By act of March 9, 1878, the act of February 13, 1871, was amended by reducing the minimum service from sixty to fourteen days, but in other respects was left as in the original act—that is to say, a militiaman who fought in the war of 1812 against the common enemy for fourteen days was given a pensionable status. By act of Congress approved January 29, 1887, a pensionable status was granted the militia soldier of the war with Mexico, and contains the following provision: "All surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia, and volunteers, who served sixty days in the Army or Navy of the United States in the war with Mexico shall be entitled to pensions."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have cited a few of the many instances which show the militia soldier of every war through which our country has ever gone, except the great civil war, has been recognized and given a pensionable status. The period of time, however, from the close of each war to the date of the various acts having varied from twenty-three to fifty-six years.

One hundred and six years ago on the 12th day of last month Congress passed the first specific act placing the militia soldier upon the same basis with the volunteer and the regular. I believe in the philosophy of cycles and epicycles, and therefore am of the opinion the one hundredth anniversary of this act is the proper cycle in which this part of American history should repeat itself.

From the close of the Revolutionary war to the enactment of the first general militia pension law was twenty-three years. From the close of the war of 1812 to the enactment of the first general law which gave a pensionable status to the militia soldier of this war was fifty-six years, and from the close of the Mexican war to the enactment of the general law giving a pensionable status to the militia soldier of this war was thirty-nine years. It has now been forty-one years since the gallant Lee surrendered himself and what remained of his once proud army, on the 9th day of April, 1865, at Appomattox Court House, to the invincible Grant.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, thirty-nine years is the mean average time between the close of our various wars, except the civil war, and the date when the Congress of the United States has, by legislative act, recognized the loyal militia soldier and given him a pensionable status with the regular and the volunteer. According to the figures just submitted, which can not lie, we have passed the average time by more than two years, and I hope we are not longer to defer this matter of simple justice. Has not the time fully come when we should recognize the service of the militiaman of the civil war? There are no good reasons why we should longer wait. To the many great and beneficent acts of the United States thus far achieved in the early part of the present century let us add the recognition of our worthy loyal militia soldiers. The time must surely come when this will be done.

But, Mr. Chairman, I must take no more of your time in this general discussion, and now ask permission to read the bill. Omitting the caption, the provisions of the bill are as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890, be, and are hereby, extended to include the officers and enlisted men of the Enrolled Missouri Militia organized under General Orders, No. 19, issued by Brig. Gen. John M. Schofield, of the United States Army, dated July 22, 1862; the six months' militia, organized under proclamation of August 24, 1861, issued by Governor Gamble, of the State of Missouri; the Provisional Enrolled Militia, organized under General Orders, No. 107, issued by General Rosecrans, of the United States Army, dated June 28, 1864; the Missouri Militia, organized under General Orders, No. 3, dated January 30, 1865, and each and every other company and militia organization, by whatsoever name known, organized for the defense of the Union in the State of Missouri during the war of the rebellion and cooperating with the military or naval forces of the United States in suppressing the war of the rebellion, who served ninety days or more in any of said military organizations in said war and were honorably discharged therefrom, or relieved from duty by orders of a military officer of the United States, or by legislative act of the State of Missouri, and that such certificate of discharge from said service from either the authority of the State of Missouri or the United States authority shall be conclusive evidence of such service, and to the widows and minor children of such persons: Provided, That no person, his widow, or minor children shall be entitled to benefits of said act unless the company or organization in which he served was organized under the orders of some commanding officer of the United States Army or served under the authority of an officer of the United States, or cooperated with the United States forces, or was paid or maintained by or performed service for the United States during his service in said militia, or was paid by or maintained by the State of Missouri, and such State reimbursed for same by the United States Government.

You will observe the bill seeks to extend the provisions of the pension act of June 27, 1890, to the Enrolled Missouri Militia and other military organizations of the State of Missouri actually engaged in the military service of the United States in the suppression of the rebellion whose services were accepted by the military Department of the West or the Department of the Missouri, as was done in the case of the Missouri Home Guards by act of Congress approved March 25, 1862, which extended the provisions of existing pension laws by providing pay, bounty, and pensions for them.

It should be remembered in this connection the act of March 25, 1862, extended the then existing pension laws to the Missouri Home Guards, who were not mustered into the United States service, and, of course, did not and could not have discharges from the United States service. This bill, I say, seeks to extend the provisions of the pension act of June 27, 1890, to the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and other military organizations of the State of Missouri, not only as was done in the case of the Missouri Home Guards by act of March 25, 1862, but as was also done in the case of the Missouri State Militia and the Provisional Missouri Militia by act of February 15, 1895.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in these acts, which were special acts, the provisions of all existing pension laws of the United States to-day have been extended to the Missouri Home Guards, the Missouri State Militia, and the Provisional Missouri Militia, but the provisions of existing laws have not been extended to the Enrolled Missouri Militia and the other organizations named in this bill. The truth is, however, the Enrolled Missouri Militia and the other organizations provided for in my bill, rendered the same substantial service to the Federal Government in suppressing the rebellion as did the Missouri Home Guards, the Missouri State Militia, and the Provisional Missouri Militia, and not one good reason exists why the pension laws should not be extended to include them. In other words, they stood absolutely upon the same plane with these organizations, and to them we ask that the act of June 27, 1890, be extended. When I say they stood upon the same plane, I mean they were called into the United States service by virtue of the same agreement entered into between Abraham Lincoln, President of the United States, and Governor Gamble, of Missouri, and rendered the same substantial service, under command of regular United States Army officers, and were subject to the same military orders emanating from the War Department of the United States.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, in all seriousness, I have studied this question earnestly and diligently for a year. I have waded patiently through those voluminous war records, and I must say it takes patience to do so, because there are 130 large volumes of them, and through various acts of Congress touching upon the subject, and I am fully convinced the time has come when the services of these soldiers should be recognized. First let me call your attention to the agreement entered into between President Lincoln and Governor Gamble, and some of the reasons which made it necessary. To begin with, Missouri did not occupy the same position with respect to the Federal Government as did most of the other States of the Union, because Missouri was the very border land between the North and the South, and party lines were so tensely drawn every citizen of the State either allied himself with the North or with the South, or fled the country. It will be remembered the southern boundary line of Missouri is not only a geographical line which separates Missouri from Arkansas, but is a line which was of historic consequence for more than a quarter of a century prior to the great civil war, and is recognized by historians as one of the pivotal points on which the peace of the nation rested for forty years.

The President realizing the necessity for holding Missouri in the Union (the reasons for which are unnecessary to state) was prompted to deviate from the well-fixed rules of military law and practice in dealing with the Missouri situation. President Lincoln, as Commander in Chief of the Army of the United States, had a right to make such executive orders affecting the Army as the exigencies required. I now submit a copy of this agreement entered into between President Lincoln and Governor Gamble, of Missouri, which is recorded in volume 1, series 3, pages 618–619, inclusive, of the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, November 5, 1861.

The governor of the State of Missouri, acting under the direction of the convention of that State, proposes to the Government of the United States that he will raise a militia force to serve within the State as State militia during the war there, to cooperate with the troops in the service of the United States in repelling the invasion of the State and suppressing rebellion therein, the said State militia to be embodied and to be held in the camp and in the field, drilled, disciplined, and governed according to the Army Regulations and subject to the Articles of War; the said State militia not to be ordered out of the State, except for the immediate defense of the State of Missouri, but to cooperate with the troops in the service of the United States in military operations within the State or necessary to its defense, and when officers of the State militia act with officers in the service of the United States of the same grade the officers of the United States service shall command the combined force; the State militia to be armed, equipped, clothed, subsisted, transported, and paid by the United States during such time as they shall be actually engaged as an embodied military force in service, in accordance with regulations of the United States Army or general orders as issued from time to time. In order that the Treasury of the United States may not be burdened with the pay of unnecessary officers, the governor proposes that although the State law requires him to appoint upon the general staff an adjutant-general, a commissary-general, an inspector-general, a quartermaster-general, a paymaster-general, and a surgeon-general, each with the rank of colonel of cavalry, yet he proposes that the Government of the United States pay only the adjutant-general, the quartermaster-general, and inspector-general, their services being necessary in the relation which would exist between the State militia and the United States. The governor further proposes that while he is allowed by the State law to appoint aids-de-camp to the governor at his discretion, with the rank of colonel, three only shall be reported to the United States for payment.

He also proposes that the State militia shall be commanded by a single major-general and by such number of brigadier-generals as shall allow one for a brigade of not less than four regiments, and that no greater number of staff officers shall be appointed for regimental, brigade, and division duties than as provided for in the act of Congress of the 22d of July, 1861, and that whatever be the rank of such officers, as fixed by the law of the State, the compensation that they shall receive from the United States shall only be that which belongs to the rank given by said act of Congress to officers in the United States service performing the same duties. The field officers of a regiment in the State militia are one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and one major, and the company officers are a captain, a first lieutenant, and a second lieutenant.

The governor proposes that, as the money to be disbursed is the money of the United States, such staff officers in the services of the United States as may be necessary to act as disbursing officers of the State militia shall be assigned by the War Department for that duty; or, if such can not be spared from their present duty, he will appoint such persons disbursing officers for the State militia as the President of the United States may designate. Such regulations as may be required, in the judgment of the President, to insure regularity of returns and to protect the United States from any fraudulent practices shall be observed and obeyed by all in office in the State militia.

The above propositions are accepted on the part of the United States, and the Secretary of War is directed to make the necessary orders upon the Ordnance, Quartermaster, Commissary, Pay, and Medical departments to carry this agreement into effect. He will cause the necessary staff officers in the United States service to be detailed for duty in connection with the Missouri State Militia, and will order them to make the necessary provisions in their respective offices for fulfilling their agreement. All requisitions upon different officers of the United States, under this agreement, to be made in substance in the same mode of the Missouri State Militia as similar requisitions are made for troops in the service of the United States; and the Secretary of War will cause any additional regulations that may be necessary to insure regularity and economy in carrying this agreement into effect to be adopted and communicated to the governor of Missouri for the government of the Missouri State Militia.

[Indorsement.]

NOVEMBER 6, 1861.

This plan approved with the modification that the governor stipulates that when he commissions a major-general of militia it shall be the same person at the time in command of the United States Department of the West; and in case the United States shall change such commander of the department, he (the governor) will revoke the State commission given to the person relieved and give one to the person substituted to the United States command of said department.

A. LINCOLN.

As a result of this agreement General Orders, No. 96, was issued by the War Department of the United States, which legalized the agreement so far as the Federal Government was concerned and reduced it to the form of military law, by which these forces were to be enrolled, armed, equipped, and governed. General Orders, No. 96, is of record in series 1, volume 3, pages 565–566, inclusive, Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies. The order reads as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, November 7, 1861.

General Orders, No. 96.]

Authority to raise a force of State militia to serve during the war is granted, by direction of the President, to the governor of Missouri. This force is to cooperate with the troops in the service of the United States in repelling the invasion of the State of Missouri and in supressing rebellion therein. It is to be held in camp and in the field, drilled, disciplined, and governed, according to the regulations of the United States Army, and subject to the Articles of War. But it is not to be ordered out of the State of Missouri except for the immediate defense of the said State. The State forces thus authorized will be, during such time as they shall be actually engaged as an embodied military force in active service, armed, equipped, clothed, subsisted, transported, and paid by the United States, in accordance with the regulations of the United States Army and such orders as may from time to time be issued from the War Department, and in no other manner; and they shall be considered as disbanded from the service of the United States whenever the President may so direct.

In connection with this force the governor is authorized to appoint the following officers, who will be recognized and paid by the United States, to wit: One major-general, to command the whole of the State forces brought into service, who shall be the same person appointed by the President to command the United States Military Department of the West, and shall retain his commission as major-general of the State forces only during his command of said department; one adjutant-general, one inspector-general, and one quartermaster-general, each with the rank and pay of a colonel of cavalry; three aides-de-camp to the governor, each with the rank and pay of a colonel of infantry; brigadier-generals at the rate of one to a brigade of not less than four regiments; and division, brigade, and regimental staff officers not to exceed in numbers those provided for in the organization prescribed by the act approved July 22, 1861, "for the employment of volunteers," nor to be more highly compensated by the United States, whatever their normal rank in the State service, than officers performing the same duties under that act.

The field officers of a regiment to be one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, and one major; and the officers of the company to be one captain, one first, and one second lieutenant. When officers of the said State forces shall act in conjunction with officers of the United States Army of the same grade the latter shall command the combined force. All disbursements of money made to these troops, or in consequence of their employment by the United States, shall be made by disbursing officers of the United States Army, assigned by the War Department or especially appointed by the President for that purpose, who will make their requisitions upon the different supply departments in the same manner for the Missouri State forces as similar requisitions are made for other volunteer troops in the service of the United States. The Secretary of War will cause any additional regulations that may be necessary for the purpose of promoting economy, insuring regularity of returns, and protecting the United States from fraudulent practices to be adopted and published for the government of the said State forces, and the same will be obeyed and observed by all in office under the authority of the State of Missouri.

By order:

JULIUS P. GARESCHE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

November 25, 1861, General Orders, No. 1, was issued by the governor of the State of Missouri, in which he published the agreement entered into between the State and the United States authorities, thus giving official sanction to the agreement on the part of the State of Missouri. The order reads as follows:

General Orders, No. 1.] HDQRS. MISSOURI STATE MILITIA,
St. Louis, November 25, 1861.

This arrangement has been made in order to secure to the troops raised for the purpose of suppressing insurrection in and repelling invasion of the State of Missouri the same compensation as that received by the United States Volunteers. To the end that the State militia may be placed as nearly as possible upon the same footing with the United States Volunteers, the organization will be made the same, as follows, viz: Each regiment shall have one colonel, one lieutenant-colonel, one major, one adjutant (a lieutenant), one quartermaster (a lieutenant), one surgeon, and one assistant surgeon, one sergeant-major, one quartermaster-surgeon, one commissary-sergeant, and two principal musicians, and shall be composed of ten companies, each company to consist of one captain, one first lieutenant, one second lieutenant, one first sergeant, four sergeants, eight corporals, two musicians, one wagoner, and from sixty-four to eighty-two privates. This force to be organized into brigades of not less than four regiments each; each brigade to have one brigadier-general, two aides-de-camp, one assistant adjutant-general, with the rank of captain; one surgeon, one assistant quartermaster, and one commissary of subsistence (captains). The company officers are to be elected by their respective companies, and the field and staff officers appointed by the governor. The troops already organized under the call of the executive of the State can have the benefits of the arrangement made with the Government of the United States by increasing the numbers in the companies and regiments to the requirements of the arrangement and being mustered into service for the war according to its terms, their officers having the rank they now hold.

Maj. Gen. Henry W. Halleck, of the United States Army, has been appointed and commissioned major-general of the Missouri State Militia.

H. R. GAMBLE,
Governor of Missouri.

The next step in carrying out the agreement was the appointment by the governor of Missouri of a brigadier-general of the Missouri State Militia, which he did within two days, viz, November 27, 1861, by appointing Brig. Gen. John M. Schofield, of the United States Army, who at once assumed command of all the militia of the State by virtue of the following order:

General Orders, No. 1.] HDQRS. MISSOURI STATE MILITIA,
St. Louis, November 27, 1861.

Brig. Gen. John M. Schofield, of the United States Volunteers, having been appointed and commissioned brigadier-general of the Missouri State Militia, is hereby placed in command of all the militia of the State.

H. W. HALLECK,
Major-General Missouri State Militia.

You will observe this order was from Major-General Halleck to General Schofield. The next general order is as follows:

General Orders, No. 1.] HDQRS. MISSOURI STATE MILITIA,
St. Louis, November 29, 1861.

In compliance with orders from Major-General Halleck, of the Missouri State Militia, dated St. Louis, November 27, 1861, I hereby assume command of all the militia of the State.

JOHN M. SCHOFIELD,
Brigadier-General Missouri State Militia.

(Ibid.)

This was the final step under which all the loyal militia of the State were placed under the control of General Schofield, thus bringing them practically in the United States service. I should not only say bringing them de facto in the United States service, but brought them de jure in the United States service, and were so continued under General Schofield until he was relieved by General Rosecrans January 30, 1864. Immediately on General Rosecrans assuming command of the Department of the Missouri, Governor Gamble issued General Orders, No. 4, dated February 2, 1864, which placed all the militia of the State under him, who continued in command of the militia of the State until relieved by Major-General Dodge December 9, 1864. See page 76, Senate document 412. The term of service of the various militia organizations of the State having expired in the early part of 1865, and General Dodge having succeeded General Rosecrans, and Governor Fletcher having been inaugurated governor of Missouri to succeed Governor Gamble, it was found necessary to revive the old agreement that was made in 1861 between President Lincoln and Governor Gamble, which was done by General Orders, No. 3, dated January 30, 1865, and General Orders, No. 28, dated February 1, 1865, which I shall not take the time to read, as I shall again refer to them. Suffice it to say, these orders were based upon an agreement entered into between Abraham Lincoln and General Dodge, of the United States Army, on the one hand, and Governor Fletcher on the other, and was in substance the same as the agreement between Governor Gamble and Lincoln in 1861, and based absolutely upon the same conditions. It occurs to me that no further proof should be required to establish the fact that these forces were in the United States service than to show they actually fought against the common enemy.

July 22, 1862, General Schofield issued General Orders, No. 19, which brought into existence the Enrolled Missouri Militia. This force remained in active service and subject to duty until March 12, 1865, thus serving two years and eight months, and many of them furnishing their own horses and horse equipment. It is now forty-one years since the close of the great civil war, and these gallant Missouri soldiers have not even been recognized as having been in the United States service, much less paid for the loss of a horse or for the value of the services of their horses. No, Congress has not taken the time to look into this matter since the act of March 25, 1862, which created the Hawkins Taylor Commission, whose business it was to audit the claims and fix the status of the Home Guards of 1861. I have just referred to the fact that the Enrolled Missouri Militia was called into service July 22, 1862, and served until March 12, 1865.

It will be remembered they were placed at once under command of General Schofield, as is shown in paragraphs 5 and 9 of General Order No. 19, which are as follows:

Paragraph 5: The militia thus organized (the Enrolled Missouri Militia) will be governed by the Articles of War and Army Regulations, and will be subject to do duty under orders of commanding officers of the posts where enrolled, or such other officers of the United States troops or Missouri Militia regularly mustered into service as may be assigned to their command.

Paragraph 9: The same strict discipline and obedience to orders will be enforced among the militia in service under this order as among other troops, and commanding officers will be held strictly responsible for all unauthorized acts of the men.

I have only quoted two paragraphs of this order, because it is quite long. Subsequent orders were issued from time to time by General Schofield and his successors relating to the organization, equipment, and discipline of the Enrolled Missouri Militia. For example, General Order No. 4, dated January 9, 1863, and issued by General Curtis, reads as follows:

Pursuant to authority of the Secretary of War, the Enrolled Missouri Militia will be entitled to draw forage and subsistence, and to be furnished transportation, when in actual service, upon requisitions properly approved by the United States officer commanding the district in which they may be serving. But such militia will in no case be considered in actual service except when called out by the governor of the State or a commander of a district, and only while they are retained in service by such commander.

By command of Major-General Curtis:

H. Z. CURTIS,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

This order shows that the Enrolled Missouri Militia was provided forage, subsistence, and transportation when in actual service by the United States, and of course means they were preparing the entire force for the United States service. I now wish to submit a copy of the order which shows these forces were armed and equipped by the United States. I shall only recite paragraph 1 of General Order No. 47, as this is also quite long:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI MILITIA,
June 7, 1863.

Authority having been given by the War Department to furnish clothing, camp and garrison equipage, and medical supplies to the Enrolled Missouri Militia in continuous active service under the command of the commanding-general of the department, requisitions will be made in due form by the proper officers for such of the above-named supplies as are required by the eight provisional regiments now in service.

By way of explanation, I wish to call attention to the provisional regiments which were in active service at this time. These provisional regiments were of the same class of militia as were the Enrolled Missouri Militia, the only difference being they were put into active service earlier than the other companies and regiments. I have just quoted Mr. Root in his comment on this subject on page 85, Senate Document 412. I should also say Congress opened its heart in 1873, and gave a pensionable status to these provisional regiments, and again by act of February 15, 1895, as I said before, extended to them the provisions of the act of June 27, 1890.

Secretary Root, in response to a request by the United States Senate, made a compilation of the various military organizations of the State of Missouri. This document is known as "Senate Document No. 412," dated June 16, 1902, and in it Mr. Root states the provisional regiments were simply detailed from the regiments of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and their military status was precisely the same as the original force. He says further on page 85:

They were Missouri militia, organized under the militia law of the State for State service, were paid by the State, and while on duty, under command of United States officers, were clothed and subsisted by the United States. Like the original force, they served in defense of the State of Missouri and incidentally in the defense of the United States.

Secretary Root might well have said in this connection, while these militia forces were paid by the State of Missouri, the State was reimbursed by the United States Government for the money thus expended by act of April 17, 1866, which is further recognition by the Federal Government that they were in the military service of the United States. But I promised to submit proof showing these forces were at least de facto in the United States service and so recognized by President Lincoln and by General Schofield and his successors. In a letter written by President Lincoln at the Executive Mansion, October 5, 1863, to Charles Drake et al., of Missouri, in a reply to a demand for the removal of General Schofield as commander of the Department of the West, or the Department of the Missouri, and the disbanding of the Enrolled Missouri Militia. Among other things, the President said:

As to the Enrolled Missouri Militia, I shall endeavor to ascertain better than I now know what is its exact value. Let me say, however, that your proposal to substitute national force for the enrolled militia implies, in your judgment, the latter is doing something which needs to be done; and if so, the proposition to throw that force away and to supply the place by bringing other forces from the field where they are equally needed seems to be very extraordinary. Whence shall they come? Shall they be withdrawn from Grant, or Banks, or Steel, or Rosecrans? Few things have been so gratifying to my anxious feelings as when in June last the local force in Missouri aided General Schofield to so promptly send so large a general force to the relief of General Grant, then investing Vicksburg and menaced from without by General Johnston. Was this all wrong? Should the enrolled militia then have been broken up and General Herron detached from Grant to police Missouri? So far from finding cause to object, I confess to a sympathy for whatever relieves our general force in Missouri and allows it to serve elsewhere. I therefore, as at present advised, can not attempt the destruction of the enrolled militia in Missouri. I may add that, the force being under the national military control, it is also within the proclamation in regard to the habeas corpus.

A. LINCOLN.

You will observe President Lincoln, the great emancipator of human souls, states, over his own signature, the enrolled militia of Missouri was under the national military control and within the proclamation suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in cases of persons belonging to the land and naval forces of the United States. In other words, the President proclaimed these forces in the United States service; and I here wish to submit the official order in which it was held the proclamation of September 15, 1863, the proclamation to which I have just referred, issued by the President, applied to all Missouri militia:

General Orders, No. 96.] HDQRS. DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
St. Louis, September 17, 1863.

The proclamation of the President, dated Washington, September 15, 1863, suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus in the cases of persons belonging to the land and naval forces of the United States, and other persons therein described, will be held to apply to all Missouri militia called into active service under the orders of the department commander. By command of Major-General Schofield.

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Mr. Chairman, this letter from President Lincoln and the official promulgation of the proclamation of September 15, 1863, in my humble judgment brings these militia forces legally into the United States service for all purposes, and ought, forever and forever, settle this question. I say this recognition of the services of these men brings them into the service of the United States as much so as had they been formally mustered in, mustered out, and discharged from the United States service. In truth and in fact, by virtue of the agreement to which I have referred, the proclamation of the President and the fact that they fought under command of United States Army officers against the common enemy, they were in the United States service, and all decisions and rulings of the War Department and the Pension Office to the contrary notwithstanding do not and can not affect their equitable rights. This Congress, or rather the committee before which this bill is now pending, may fail to take cognizance of these official acts, but I am going on record now by making this prophecy, viz: A time will come in the near future when this proclamation of President Lincoln will be declared the law affecting the rights of these loyal soldiers for pensionable purposes. I feel nothing more ought to be said so far as the law and the equity of the case is concerned. What are the facts? These forces served two years and eight months in the United States Army. How did they serve? Were they kept in holiday attire at the expense of the nation, and on exhibition, as are the United States forces of to-day? No; they went through the heat of summer, the cold of winter; endured the hardships and privations of that awful war, many of them furnishing their own horses and horse equipment free of cost to the Government; faced shot and shell at the hands of rebels, guerrillas, and bushwhackers as a part of the great Union Army, to which our party, Mr. Chairman, has stood pledged for a quarter of a century, and stands pledged to-day, for just and liberal pensions to the Union soldiers of the civil war.

But where shall I go to produce substantial evidence that these men were in the United States service and that they actually rendered substantial service to the cause of the Union in the suppression of the rebellion? Can I go to the Army rolls in the War Department for this information? No; not there, because, technically speaking, these forces were not mustered into the service and their names are not written there. But, Mr. Chairman, there is a place to which I can go, and it is to what is known as the "Official Rebellion Records of the Union and Confederate Armies."

These militia forces were actively brought into service in 1863, when General Shelby invaded Missouri. They successfully resisted the advance of Shelby toward Springfield, and Britton says after fighting more than twenty skirmishes, or small battles, Shelby withdrew from southwest Missouri, having only captured 180 of the militia at Neosho and a small force of militia at Lamine and Warsaw. This fighting was all with militia. Captain McAfee, reporting the battle of Neosho, stated he surrendered his militia upon the condition that they were to be treated as prisoners of war, and after they had been paroled by General Shelby two of the Enrolled Missouri Militia were killed by General Coffee's men, one of them being Lieut. Elijah Waters. In fact, these militia forces fought in every engagement during the year 1863. In the early part of 1864 no particular movements of these forces are mentioned, but beginning with September, 1864, when General Price made his second invasion of Missouri with 15,000 troops, the very flower of his great army, with St. Louis and Jefferson City as the objective points, they were again called into active service. We find them fighting battles and winning victories all over the State, including the battles of Pilot Knob, Boomville, Jefferson City, Warrensburg, and a hundred other minor battles. In fact, it is stated a greater number of engagements were fought in Missouri than in any other State of the Union. Britton, in his history, in describing the battle of Boomville, speaks of Capt. H. Shoemaker and his company of Enrolled Missouri Militia that were captured by General Shelby, the terms of surrender being, of course, they were to be treated as prisoners of war, but were permitted to fall into the hands of southern men and, destitute of that chivalry for which the South is universally known, brutally murdered.

I shall now submit a few of the many official orders and some of the correspondence showing when and where these militia forces were in active service.

PEVELY, MO., October 2, 1864.

Major-General PLEASANTON: Two men left Richwoods Thursday and report 300 rebel troops in Old Mines, headquarters of rebel forces, near Potosi. The reported force of rebels is about 3,000. They intend to remain there until driven out. They are working all the mineral into lead mills and say they will burn up the lead mills as soon as they get through with them. Lieut. Col. I. K. Walker and six others, of the Enrolled Missouri Militia, were killed at Potosi. Captain Cook, of the Forty-seventh, and his men in the court-house in Potosi, all prisoners.

Special Orders, No. 211.] HDQRS. DISTRICT OF CENTRAL MISSOURI, Jefferson City, Mo., October 2, 1864.

Col. R. Paser, commanding Thirty-fourth Enrolled Missouri Militia, will order four companies of his command to move to-morrow morning at 7 o'clock, 3d instant, by train and take post as follows: Two companies at the Osage bridge and two companies at the Gasconade bridge. The command will be provided with ten days' rations and 100 rounds of ammunition to each man.

8. The regiments of General Edwards's brigade, Enrolled Missouri Militia, to be designated by the brigade commander, will be sent by rail to Rolla, Mo., to report to Brigadier-General Davies, commanding District of Rolla. Each regiment will take with it all camp and garrison equipage.

9. One regiment of General Edwards's brigade will report to Brigadier-General Strong, commanding district of St. Louis, to relieve the Twenty-third Missouri Infantry, as provost of St. Louis.

10. The Ninth Wisconsin Infantry, Tenth Kansas Infantry, and First Kansas Battery will move immediately to St. Louis and prepare to embark. The regiments will take all their camp and garrison equipage and five six-mule teams each.

11. The Twenty-third Missouri Infantry and Twenty-ninth Illinois Infantry will be prepared and held in readiness to embark, with all their camp and garrison equipage, and transportation to the amount of five six-mule teams for the Twenty-third Missouri and Ninety-first Illinois Infantry and three six-mule teams for the Twenty-ninth Illinois Infantry.

By command of Major-General Schofield:

J. A. CAMPBELL,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

(See page 561, volume 53, series 1, Rebellion Records.)

I reproduce this order for the purpose of showing the Enrolled Missouri Militia were subject to the same orders to which the regulars were subject; that, as President Lincoln said, they took the place of regular soldiers and relieved the general force in Missouri when needed elsewhere. Hence it must be admitted they were actively in the United States service.

HEADQUARTERS DISTRICT OF SOUTHWEST MISSOURI,
Springfield, Mo., July 20, 1864.

Maj. O. D. GREEN,
Assistant Adjutant-General,
Department of the Missouri.

MAJOR: I have the honor to report for the information of the major-general commanding, that the following regiments of cavalry now on duty in this district own their own horse equipments, viz: Sixth Cavalry Missouri State Militia, Seventh Cavalry Enrolled Missouri Militia, mustered and to be mustered into the twenty-months' service. The term of service of all these regiments expire on or about the 1st day of June, 1865. Nearly all the men comprising these regiments are farmers residing within the district or State, and have been and are able to keep themselves well supplied with horses. None of these troops desire to turn over their horses or equipments to the Government, and considering the short time these troops have to serve, the fact that they are serving near home, where they can supply their own horses constantly, I consider it to be to the best interest of the Government to allow them to retain and furnish their own horses in the same manner as heretofore. But if the law is construed as prohibiting any payment for the use of private horses, the troops would, of course, have to turn them in. I would respectfully request that special instruction and construction of the law by the War Department be communicated on the point, whether it is optional for the troops to turn in or otherwise dispose of their horses, or compulsory.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully,

JOHN B. SANBORN,
Brigadier-General Commanding.

(Vol. 41, series 1, serial No. 84, p. 293, Rebellion Records.)

I desire to say I have been unable to find any construction of the law by the War Department relieving the Government of liability on account of the loss of horses by these forces, and infer the Government was considered liable, yet in many instances soldiers were not paid for the loss of horses, much less for the services of horses thus furnished. I am here reminded that Congress in 1818 provided pay of 40 cents per day to the militia soldier of the war of 1812 who furnished his own horse. I received a letter from John L. Cornue, now of Colfax, Kans., a few days ago, in which he gives his experience as a member of the Enrolled Missouri Militia.

By the way, I am unable to reproduce the letter, as it was the request of Mr. Cornue that I present it to the President, and believing Mr. Roosevelt would likely see fit to make a proper recommendation to Congress on this subject; I accordingly did so. As yet, I am advised, no recommendation has been received from the President by the House. The facts were as follows: Mr. Cornue was riding a horse belonging to a comrade, and in a certain engagement with rebels the horse was killed. He was required to pay the owner the sum of $80 for the animal. The salary of Mr. Cornue was $12 per month. He served six months, thus drawing $72; hence was required to pay $8 more than his six months' salary. The net result to Mr. Cornue being that he had the experience of having served his country six months for nothing and sustained the loss of $8 in cash. It is unnecessary to state Mr. Cornue did not reenlist on the expiration of his term of service.

Brigadier-General EWING: The work of bridges goes on well. The cars will cross first bridge in one week from to-day. Volunteers for thirty days can not be had from my command, but I think the Forty-fourth could be kept in service without any trouble. There is also at Herman part of the Thirty-fourth, who would remain without a murmur. My own men seem determined not to stay. There were only 170 of the Thirteenth left yesterday at Franklin, and one company First Battalion Cavalry, Enrolled Missouri Militia. At Franklin and bridges, for duty 440 men of the Enrolled Missouri Militia.

I shall now call your attention to the Provisional Enrolled Militia, which was an organization called into service by virtue of General Orders, No. 107, dated June 28, 1864, issued by General Rosecrans. I shall not take the time of the House or burden the RECORD with a reproduction of this order. Suffice it to say this organization was of close kin to the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and was based upon the same agreement with the President, heretofore mentioned, and designed to perform the same military service.

From data filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, it is known some of the Provisional Enrolled Militia were brought into active service and sustained heavy losses.

But, like the Enrolled Militia, are not considered to have been regularly in the United States service; consequently do not have a pensionable status. Of this organization there were sixty-two companies, approximately 6,000 officers and men, but all of former enlistments in various militia organizations of the State.

The next organization to which I invite your attention is the Missouri Militia, organized under General Orders, No. 3, dated January 30, 1865. This organization was made necessary because the term of service of the Missouri State Militia, the Enrolled Missouri Militia, and the Provisional Enrolled Militia were about to be disbanded, and because peace had not been restored. It will be remembered I have shown the organizations heretofore mentioned were called into the service by virtue of general orders based upon an agreement entered into between Abraham Lincoln and Governor Gamble, of Missouri. Now, as Governor Gamble was succeeded by Governor Fletcher January 1, 1865, as governor of Missouri, and the agreement formerly made could not bind Governor Fletcher, it was found necessary for Governor Fletcher to renew the agreement with the President, which he did, with the assistance of General Dodge, who was in command of the Department of the West at that time. As this organization occupied the same position with respect to the Federal Government, as did the other organizations mentioned, I deem it unnecessary to reproduce either the special agreement or the military orders which brought them into the service.

Secretary Root, in Senate Document 412, at pages 95 and 96, says:

It will be observed these companies were organized for active service under United States officers and that they were to be clothed and subsisted by the General Government, and armed, equipped, and paid by the State. The State was reimbursed by the Federal Government by act of April 17, 1866.

As was done in the case of each of the other organizations. Secretary Root further states:

The status of these troops was that of the militia of the State of Missouri, which, though serving under United States officers, was not accepted into the military service of the United States.

The adjutant-general of the State reports that there were only fifty-eight companies of this organization placed in the field. It must be remembered these forces were organized by United States officers. Yet they are not considered to have been in the United States service for pensionable purposes. Secretary Root further says:

It is known these forces remained on duty from January, 1865, the date of their organization, until relieved from duty in June and July, 1865, by the department commander, and were engaged in doing escort duty, guarding posts and lines of communication, and hunting guerrillas and fighting bushwackers.

Mr. Chairman, here is a condition of things which has not a parallel in American history. Think of it! Soldiers called into active service by United States officers, held in service and commanded by United States officers, and relieved from duty by orders of United States officers. These soldiers were a part of the great Union Army, and are so recognized in the history of their country; and, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry our party, which has declared for just and liberal pensions for the Union soldier for more than twenty years, hesitates to make good its pledges. But, knowing the Republican party can always be trusted and that it is the friend of pensions and of the old soldier, I confidently expect to see my bill become a law.

There is one other organization specifically named in my bill to which I desire to call your attention, viz, the six months' militia, which was called into service by proclamation of Governor Gamble, dated August 24, 1861. This was an organization, while not called into the service by and placed under command of United States officers, as was done in the case of these other militia forces, yet they performed valuable service as an auxiliary force to the Regular Army by acting as scouts and guides to the various bodies of volunteers and scouring the country in search of rebels and guerrillas. These forces, like those just mentioned, are considered a part of the Union Army in the Rebellion Records. I should also add the State was reimbursed by the Federal Government for money expended in the organization and equipment of these forces by act of April 17, 1866. The records show about 6,000 soldiers enlisted under this call. However, as a matter of fact, there are very few of this organization but what enlisted in some one or more of the subsequent organizations. In fact, some of these militia of 1861 served in all subsequent organizations, therefore their names appear many times on the muster-in rolls, thus swelling the total enlistment, but, of course, could only be counted once for pensionable purposes. Now, to one other provision of the bill and I am done. The concluding provision of the bill is that the provisions of the act shall apply "to each and every other military organization of the State of Missouri organized for the defense of the Union and cooperating with the military or naval forces of the United States in suppressing the rebellion." Some question as to the necessity for this provision has been raised. This is a necessary provision for the reason there were a few independent companies in Missouri that were in the United States service by virtue of the same agreements and general orders as were in the other organizations mentioned. For instance, the records in the Auditor's office for the War Department here in Washington show John R. Cochran, of Bollinger County, Mo., commanded an independent company of six months' volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia, who were ordered into active service August 10, 1863, and not relieved from duty until February 24, 1865. The Official War Records show this organization was in active service, doing duty in southeast Missouri and northeast Arkansas, from August 10, 1863, to February 24, 1865, making a continuous term of service of one year six months and twelve days. The records further show on the expiration of this service they reenlisted under Captain Cochran March 17, 1865, under General Order No. 3, and were under this enlistment termed "Missouri Militia," an organization heretofore mentioned, thus making a total term of service of practically two years.

This independent company of Captain Cochran appears on the rolls in the Auditor's office for the War Department as "Company C, Six Months Volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia," and is evidently the organization referred to on page 229, Senate Document No. 412, denominated "Bollinger County company (unattached), commanded by Capt. John R. Cochran," and is not the organization named on page 227 of same document as "Cochran's Independent Company C, Six Months Militia."

The Six Months Independent Company C, on page 227, was organized in 1861 under the proclamation of Governor Gamble and relieved from duty January 25, 1862, whereas the unattached company of Captain Cochran, named on page 229, under the title of "Enrolled Missouri Militia," must be the organization which appears of record in the office of the Auditor for the War Department as "John R. Cochran's Company C, Six Months Volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia." For proof to support this contention, I wish to give the substance of an official communication dated January 4, 1865, written by Col. J. B. Rodgers, of the United States Army, to Brig. Gen. Thomas Ewing. The communication is found on page 997, series 1, vol. 41, part 1, serial 83, War Records, and entitled "December 20, 1864, to January 4, 1865. Expeditions from Cape Girardeau and Dallas, Mo., to Cherokee Bay, Arkansas, and the St. Francis River, with skirmishes." The report states that Colonel Rodgers, stationed at Cape Girardeau, on the 20th of December, 1864, ordered Maj. Josephus Robbins, Second Cavalry, Missouri State Militia, with a detachment of 30 men of the Second Cavalry, Missouri State Militia, and Lieutenant Rinne, with a detachment of Battery C, Second Missouri Artillery, to move from Cape Girardeau to Bloomfield, with directions to search for the enemy (rebels and guerrillas) in the vicinity of Cherokee Bay, Arkansas. Major Robbins was also ordered to search Horse Island, which was near the Arkansas line, at once with his command of 50 men and 50 men from the Enrolled Missouri Militia. I desire to state Cherokee Bay is located in Randolph County, Ark., on the St. Francis River, showing the Government ordered these forces out of the State. Colonel Rodgers, in the meantime, ordered Captain Cochran, commanding a company of the "Six Months Volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia," to march from Dallas, now Marble Hill, to Poplar Bluff and to report to Major Robbins. Owing to swollen streams, Captain Cochran could not reach Major Robbins and was ordered to return to Dallas, thoroughly scouring the country for guerrillas. At Ash Mills he encountered the enemy and killed 4 of their number and captured a number of horses and quantity of arms. He routed other bands and killed a number of guerrillas. I mention this circumstance to show this independent company denominated "John R. Cochran's Company C, Six Months Volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia," was actively in the United States service. In fact, I could submit a great number of instances, not only showing there were other independent organizations in the United States service, but showing when and where they rendered particular service. I now wish to submit a letter written by the Auditor for the War Department to Oliver Masters, of Bessville, Mo. Mr. Masters has long since crossed the river and his good old wife has joined him on the other shore, and they could never be a source of expense to the country should my bill become a law.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 4, 1898.

OLIVER MASTERS, Bessville, Mo.

SIR: In reply to your letter of the 29th ultimo, you are informed that the name "Oliver Masters" is found borne as fifth sergeant on the rolls of Capt. John R. Cochran's company, C, Six Months Volunteers, Enrolled Missouri Militia, on file in this office.

The rolls show the soldier to have been enrolled at Dallas, Mo., July 30, 1863; ordered into active service August 10, 1863; relieved from further duty with the company February 24, 1865.

The soldier's name is also found borne as a corporal on the roll of Capt. John R. Cochran's company, Bollinger County Missouri Militia, enrolled at Dallas, Mo., March 17, 1865; ordered into active service April 8, 1865; relieved from further duty July 8, 1865.

Respectfully, yours,

W. W. BROWN, Auditor,
By M. J. H.

Here is a case, Mr. Chairman, in which the Government admits the soldier was in active service of the United States. A case where the soldier rendered faithful service for nearly two years, yet was denied a pension and permitted to live hard and die poor under a policy of Government favoring just and liberal pensions for the Union soldier. There are a few of the old comrades of Oliver Masters left behind who have not yet answered the last roll call. They, too, are old and most of them poor, like Oliver Masters, and need the little pension to which they are justly entitled that the wolf may be kept from the door in their declining years. The little pension which means so much to the old soldier and so little to our great Government ought not longer be withheld. I trust a case similar to the Oliver Masters case may never again occur in the history of our beloved country. Can not Congress stop long enough to listen to the facts in the case, or shall we go on doing big things and overlook important little things which directly affect a certain class of our humble citizens?

We have undertaken to cut the Western Hemisphere in two parts by the construction of the Panama Canal, to cost so much money no living man dares approximate the expense. Seventy million dollars spent to date and very little dirt moved. We have indulged in international expositions. We have exploited to the world our great achievements at the cost of millions and are now contemplating another international exhibition at Jamestown in 1907, yet the weak and puny excuse is offered there are too many of the loyal militia soldiers to undertake to pension, because it would cost too much.

Mr. Chairman, I for one will never vote another dollar out of the Public Treasury to hold a world's fair or international exhibition until a pensionable status is given these deserving Union soldiers. I do not wish to be understood as opposing the Panama Canal or any other laudable public enterprise, but I do say it is our plain duty to do justice to these soldiers. Now, as to the extra burden or cost that would result should this bill become a law. Some gentlemen believe the passage of this bill would mean great expense to the Government. In this they are mistaken. The cost would hardly be perceptible. According to the statement of Mr. Root, in Senate Document No. 412, the total enlistment of the six months militia of 1861 was about 6,000. The total enlistment of the Enrolled Missouri Militia of 1862 to 1865 was about 24,000.

The total number of the Provisional Enrolled Militia was about 6,000, and of those enlisting under General Orders, No. 3, the Missouri Militia of 1865, there were fifty-eight companies, or approximately 6,000, and perhaps 1,000 all told belonging to the independent companies. Thus we have an aggregate enlistment of 43,000 men. The fact is, as I have said before, practically all of the six months' militia of 1861 enlisted in the Enrolled Missouri Militia of 1862 to 1865. The further fact is, the Provisional Enrolled Militia were organized in 1864 and were made up of the Enrolled Missouri Militia. The Missouri Militia of 1865 consisted of an organization made up of those who were formerly in the Enrolled Missouri Militia, because all the militia of the State had been disbanded early in 1865. Hence it can safely be stated that the total enlistment of the Enrolled Missouri Militia represents about the sum total of all these militia forces. In other words, there were about 24,000 men all told who enlisted in the various organizations provided for in the bill. The difference between 43,000, the total enlistments in the various organizations, and 24,000, the actual number of soldiers enlisting, represents the number of reenlistments, which, of course, could not count for pensionable purposes. The adjutant-general of Missouri in a letter to me of April 14, 1906, gives it as his opinion that the average term of service of these organizations is less than ninety days. Taking the opinion of General Dearmond as a correct basis, we may reasonably suppose that not over 50 per cent of the total number of men enlisting, were they all living, could meet the ninety-day requirement. Fifty per cent of this number, if all living, would be 12,000. According to most reliable statisticians, there are not over 25 per cent of the soldiers of the civil war living to-day. If this is true, we have as a net result not over 3,000 living soldiers in Missouri who could be affected by the passage of such a bill, because 25 per cent of 12,000 is 3,000. I have figured on this proposition in another way. In Missouri we have 114 counties. In each county, I believe, not more than fifteen of these soldiers, the State over, can be found. Fifteen times 114 equals 1,710. Now, to this number we may add 1,000 for those living in the cities of the State and soldiers of independent companies, which would make 2,700. In fact my best judgment is, there are not over 2,000 in Missouri who could meet the ninety-day requirement. But accepting the first calculation as most authentic, we have this result: Admitting there are 3,000 such soldiers in Missouri, and this bill should become a law, and each man at once be placed upon the pension roll at the maximum rate of $12 per month, which, of course, would be impossible, the entire annual cost could only be $432,000. My best judgment is, the cost to the Government the first year, under such a law, would not exceed $100,000, and at the rapid rate at which the old soldiers and their widows are passing away, I doubt if at any future period the total annual cost to the Government would exceed this amount. Yet it is thought there are too many to pension. This is but another way of pleading poverty on the part of the Government, but an earthquake can shake $2,500,000 out of the Public Treasury in a single night without producing a ripple on the surface of the commercial world, and the machinery of Government continue to move without a tremor. I would not have anyone on the floor of this House, or in the world, believe for a moment I am opposed to what the Congress did for San Francisco. I voted for those appropriations myself, and should do so again under like circumstances. I mention this, Mr. Chairman, to show we are not poor as a nation, not too poor to pay a little pension to a few deserving loyal soldiers. Ay, Mr. Chairman, it ill becomes our party after having stood pledged for more than twenty years to just and liberal pensions to the Union soldiers who saved the nation, to fail or refuse to make good our party pledges. According to the Scriptures, we can sin by omission as well as commission, and while we all agree our Democratic friends have sinned much by commission, let the Republican party sin not by omission.

In national convention assembled in 1884 the Republican party expressed its grateful thanks and pledged liberal pensions to the Union soldiers of the civil war. In each succeeding national convention our party has reaffirmed this pledge. To whom did our party refer when it pledged just and liberal pensions to the Union soldiers? Our Missouri soldiers thought they were included in these pledges, because they are a part of the Union Army. They had a right to think the pledge was made to them, because they were Union soldiers during the civil war, and are to-day members of the Grand Army of the Republic. In truth and in fact they have been and are to-day Union soldiers for all purposes, except for pensionable purposes. I think, Mr. Chairman, we had better make good. I have shown that the militia soldier from the foundation of the Government has participated in all our wars. I have shown, too, the militia soldier of every war except the civil war has been given a pensionable status. The history of our country is teeming with instances which show not only the militia soldier has been a valuable adjunct to the regular, but has taken the place of the regular. One of the most important battles ever fought on American soil, viz, the battle of New Orleans, was fought by militia soldiers. In fact, Andrew Jackson fought the battle and won the victory at New Orleans, commanding militia soldiers from Kentucky and Tennessee, principally from Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am sincerely convinced this is a just cause. I believe this not only from the records, which warrant this belief and which are certainly authentic, but from having talked with such men as Capt. W. T. Hunter, of Potosi; Col. Lindsey Murdoch, of Marble Hill; Col. Gustavus St. Gem, of Ste. Genevieve; Capt. John J. Siebel, of Perryville, and Capt. Charles A. Weber, of Perryville, all of Missouri. These are of our foremost citizens to-day. They were members of these organizations, and have a vivid recollection of those turbulent days and the relation these organizations sustained to the Federal Government, and are all of the opinion the services of these soldiers should be recognized. I wish to say, by way of explanation, these gentlemen are all drawing pensions as a result of having served in other organizations; consequently have no personal interest in the matter. In fact, I have received hundreds of letters from Missouri, Illinois, Arkansas, Kansas, and Iowa, in which the writers thereof express the belief that this is a just cause. I here wish to submit two letters, one from Captain Siebel, the other from Colonel St. Gem. I have never yet had the pleasure of meeting Captain Siebel, and his letter came unsolicited. Hence I prize it all the more highly. In this letter Captain Siebel sets out the facts as he understands them, and quotes from the Lincoln letter. It is evident he offered the suggestions in this letter purely as a patriotic duty, for which he is entitled to great credit.

PERRYVILLE, MO., March 31, 1906.

Hon. M. E. RHODES, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I see from proceedings as published in the St. Louis papers that you have introduced a measure to give the Enrolled Missouri Militia some sort of a pensionable status. In this connection I desire to call your attention to a document, or rather a letter, written by President Lincoln at the "Executive Mansion, Washington, October 5, 1863," and addressed to "Hon. Charles D. Drake and others, committee," which document and the circumstances in connection therewith at the time ought to be of great weight with the committee and Members of Congress at this time.

In September, 1863, a committee headed by Lane, of Kansas, Drake, of St. Louis, et al., presented to the President a petition or demand requesting, among other things, first, the removal of General Schofield from the command of the Missouri district and General Butler's appointment; second, that the system of enrolled militia in Missouri be broken up and national forces be substituted for it, etc.

I quote from the President's letter of October 5, 1863, as to the Enrolled Missouri Militia: "As to the 'enrolled militia,' I shall endeavor to ascertain better than I now know what is its exact value. Let me say now, however, that your proposal to substitute national force for the 'enrolled militia' implies that in your judgment the latter is doing something which needs to be done; and if so, the proposition to throw that force away and to supply its place by bringing other forces from the field where they are urgently needed seems to me very extraordinary. Whence shall they come? Shall they be withdrawn from Blank, or Grant, or Steel, or Rosecrans? Few things have been so grateful to my anxious feeling as when in June last the local force in Missouri aided General Schofield to so promptly send a large force to the relief of General Grant, then investing Vicksburg, and menaced from without by General Johnston. Was this all wrong? Should the enrolled militia then have been broken up and General Herron kept from General Grant to police Missouri? So far from finding cause to object, I confess to a sympathy for whatever relieves our general force in Missouri and allows it to serve elsewhere. I therefore at present advise I can not attempt the destruction of the enrolled militia of Missouri. I may add that the force being under the national military control, it is also within the proclamation with regard to the habeas corpus."

Allow me to suggest that if you are not now in possession of that part of Missouri's war history you might have it looked up for your assistance. I have never seen any reference made to the President's letter of October 5, 1863, in Congress in the past when matters pertaining to the enrolled militia were up for action.

I am not writing this out of any personal motive, for I am now drawing a pension as a late member of the Provisional Regiment, Enrolled Missouri Militia, which was organized by order of General Schofield, United States Army, in May, 1863.

I beg to remain,

Very truly, yours,

JOHN J. SIEBEL.

STE. GENEVIEVE, MO., April 15, 1906.

Hon. MARION E. RHODES, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I am again favored in the receipt of your letter of 6th instant, and I can not too highly praise your untiring efforts to pension those found worthy of the Enrolled Missouri Militia for loyal service during the war of the rebellion. I am still of the opinion that the words "a certificate of" should be stricken out of line 15, on page 2 of your bill, and the word "such" inserted instead, so as to read: "and that such discharge from such service, etc.," and that this amendment will surmount all obstacles to prove the desired service of not less than ninety days to obtain a pension, for I feel certain that "certificates of discharge" can be had by but few, if any, from the adjutant-general of the State. Also the amendment of the twenty-third line of page 2, as suggested in my previous letter, I consider very important, as this would insure a proof of service by Captain Miller's company under me as a United States military officer for the required ninety days or more.

I called on Captain Miller and found he has safely preserved his commission and all the orders issued to him by me; also the pay roll of his company when he was paid by the State for one month's service when called during the Price invasion.

The loyal people of southeast Missouri can never forget their defense and protection by the Enrolled Missouri Militia under the gallant commands of Col. William H. McLane, Col. R. M. Brewer, and Col. James Linsay, now all gone to their eternal reward, and my modesty forbids me to mention the service performed as commander of the eighth subdistrict of the St. Louis military district in this part of Missouri, comprising the counties of Perry, Ste. Genevieve, and Jefferson.

In answer to your inquiry, I will say that there were no Enrolled Missouri Militia at the battle of Pilot Knob, as they were called out immediately by the governor, but too late for that battle. It is no more than right that your Republican colleagues should support your bill, and I rejoice to see that you have also assistance from Democratic Members.

Wishing you full success, I am, with sincerest regards,

Yours, very truly,

GUSTAVUS ST. GEM.

You will observe Colonel St. Gem states he was in command of the eighth military subdistrict of Missouri, and of his own knowledge knows these forces rendered substantial service to the cause of the Union. I should state Colonel St. Gem was in charge of the eighth subdistrict of Missouri, under General Schofield, who was in command of all the militia of the State at that time. This is the testimony of Colonel St. Gem, who was a subordinate to General Schofield, and I am sorry I am unable to call on General Schofield for his testimony to-day. I can not do this because I am here reminded it was only a few short weeks ago when the last sad funeral rites were held in the little brown church across the avenue in front of the White House over all that was mortal of Gen. John M. Schofield, but I imagine if the gallant old hero, who now sleeps just across the placid waters of the Potomac on yonder hillside in majestic Arlington, could rise up and give his testimony it would be substantially the same as that of his subordinate, Colonel St. Gem. You will remember I called your attention to a letter written by Abraham Lincoln to Charles Drake et al., of Missouri, in which Mr. Lincoln refused to remove General Schofield from the command of the Department of the Missouri, and in the same decree refused to disband the Enrolled Missouri Militia. In my investigation of this subject I have been surprised to see how the immortal Lincoln watched the Missouri situation, and, sirs, I imagine if he too could be called upon to testify in this cause he would not only repeat the substance of that letter, but would insist at this late day that long-delayed justice be done. But he, with the majority of his contemporaries, have long since answered the final roll call, and now, in his name and in the name of all those gallant heroes whose names I have mentioned, I ask that you, like Lincoln, recognize the services of these loyal soldiers, and by legislative act at an early date declare them, for pensionable purposes, to have been in the great Union Army. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I rise to perform an annual duty, a duty which I perform regularly once a year, and that is to disabuse the minds of my Democratic friends on the other side of the House about the tradition of the United States Treasury at the time the Treasurer, under Republican Administration, turned over the Treasury to the Democratic Administration under Cleveland. I have done this regularly in every Congress, and the last time was in November, 1903. Every new Member who comes here, who desires to exploit his knowledge of the financial history of the country, renews the same attack, and I usually answer it in the same way. I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk a letter of Secretary Foster, written to Senator FORAKER, explanatory of the whole situation, which will point out, first, that there was no deficit in the Treasury, but that there was a surplus of $103,000,000; and second, that he did not issue any bonds nor did he ever prepare to issue any bonds for the purpose of meeting any deficiency. He did make an order for the construction of a plate upon which certificates of bonds might be engraved, for the purpose of purchasing fifty millions of gold to maintain the gold reserve, if necessary. This was done after consultation with Secretary Carlisle, and was abandoned at once upon the suggestion from Mr. Cleveland himself.

Now, then, I wish in this connection to refer to the fact that this duty will have to be turned over after a year from now to some other Member of the House, and I beg that some young man will remember where in the RECORD this letter of Mr. Foster's is placed. The gentleman from New York [Mr. TOWNE] yesterday reminded me of the fact that I was rapidly becoming, or about to become, a "reminiscence," or "memory," or some such thing. Now, I want to say to the gentleman that, while I admit the fact, I assure him that should anything happen that I should come back to public life I shall come back from the same party that I have served in from the date of its organization [applause on the Republican side], bearing the same old flag of the Republican party; and if I should not come back, it will never be said of me that I was a buccaneer in public life, and that I had sailed the seas of American politics always bearing letters of marque and reprisal, fighting sometimes on one side and sometimes on the other, always looking out for myself. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to send to the Clerk's desk and avail myself of the brief period that it will take the Clerk to read a letter of Secretary Foster drawn out by a letter from the honorable Senator from Ohio, Mr. FORAKER, in answer to his letter and in answer to my letter of the same date.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paper presented by the gentleman from Ohio.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOSTORIA, OHIO, October 28, 1903.

Hon. J. B. FORAKER,
Cincinnati, Ohio.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Your favor of the 27th this moment received. Harmon's statement is quite vague. He says: "In 1893 when the Democratic party came into power the Republican Administration had bankrupted the Government. When Cleveland entered the White House there were bonds already signed by the Republican Administration. They had barely managed to tide over until we got into office, and then we had to take the stigma that came as the result of their unwise administration."

The charge that the Government was bankrupt when Cleveland came into power is ridiculous. The revenues up to that time, and until the end of that fiscal year, exceeded the expenditures. The usual charge is the one made by GAINES in the Nashville American, copied in the Enquirer of the 21st, that "Secretary Foster prepared plates for bonds to tide over a deficit." The facts are that as soon as it was known that Cleveland was elected in November, 1892, it became apparent that there was great danger, on account of importations being held back for lower duties, that the gold reserve would fall below $100,000,000 required, not by law, but by implication of law. After consulting fully with Senator Sherman, I made up my mind that it was my duty to maintain the gold reserve even if I had to do it by the sale of bonds. The only bonds authorized were those of the resumption act of 1875, all bearing high rates of interest and running a long time.

I suppose to assist me, Senator Sherman introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill in the Senate authorizing an issue of a 3 per cent short-time bond. Mr. Carlisle, who was then known to be the incoming Secretary, was consulted by the Senator and approved Mr. Sherman's amendment. It passed the Senate by an almost unanimous vote. This was about the 22d of February. Upon its passage, fearing that I might be compelled to use bonds for the purchase of gold, I directed the superintendent of the proper office to prepare plates for this bond—a better bond for my purposes than those already authorized. I did this upon the belief at the time that an act approved by the incoming Secretary that passed the Senate, receiving a large share of the Democratic votes of that body, would also pass the House. But in this I was mistaken. The House refused to pass it, and the plates were not prepared, and there were no bonds already signed, as stated by Mr. Harmon. But my letter directing the preparation is used in evidence that the plates were prepared and that a deficit existed.

To go a little further in this matter, I had fixed upon $50,000,000 as the amount of gold I would buy, and I had an understanding with the bankers in New York to this effect, but they stipulated they would take the bonds in installments of $10,000,000 a week. If this was done it would devolve upon Secretary Carlisle to execute a part of my contract. The bankers desired Secretary Carlisle's concurrence in the arrangement. In this emergency I called upon Senator GORMAN, stating the facts to him and saying that many of my Republican friends thought I had better not do anything in the way of the maintenance of the gold reserve, yet I deemed it my duty as Secretary of the Treasury to continue to do until the last hour of my term what I would do if I were to be continued in office. In this I was sustained by Senator Sherman.

Mr. GORMAN heartily approved and sent a messenger for Mr. Carlisle. Mr. Carlisle soon made his appearance, and seemed greatly pleased at what I proposed, and next day went to see Mr. Cleveland. Upon his return I was informed that he would execute the part of the plan that would devolve upon him, and that Mr. Cleveland also approved.

To sum up, the Treasury was not bankrupt at any time, and there was no deficit at any time, no plates for bonds, and no bonds were signed.

No bonds were sold. I managed to maintain the gold reserve, turning over to my successor about $103,000,000.

I believe that if the Harrison Administration had been continued the revenues and the gold reserve would have increased and the condition then prevailing would have improved.

The panic and deplorable condition following Cleveland's election was wholly due to two causes: First, the known purpose of the Democratic party to adopt a revenue tariff, which at once affected the imports and paralyzed all industries and business, and, secondly, the known incapacity of the Democratic party then coming into power to agree upon efficient legislation, afterwards so painfully demonstrated.

Very truly, etc.,

CHARLES FOSTER.

[Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, that seems to be a candid, straightforward statement, but it will not do any good. The same statement will be repeated just as often as this has by those who have not heard the reading of this letter. Now, what happened following this? Let us see who was the wise man and who was the mistaken man.

Mr. Secretary Foster looked forward into the future and saw that the Treasury of the United States must, under Democratic administration, become helplessly insolvent; and before the Administration of Grover Cleveland closed we who were Members then of the House were called upon to vote for loans amounting in the aggregate to $262,500,000 upon a long-time bond at 4 per cent interest, which was taken by syndicates at about the par value—although I am not clear upon that point—and which stand to-day in the markets at one hundred and thirty-odd cents on the dollar.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCNARY] such time as he may desire.

[Mr. MCNARY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY].

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, for many years Missouri has been represented in this House by fifteen Democrats and one Republican. At the election held on November 8, 1904, the Republicans carried nine of the sixteen districts in the State, and a majority of the legislature, which elected a Republican United States Senator, Maj. WILLIAM WARNER. Therefore in this, the Fifty-ninth Congress, the representation from that State in this body consists of nine Republicans and seven Democrats.

Shortly after the election our colleague, Mr. SHARTEL, called a meeting of the Republican delegation at the office of Senator WARNER in Kansas City, which was attended by all save one, possibly two, the object being, principally, to consider committee preferences. At that meeting it was the unanimous opinion, shared in by the Senator, an ex-Member of this House, that we could only hope to secure representation on one or two of the important committees. Shortly prior to that time Kansas City had been visited by two serious and very disastrous floods resulting from the condition of Kaw River, and the topic was uppermost in the minds of the citizens of that portion of the State, various plans being under discussion for some method to prevent a repetition thereof. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, won his campaign on the issue that something along this line should be done, and that a Republican was in a better position to secure Government aid for the improvement of that river. This fact was impressed upon us, and that we could do and would be doing a great service to our State for one of our number to be assigned to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, to procure, at this session of Congress, an appropriation for the Kaw to protect Kansas City from future devastation; and, as our colleague lived in that city, it was but proper he should be and was so selected. The meeting was harmonious in every respect, good feeling prevailed, and each of us selected such committeeships as we would prefer, and agreed with the Senator to work to that end. In fact, all of us at that time, as we did later, sacrificed our personal ambitions in order that our colleague might be appointed to that committee, and after Congress convened personal appeals were made to the Speaker to give him that assignment, and when the committees were announced we were delighted to know that we had been successful as to our first choice. I was exceedingly anxious that our colleague, Mr. RHODES, should be assigned to the Committee on Invalid Pensions; in fact, I urged his selection for that place as a first consideration; but, as I have stated, each of us buried our personal desires for our colleague from Kansas City that the Kaw River might receive that attention it so justly deserves, and which is of such vast import to that city.

On the western border of Missouri we have two great cities, St. Joseph and Kansas City, some 60 miles apart. Both are great commercial and railroad centers. Both are on the Missouri River. Both are represented on this floor by Republicans, Mr. FULKERSON and Mr. ELLIS. The latter city obtains a greater portion of its trade from Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and, in order that their business might be increased, the Commercial Club arranged a trip by special train to tour the two Territories. Aboard was a representative of almost every business interest of Kansas City, as well as Senator WARNER and my colleague, Mr. ELLIS. It left that city some time about May 1, 1905. By invitation I met the train at Tahlequah, Ind. T., and accompanied the party to Muscogee, and were entertained by the Commercial Club, of that city. It was late in the evening when we reached there, and we were immediately conveyed to the club rooms, where the business element of Muscogee were assembled. Each of us was called upon for an address, and each responded. My colleague delivered an elegant speech. He knew what was wanted, and he satisfied their every desire—at that time. He was applauded time and time again, and when he waxed most eloquent I heard him say: "You ought to have statehood; you must have statehood; you shall have statehood, and I pledge you here and now to work and vote for statehood as you want it and when you want it." His hearers fairly went wild. His words were taken up by the press in every part of the Indian Territory, and the people called him blessed. His name was on every tongue, and they began to claim him as their own, the one who should be their Moses to "lead them from darkness unto light." I had been associated with the people of that Territory in a business way for more than two years. I had an extended acquaintance therein, and it was a source of deep gratification to me to hear my colleague unbosom himself, and I assured them that he would have my humble but earnest support. The people of that Territory became active. They held conventions and elected delegates to a constitutional convention, which was held in Muscogee. After days of work a constitution was framed for the State of Sequoyah, one of the best that was ever devised for any State. It was submitted to a vote of the people and carried by a vote of some 65,000 to 9,000, in round numbers. Copies of the constitution and the vote were placed in the hands of my colleague and myself, and those people, under the assurances we had given them, expected us to work to give them statehood "as they wanted it and when they wanted it." Their cause was just, and the Government of the United States had solemnly promised them as much on more than one occasion.

On the first day of the present session of Congress I introduced into this House two bills—H. R. 78, "A bill providing for the admission of the State of Sequoyah into the Union, and for other purposes," and H. R. 97, "A bill to enable the people of Oklahoma to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States"—both of which were referred to the Committee on Territories. Other statehood bills were introduced, but the mention of the two is sufficient for the purpose of my argument. Shortly thereafter a conference of Republicans was called in relation to statehood. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] was chairman. Before proceeding with the conference, we resolved into a caucus for the purpose of accepting the resignation of the gentleman from Minnesota as Republican whip, then went back into conference. Before participating or proceeding it was definitely asked of the chairman whether it was a caucus or a conference. The chairman replied: "The Chair will hold that it is a conference, not a caucus; merely advisory and not binding." After the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] proceeded with a forty-minute argument on an omnibus bill all others were "choked off" with five minutes each. It finally came to a vote as to whether there should be an omnibus bill, providing for Oklahoma and Indian Territory as the State of Oklahoma and Arizona and New Mexico as the State of Arizona, all in the one bill. The majority favored it, but sixty-five voted against the Arizona-New Mexico proposition, among the number being my colleague, Mr. ELLIS, and myself. The Committee on Territories proceeded to work, and had almost daily hearings on the statehood question, when, finally, on January 23, 1906, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] introduced H. R. 12707, which became known as the "Hamilton bill," and which provided for the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one State and Arizona and New Mexico as one State—an omnibus bill. It was apparent that a goodly number on this side of the House would oppose that character of a bill. It was conceded that not one opposed the admission of Oklahoma and Indian Territory as one State. The introduction of this bill and the report of the committee was withheld for the specific purpose of whipping into line what was then began to be termed "insurgents." Propositions were made and suggestions offered. I was termed as an insurgent. My colleague, as I afterwards learned, was on the inside, and knew that we insurgents were willing to vote for statehood in any form for Oklahoma and Indian Territory, or for an omnibus bill for all four Territories, providing Arizona and New Mexico were allowed to vote separately on the proposition. All overtures were rejected, and when it was believed enough insurgents had been conquered and enough votes procured in a manner and by means which are not at this time necessary to relate, the bill and report was brought in. Then we insurgents offered to support the bill if they would amend it by inserting the word "each" in the Arizona-New Mexico portion, which would have provided that each Territory vote on the proposition separately, and this my colleague well knew, being on the inside. On January 24, 1906, as will fully appear on page 1498 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the following proceedings were had:

STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"The Committee on Rules, to whom was referred House resolution No. 181, have had the same under consideration and respectfully report the following resolution in lieu thereof:

"'Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this order, and daily hereafter, immediately on the approval of the Journal, so long as the bill hereinafter referred to shall be pending in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the House shall resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States; that after the said bill shall have been read general debate shall continue until Thursday next at 3 p. m.; and at that hour, or, if general debate shall be concluded before that hour, immediately upon the conclusion of said general debate, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union shall rise and report the bill to the House; whereupon immediately, without debate, intervening motion, or appeal, a vote shall be taken on the bill to a final passage: Provided further, That general leave to print remarks on the bill is hereby granted for six legislative days after Thursday, the 25th day of January next.'"

This was and is gag rule; its purpose was to bind hand and foot every Member on this side of the House, and was for the express purpose of preventing any amendments to the bill. It was and is sharp practice and resorted to to defeat the will of the majority. It was and is tyrannical. My colleague being "on the inside," must have known that this rule was to be brought in and that it was a vehicle to destroy free representation in the Congress. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] moved the previous question. The yeas and nays were ordered. The vote is recorded on pages 1505 and 1506 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; the yeas were 192 and the nays 165. Among the yeas is found the name "ELLIS," and in the negative the name "MURPHY." So the previous question was ordered. Then came the vote upon the rule. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the vote will be found on pages 1506 and 1507 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The yeas were 188 and the nays 158. Among the yeas is found the name "ELLIS," and in the negative "MURPHY."

In accordance with the rule, the bill came to a vote on January 25, 1906, as will be found on page 1557 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The yeas and nays were ordered, resulting in 195 yeas and 150 nays. Among the yeas is found the name "ELLIS," and in the negative "MURPHY." So the bill was passed.

Mr. Chairman, the whole matter was prearranged to refuse statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territory unless it carried Arizona and New Mexico. I was informed that the Committee on Territories had been framed for that purpose and that no man would be placed upon it who did not declare for and assent to that programme. It was then, Mr. Chairman, I learned that my colleague, Mr. ELLIS, was not in favor of granting statehood to the Indian Territory "as they wanted it and when they wanted it." It was then, Mr. Chairman, I discovered he had surrendered to the whims and caprice of mere politicians, who seem to have forgotten the welfare of the people, who are drunk with their own power, blind and deaf to all sense of reason, right, and justice. And, Mr. Chairman, I afterwards learned that my colleague, through his own confession, was "on the inside," and necessarily must have been a party to arranging the entire plan and programme. I do not charge that he was, neither do I question his motives nor his good faith, but will submit to this House his own words, that it and the people may draw their conclusions.

The bill was sent to the Senate, and on March 9, 1906, it struck out all provisions relating to Arizona and New Mexico, as will be found by reference to page 3659 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. After the bill was reported back to the House with the Senate amendments, the so-called "insurgents" offered to support a rule sending the bill to conference on the minor amendments in relation to Oklahoma and agree to the Senate amendment striking out Arizona and New Mexico. But no; it was the omnibus programme and must be carried out. Besides, the Senate must be rebuked for having the audacity to emasculate a House bill conceived and born in such fashion. The matter dragged along but a short time only. The people were growing impatient and began to demand that we resume our rôle as their servants and do the square thing. The politicians were still drunken with their power and, facing the Senate, exclaimed:

Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed that he hath grown so great?

The onlookers and those who were "on the inside" shouted "Bravo, bravo, my lord!"

Among the countless telegrams the following was received by each Member of Congress from Missouri, regardless of politics:

KANSAS CITY, MO., March 14, 1906.

Hon. A. P. MURPHY,
Washington, D. C.:

The Commercial Club respectfully urges you to support Senate amended bill for statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territories. The business interests of Missouri think they are entitled to this consideration at your hands. Our organization has passed strong resolutions. The people of these Territories are looking to Missouri and Kansas for loyal support.

T. M. CLENDENING, Secretary.

This message is from the same club who made the tour of Indian Territory and Oklahoma; aye, sir, it was from the same men in whose presence my colleague and I had pledged our sacred honor ten months before to give statehood "as you want it and when you want it." We could not, we dare not heed their appeal; we had grown deaf from the buzzing of public buildings, pneumatic-tube service, subsidies for fast mails, and what not; we were dizzy with our own greatness; we were "on the inside;" yes, we knew more what the people wanted than the people knew themselves.

Another conference was called; dust had to be thrown in the eyes of the people by making them believe this was a deliberate and truly representative body; they were asking too much. But it was the same old thing; the edict had gone forth, and we must carry out the programme. Arizona and New Mexico was a millstone about the neck of fair Oklahoma, whose people were begging and crying and praying to be cut loose. The demands of our constituents grew stronger and more emphatic. Agree to the Senate bill, was the demand on every hand. Therefore, Oklahoma must work overtime in utter disregard of the eight-hour law and furnish more steam. On March 22, 1906, as appears on page 4223 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL], from the Committee on Rules, reported a resolution to take the bill from the Speaker's table and send it to conference, moving the previous question thereon. The yeas and nays were ordered, resulting in 173 yeas and 153 nays. Among the yeas is found the name "ELLIS," and in the negative "FULKERSON, MURPHY." (P. 4224, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

During the debate on the resolution, under the rules of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] said:

It is manifest, therefore, that if we are to have speedy legislation and an adjustment of differences between the two Houses, the bill must be at once sent to conference, and that is the purpose of the rule I have introduced.

There was no difference between the House and the Senate. The difference was between a few Members "on the inside" and a very large majority of the House, for, if left alone to act as their conscience dictated, free from gag rule and threats of ostracism, failure to get recognition, and other influences, which it is not necessary here to mention, the bill as it came from the Senate would have carried by an overwhelming majority. And, Mr. Chairman, when the time comes to revise our dictionaries the word "speedy" will be given a new definition as a testimonial of the Fifty-ninth Congress. Debate proceeded under the rule. My colleague [Mr. FULKERSON] said:

* * * To-day we are face to face with a new order of things. "The best laid schemes o' mice and men gang aft agley." The bill passed by the House did not receive the enthusiastic approval of the Senate, nor did its terms measure up to the requirements and demands of the people. That measure was not right when it left this body. It has been taken by another body, corrected, perfected, and passed by it, and returned here for our concurrence. The opportunity is now presented to us to correct our former blunder. The case is before us on a motion for a rehearing—a very fortunate thing for us. It does seem that there is something in that old adage that "God takes care of fools and children," for the error committed by us having been pointed out, it is not yet too late, and, indeed, the opportunity is now afforded us to make the much-needed correction. * * * Why not come out of the brush of error and defeat and do our duty, our whole duty, by these people of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and give them statehood? Let us concur in the Senate amendment, and concur now. To longer delay is only to invite further criticism. Every hour we delay this matter will only add to the humiliation of our past error, the humiliation of continued defeat. * * * The Senate has the people of this country with them on this proposition, a fact worthy of note and consideration. * * * It will be easier and much less expensive to vote to concur in that part of the Senate amendment which strikes out all reference to New Mexico and Arizona than to delay this matter indefinitely and have to include in our expense bill an additional outlay for materials with which to besalve our irritated and inflamed, if not wounded, pride. * * * You have your minds made up and are determined to delay matters. You say your course will eventually bring in the new State of Oklahoma. I hope you are right in your belief. But I am in favor of bringing it in now.

It might not be out of place here to remark that this speech has been reprinted by the St. Joseph Commercial Club, and is being scattered broadcast throughout Indian Territory and Oklahoma as a reason why those Territories should divert their trade from Kansas City to St. Joseph. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] (Republican) said:

* * * It is useless to discuss the purpose of this rule. It is perfectly apparent it is part of a prearranged programme. The object of this rule is to coerce the minority on this side of the House to vote against their honest judgment. * * * This rule links the iniquitous with the righteous and demands that we take both or nothing. The only reply to these statements is that you are an insurgent. * * * I am comforted with the thought that the regular of to-day is the insurgent of to-morrow. * * * We may be insurgents in this House, we may be in the minority here; but throughout the country we are in the countless majority. Public sentiment in favor of admitting Oklahoma and Indian Territory, without regard to New Mexico and Arizona, is making the atmosphere so hot that those who are opposed to it can not long breath it and live. Mark the prediction! The insurgents of to-day will be the victors of to-morrow. * * * The people are looking on in amazement and disgust. It is our duty to vote down this rule and settle this question here and now.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. BEDE] (Republican) said:

Mr. Chairman, if there is any gentleman in this Chamber who is opposed to the admission of Oklahoma, I pause here to give him an opportunity to say so now; and if he does not, I will ask him forever after to hold his peace. If we are all in favor of admitting Oklahoma—and you say it is one of the Administration measures—you have an opportunity to do it now in ten minutes. Why do you not get busy and admit Oklahoma, and not hitch it up with some other proposition that is not an Administration measure?

My colleague, Mr. DE ARMOND, said:

* * * A vote for this rule is distinctly, directly, positively, knowingly a vote to keep Oklahoma and the Indian Territory out of the Union. Cast that vote if you please, but in casting it know what you do. Know that others know what you do. * * * Do not attempt elsewhere, as you seem to be attempting here, to delude anybody into the belief that principle or right or precedents or justice or any other thing that you can stand upon—that can be explained, declared, or defended—can justify your action.

The vote being taken on the rule as reported on page 4229 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, resulted in 175 yeas and 156 nays. Among the yeas is found the name "ELLIS" and in the negative "FULKERSON and MURPHY." So the bill was sent to conference, where it peacefully rests, and we are face to face with an outraged and a justly indignant people. Mark the prediction of the gentleman from Washington; the air is becoming hotter and hotter; blue blazes are apparent on every hand. The people, not only of Missouri, but of the whole country, are asking why it is we seek to crucify Oklahoma on a cross of political dishonor. Explanations are demanded, and a short time after the last vote I noticed in the Kansas City Journal the following:

The following is from a letter by Mr. ELLIS to one of his constituents excusing himself for voting with the Speaker on the statehood question:

"I wired you yesterday assurances that Oklahoma will be admitted this session. Sorry I could not be more explicit as to my attitude toward the bill as it came from the Senate. If the statehood matter were the only matter upon my hands here, I could more easily determine my course; but I have many matters, as you know, of great import to Kansas City, and I must be tactful. I am on the inside—understand exactly what is going on. Things will work out to our satisfaction ultimately."

It will not be amiss here to incorporate the definition of the word "tactful." I am free to confess I had not heard of it before, and after some difficulty I found it in the supplement to Webster's Unabridged Dictionary, which defined it as "full of tact." The same authority defined "tact" as "ready power of appreciating and doing what is required by circumstances." Worcester defines "tact" as "adroitness in adapting one's words or actions to circumstances; cleverness; dexterity; knack." The same authority defines "dexterity" as "readiness of contrivance or invention," and defines "knack" as "a little machine; a nice trick."

But other excuses must be found to appease, if possible, our indignant constituency, and it, among other things, is contained in the following item clipped from the Daily Oklahoman, published at Oklahoma City, Okla., from the issue bearing date of April 4, 1906:

JUST AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

Congressman ELLIS, of Kansas City, who, by the way, is one of the ten Kansas and Missouri Republicans who voted with "Uncle Joe" CANNON to send the statehood bill to conference instead of concurring in the Senate amendments to the same, and thereby avoiding the possibility of defeat in the case of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, is evidently one of those fellows who, in common parlance, are known as "four flushers." In any event, his talk and his vote are in such direct conflict that the natural presumption is he is afraid to show his hand.

In an interview given out in Kansas City Monday to the Star he is quoted as follows:

"Personally I never thought the omnibus bill was the right way to deal with the statehood question. I did think Arizona and New Mexico ought not to come into the Union with the same representation in the Senate as Missouri and Kansas, while there is no prospect of the two ever having half the present population of Kansas. However, it was the omnibus bill that was taken up. I voted for it.

"When it came back from the Senate separated, the House would have voted for Oklahoma statehood promptly if the bill had come back in proper form. But it came back carrying an amendment that, in justice to Oklahoma, we could not adopt. Legislation for years had retained the ownership of sections 13, 16, 33, and 36 out of each township for the use of the future State. Two of them are for school purposes, sections 16 and 36. Our bill had provided that sections 33 of each township should go to definite institutions, and 13 was to go to the new State to be used for what purpose the State should dictate.

"When the bill came back to us section 13 in each township was to go to the State, unless claimed by some one filing a mineral claim on it. That meant a graft."

For artistic and ingenuous evasion the above is almost the limit. It is so far from the facts in the case that it will produce a tumultous smile wherever they are known. And down here in Oklahoma, where the people have been watching this matter and know something of its ins and outs, Mr. ELLIS is going to experience no little difficulty in getting the people to accept his miserable excuse.

Here is the first intimation anyone has had that it was the Warren amendment which sent the bill to conference. From all that it was possible to glean from Washington in this connection at the time, it is evident that the Speaker and organization Republicans stood together to send the bill to conference because Arizona and New Mexico had been stricken out. No other reason was assigned or suggested. It remained for Mr. ELLIS, two weeks after the matter came up in the House, to get away out to Kansas City, where the people were not watching closely, and spring an alleged reason for his action which is both unique and flimsy.

In the light of the same, the conclusion is forced that Mr. ELLIS is put to the extremity of doing some rapid side-stepping in this matter. His people are after him, and he must offer some sort of an excuse for voting in conflict with the way he has talked. The one he hits upon here, however, appears to have been hastily and loosely contrived, and a moment's reflection is sufficient to convince anyone familiar with the facts in the case that it is nothing but an afterthought.

Shortly thereafter I was asked by some one, I do not now recall whom—it may possibly have been the reporter of the Kansas City Journal—what I thought about statehood. I replied: "In my opinion, statehood is dead." This was published in that paper. My colleague, Mr. ELLIS, was in Kansas City at the time, and seems to have taken it seriously, and felt it his duty to take me to task, I presume; therefore he carefully, in his statesmanlike manner, prepared a reply and hastened into print. It appeared in the Kansas City Journal of May 15, 1906, and can only "produce a tumultuous smile." It is as follows:

MR. ELLIS SAYS STATEHOOD IS SURE AT THIS SESSION.

Congressman ELLIS declares a statehood bill is sure to be passed at this session. "If Congress should attempt to adjourn without giving statehood to these Territories I believe it would break up in the worst row they ever had in Washington," Mr. ELLIS said. "The reason I say that is that practically every member of both Houses is in favor of statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territory. There is really no difference of opinion in that matter. There is a diversity of opinion upon the subject of statehood for Arizona and New Mexico. I think the prevailing view in the East is that they ought to come in as one State, and that the prevailing view in the West is that they should come in as two States. Then there is an element that would not have either of them in, either separately or together.

"The delay down there on Oklahoma and Indian Territory has been due to this programme of tying the Western Territories to Oklahoma and Indian Territory—the omnibus programme. From that programme I have dissented from the start. I opposed it in caucus and have used my influence against it at every step. I regard it as wholly unjustifiable and indefensible upon any ground."

The attention of Mr. ELLIS was called to the declaration of Congressman MURPHY that statehood was dead, so far as this session was concerned, and possibly for this entire Congress.

"Quite to the contrary," he said, "statehood is the livest question in Congress to-day. Members visiting their respective constituencies come back from day to day and say they are sometimes asked about the rate bill and other matters, but that they are always, everywhere they go, asked why they don't give statehood to Oklahoma and Indian Territory. There is no matter upon which you would find such general assent in both Houses as upon the proposition that Oklahoma and Indian Territory be made a State at this session. One does not hear any other sentiment, except among those who are opposed to joining the two Territories as one State and are hoping that nothing will be done.

SAYS CANNON WAS BLUFFING.

"The one thing that has caused greatest apprehension in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and in the Southwest generally, was the statement made by Speaker CANNON, or attributed to him, when the bill came back from the Senate, that the House would 'stand pat' and insist upon its programme of two States of the four Territories or nothing. Now, that statement, if made at all, was not made for currency in the Southwest. 'Uncle Joe' enjoys the reputation of understanding the general points of the national game, and he knows the commercial value of a good bluff. That remark of his was a bluff for the Senate and in connection with his determination to protest against the Senate's action, and the announcement of his purpose to go into conference and thrash the matter out with the Senate.

"Not unnaturally, the people of the Territories, who are so vitally interested in the matter, did not understand this. They thought it was said for their benefit and discouragement."

Mr. Chairman, that interview occasions these few remarks I have made. I introduced the bills for two States. He is "on the inside," as he stated, and speaks officially, and now seeks to discredit me through the metropolitan press of our State by creating, or attempting to create, the impression that I had opposed joining the two Territories—Oklahoma and Indian Territory—as one State, and am "hoping nothing will be done," and I deem it my duty to set myself right by giving the record as it is and was made. "The delay down there on Oklahoma and Indian Territory has been due to the programme of tying the western Territories to Oklahoma and Indian Territory—the omnibus programme. From that programme I have dissented from the start. I opposed it in caucus and have used my influence against it at every step. I regard it as wholly unjustifiable and indefensible upon any ground." How well does my colleague picture the insurgent. But it is not the record of a single Member who voted in the affirmative on the various propositions, and unfortunately he is in that category. If the omnibus programme "is unjustifiable and indefensible upon any ground," then each and every vote cast by him on this proposition "is unjustifiable and indefensible upon any ground;" and by the same process of reasoning, in the very nature of things, the only reasonable and logical conclusion that can be drawn is that every vote cast by an insurgent was and is fully justified and needs no defense. If, as he says, "that practically every Member of both Houses is in favor of statehood for Oklahoma and Indian Territory," and "there is no matter upon which you would find such general assent in both Houses as upon the proposition that Oklahoma and Indian Territory be made a State at this session," what and who is delaying it? Who stands in the way, and who is it seeking to defeat the will of "practically every Member of both Houses?" If my colleague is "on the inside and understands exactly what is going on," will he answer these questions, and will he tell us when action will be taken? The people of Missouri and the country are entitled to this information, and I am anxious they should have it.

Mr. Chairman, I have a high regard for my colleague; we are the best of friends, and no one regrets more than I that he has wandered in a strange land and after a strange god. Were it in my power I would give him a passport of an insurgent that he may return to our people and receive their blessings. Had I the power I would blot out this entire record and banish it from the memory of all men forever, so it could not stand for all time to come as an everlasting disgrace to this Congress.

My colleague says the Speaker is "bluffing," and his "stand-pat" policy on this bill "was not for currency in the Southwest;" that the Speaker knows the "commercial value of a good bluff." I must confess that I do not, and as I am not "on the inside" I am unwilling to accept his statement. I do not know whether the bill will be brought in or not; but I do say, without fear of contradiction, that if it is, it will contain exactly that amendment for which the insurgents have all along contended, viz, giving New Mexico and Arizona the right to vote separately on the proposition. And then the prediction of the gentleman from Washington made on this floor on March 22 last will come true, "The insurgents of to-day will be the victors of to-morrow." And then, Mr. Chairman, we will witness the finale of the first chapter of the greatest exhibition of "horseplay" in the annals of American history. And then, Mr. Chairman, the opening of the second chapter will witness those who have been playing "horse" at Oklahoma's expense, reciting from every hilltop the old, old story of "How me and Betty killed the bear."

Was it not a statesman from Illinois who said something about fooling the people? [Loud applause.]

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks upon the pending bill. This bill comes to this House with the unanimous report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The Secretary of State submitted estimates to the Committee on Foreign Affairs for the diplomatic and consular appropriations carrying a very considerable increase over the appropriations of last year. The apparent increase carried by his estimates is $1,681,000, but there should be deducted from that the sum of $396,000, which is the amount made necessary by the enactment of the consular-reform bill which became a law on the 5th of April of this year. If that is deducted, it will appear that his estimates call for an increase of $1,151,000. The Committee on Foreign Affairs reduced these estimates and made an increase of $221,000. I consider, Mr. Chairman, that the most of these increases are conservative, wise, and necessary. They added $34,000 to the amount paid ambassadors. There is a reduction of $2,500 in the amount paid ministers. Secretaries to embassies and legations have an increased appropriation for their salary of over $20,000. Clerks in embassies and legations are increased $32,500. The contingent fund to the embassies and legations is increased $67,500. For clerks to the consulates, $24,000, and the contingent fund for consulates, $20,000.

The other increases are small and absolutely necessary, and most of them were fully and ably explained by the acting chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS]. There were a good many of the estimates submitted by the State Department, as the committee will see, which were not reported favorably by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I believe the committee acted wisely in the action it took in reference to these matters. I was particularly pleased, Mr. Chairman, to see the Committee on Foreign Affairs decline to comply with the request of the Secretary of State to increase the salary of the minister resident and consul-general to Santo Domingo from $5,000 to $10,000. It was stated as a reason why this salary should be increased that the duties and responsibilities of our representative at this point had been greatly added to of late. That may be true or it may not be true, but if it is true it is due to the fact that the President of the United States has undertaken to exericise in that direction powers and functions alone which the Constitution of the United States empowers him to exercise only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

I do not believe the people approve the act of the President in practically putting into effect the treaty with Santo Domingo when the Senate had failed to ratify it, and I do not think that Congress should acquiesce in or approve this unconstitutional course on the part of the President, even to the extent of increasing the salary of our representative at Santo Domingo, whose labors may have been added to by reason of this unconstitutional act of the executive branch of the Government. The Santo Domingo treaty was negotiated prior to the adjournment of the Senate in March, 1905. The treaty was sufficiently discussed in the Senate to leave no doubt that it would not be ratified by that body. Some time after the Senate adjourned on the 18th of March, 1905, the President entered into an agreement with the Dominican Government, which was to all intents and purposes the same agreement contained in the treaty which the Senate refused to ratify; and this agreement or modus vivendi is still in operation, though the Senate still refuses to ratify it.

The defenders of Mr. Roosevelt claim that in taking the action he has in this matter he is acting within the principle laid down by President Monroe in a message sent to Congress and which has become known as the "Monroe doctrine."

This claim stretches the Monroe doctrine beyond what has ever been suggested before, and has given it an interpretation not intended by its author or justified by its context.

A few years, before the publication of the Monroe doctrine, the South American states had thrown off their allegiance to Spain and set up independent governments. The United States had recognized the independence of these South American republics and was not disposed to see their independence subverted. Not long after the recognition of the independence of these republics by the United States, the "Holy Alliance" encouraged Spain to attempt to recover her revolted colonies in South America. President Monroe, in a message to Congress on December 2, 1823, said that—

> The occasion has been judged proper for asserting, as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power.

After pointing out that the political system of the European powers was essentially different from that of America, the President said:

> We owe it, therefore, to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety.

These two declarations embrace the Monroe doctrine as originally enunciated.

To make a little clearer their meaning I will state them in a more succinct form. They were, first, a declaration that the United States would look with disfavor upon the attempt of any European power to subvert the governments of the South American republics which had recently achieved their independence, and whose independence the United States had recognized; and, secondly, a declaration that the United States would resist the introduction upon the American continent of the monarchical ideas and institutions of Europe.

This was the whole purport of the Monroe doctrine. It was not a doctrine incorporated into the Federal Constitution. It was not a law of Congress. It was only a dictum of the President.

Nearly every President from that day to this has reaffirmed this doctrine, and some of them have slightly enlarged its scope, and now the present occupant of the White House undertakes to stretch it to the alarming dimensions of a doctrine that makes the United States a protector over the Caribbean Islands and the Latin-American republics of South America and a receiver to collect the revenues of these islands and republics and pay them over to the creditors to whom they are indebted.

To this dangerous policy I do not think Congress should permit the President to commit this country.

To increase the salary of our minister resident at Santo Domingo would to some extent be a recognition and approval of the acts of the President in this matter, and the committee, therefore, declined to do so.

There are other omissions from those estimates which were wise and which I will not discuss here to-day.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I observe that the Department of State asks for an increase of about $1,150,000, and that the committee has granted an increase amounting to $260,000. That is a wide difference. What did the State Department want that much money for?

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the Department asked for an increase of $1,150,000 besides the $396,000 necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the consular reform bill. A good deal of this $1,150,000 was for the purpose of building residences for our representatives abroad.

Mr. PALMER. Did the committee take up and consider that subject?

Mr. FLOOD. The committee took up and considered that subject at a former time, and reported to this House a bill carrying an appropriation of $5,000,000 for the purpose of building these residences.

Mr. PALMER. Then there has been a provision made for that purpose?

Mr. FLOOD. There has been a bill reported from the committee for that purpose, but it has not yet passed the House. The other items that go to make up this difference between what the Secretary of State asks for and what the committee reported were increases of salaries that we did not think were justified and other expenditures of a different character that we did not think were justified—such as a larger increase of his contingent fund, a larger increase of the emergency fund, and larger increases all along the line which the committee did not think were justified by the facts presented to it.

Mr. PALMER. As I understand the case, as it stands now, no man can represent this country in a foreign land unless he is a wealthy man. The choice is absolutely restricted to men of great wealth, because nobody can represent the United States in any foreign country as we hope or at least as we demand to be represented unless he has a private fortune that will enable him to expend a great deal more money than he gets in salary. As, for example, the minister to England expends twice as much money for his house rent as he gets in salary. Now, did the gentleman's committee think that it was decent for the people of the United States to send representatives abroad under those circumstances, and did the committee not think it would be better, if we are to send people abroad anyway, not to restrict the choice to those that we are fond of denouncing as the "vulgar rich."

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, the committee considered that very point, and knowing that the Republican party was in power we arranged that a few of these embassies should have such salaries as would enable a man to live on them, and we wanted to see if a Republican Administration would appoint some one else than one of the "vulgar rich" to some of these posts. For instance, the embassy at Mexico was increased to $17,500, and no gentleman will deny that our representative can go there and live upon that salary.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Has not that been the salary for some time?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. We did not increase that any.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. We sent a poor one-armed soldier to represent us at Mexico for the reason that he could live on that salary. The Republican party sent no "vulgar rich" man to that post.

Mr. FLOOD. The gentleman need not get red in the face at my using the expression the "vulgar rich." It was his colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER] who introduced that phrase here. Now, the salary of our minister at Mexico at present is $12,000. This committee has brought in a bill here increasing it to $17,500, so that some poor man may be given an opportunity to accept this position if a Republican President will give it to him.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. The gentleman does not want to misstate the fact. You are mistaken about the particular place; you are talking about some other place.

Mr. FLOOD. I am mistaken. I was thinking of Brazil. We propose to make the salary of the ambassador there $17,500, and the salaries of the ambassadors to Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Japan we propose to increase from $12,000 to $17,500 in order that we need not have one of the "vulgar rich" representing us in these countries. Now, I think, Mr. Chairman, that answers the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We did consider that proposition. We did put the salaries at embassies at an amount at which poor men can accept them and can live on the salaries. We have put into the bill, on page 3, after providing for the salaries for our ambassadors and ministers, this provision:

Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

All salaries that had been appropriated up to that point in the bill were from $7,500 up to $17,500. The committee thought that when a man was getting as much as $7,500 from this Government that he ought to give his entire services to the Government and should not be permitted to draw salaries from some other position which he might be occupying in the Government service. It was necessitated, too, Mr. Chairman, by a matter that was brought to the attention of the committee and the fact that the case that was brought to the attention of the committee was in violation of the statutory law of this country. We have a statute properly enacted, which you will find in the Revised Statutes of the United States, edition 2, section 1763, which reads as follows:

No person who holds an office the salary or annual compensation attached to which amounts to the sum of $2,500 shall receive compensation for discharging the duties of any other office, unless expressly authorized by law.

That is a statute which has been upon the law books of this Government for a number of years. It is a statute which the present Chief Executive of this country has disregarded. He seems not to regard the laws of the land, whether they be constitutional or statutory. We find that in the case of the minister to Panama there is a clear violation of that statute. Congress has fixed the salary of the minister to Panama at $10,000, quite a liberal salary for the dignity and importance of the country; quite a liberal salary when we consider the fact that our ministers to such countries as Norway, Sweden, and Denmark get only $7,500; but this was not considered a very desirable post, and Congress gave a liberal salary to our minister there.

We find that Mr. Charles E. Magoon is a member of the Panama Canal Commission; that he is a member of the executive committee of that Commission; he is also governor of the Canal Zone, and for his services in these positions he receives from the Government of the United States a salary or salaries amounting to $17,500. It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that this was salary enough to give Mr. Magoon; salary enough to give him for his entire time and all of his talents. Well may we conclude this when we recall the fact that the great States of New York and Pennsylvania only pay their governors for their entire time the sum of $10,000 a year, the State of Virginia and other State pay $5,000 a year to their chief executive, and many of them pay less than this, but the governor of this little strip of land 10 miles wide and 54 miles long is paid the princely salary of $17,500. And not satisfied with such a salary for its favorite, the President appoints him our minister to Panama, thus adding $10,000 to the salary which he gets.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Making $27,500 altogether.

Mr. FLOOD. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman sure Mr. Magoon draws the salary of minister to Panama?

Mr. FLOOD. I do not know whether he draws it or not, but I presume he does. I never heard of a Republican official not drawing a salary that he could draw.

Mr. MANN. That is not a very clear——

Mr. FLOOD. Does the gentleman say he does not draw it?

Mr. MANN. My understanding is, he does not; I may be mistaken, but that has been my understanding from the start.

Mr. FLOOD. I never heard that before, Mr. Chairman. I have heard this matter discussed time and again, and I have seen it in the papers time and again, and this is the first time that I have heard it intimated that Mr. Magoon did not draw this salary.

Mr. MANN. It is the first time I have heard it intimated that he did draw it.

Mr. FLOOD. You have seen it in the newspapers that he drew it. I believe he has drawn the $10,000. I believe he is drawing from the Government this minute salaries aggregating $27,500 a year. I believe it is wrong. I believe it is a criminal waste of the people's money. I believe it is a criminal violation of that statute that was placed there in the wisdom of Congress and signed by a former President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. If you found that you were wrong, what would you say?

Mr. FLOOD. If I found that I was wrong, I would say he ought to put somebody else there to discharge these duties.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. And if you found that the basis of your frenzy was ill founded, what would you say?

Mr. FLOOD. I have not shown any frenzy. I have shown a quiet and just indignation at what appears to me to be an outrageous waste of the people's money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I regard this as a particularly outrageous waste of money when we consider the attainments and the ability of Mr. Magoon, as shown by his record in the past. I looked up his history and I found out that he came to the bar in 1882, and that after practicing law seventeen years in his native State, after gathering all the clientage that his ability and his industry justified, he laid down that practice and came here to Washington and accepted a position as the law officer of the Bureau of Insular Affairs at a salary of $4,500 a year. And that position he occupied for a period of five years, showing that Mr. Magoon thought that his true worth and value was $4,500 a year. Less than two years ago he was transferred from that Bureau to the Canal Commission, and in the short space of two years we find that his salary has been so increased that now he is receiving nearly seven times as much as he received when he was here in the Departments at Washington.

This is but an illustration of the criminal and outrageous waste of the public money that is going on upon the Isthmus of Panama. I regard it as a fortunate thing that the Committee on Foreign Affairs put into this bill that provision which, as far as its jurisdiction will permit it, will prevent a repetition of such an incident as this.

I can not leave the discussion of this bill without calling attention to the injustice which is being done the South in the appointment of our diplomatic representatives. When the bill reorganizing the consular service was pending I submitted some remarks in which I pointed out the injustice that was done the South by the present Administration in the appointment of our consular agents. These remarks apply with equal force to the diplomatic service, and while I do not think it is of as much importance to the South that she should have representatives in that service as in the consular service, still it is of importance to her interests that foreign nations should know that the States from the Potomac to the Rio Grande constitute a portion of this country. There are only four representatives from Southern States in the diplomatic service. Three of these come from the State of Kentucky and one from the State of North Carolina. Mr. Leslie Coombs, of Kentucky, is minister to Guatamala, at $10,000 a year; Mr. Brutus Clay, of Kentucky, is minister to Switzerland, at $7,500 a year; Mr. James G. Bailey is secretary to the Costa Rican legation, at a salary of $1,800. and Mr. Richmond Pearson, of North Carolina, is minister to Persia, at a salary of $7,500. The other States have no representation.

Compare the number of representatives in the diplomatic service from the South with those from New York State.

That State has two ambassadors, one to England and one to Austria-Hungary; four ministers, one to Cuba, one to the Netherlands, one to Paraguay, and one to Spain; one diplomatic agent, ten secretaries, one interpreter, and one student interpreter—in all nineteen appointments. The salaries paid to representatives from the entire South amount to $26,800, as against an aggregate of $102,700 paid to those from the State of New York.

Mr. Chairman, let us have no more talk in this House or in the country about Mr. Roosevelt being the President of the whole country. He is a partisan, and a very narrow partisan at that. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SCHEDULE A.

SALARIES OF AMBASSADORS AND MINISTERS.

Ambassadors extraordinary and plenipotentiary to Austria-Hungary, Brazil, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $157,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do not know whether the gentleman who just addressed us is as correct in all of his statements as he was in one that he made here. He just stated to the House that this bill raised the salary of the minister to Mexico from $12,500 to $17,500, and then made an assault upon Governor Magoon, of Panama. I do not know whether Governor Magoon is in receipt of two salaries or not. I do not believe he is, and I apprehend that the gentleman was just as correct in his statement of that matter as he was about the plain, simple proposition which he ought to know about, namely, the salary of the ambassador to Mexico. I hold in my hand the last diplomatic appropriation bill, which provides a salary of $17,500 for the ambassador to Mexico. I commend to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] the reading of the law which he helped to make last year on this subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see here that the salary of the ambassador to Brazil is placed at $17,500. My recollection is that last year it was $12,000. I wish to make the point of order that that is a change in existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The point comes too late, if the gentleman please. The item has been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At the time the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] arose I arose also, and he received the recognition of the Chair. I could not take him off his feet.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman states to the Chair that he had risen and was addressing the Chair with the view of making the point of order, the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was trying to get the attention of the Chair for the purpose of raising the point of order when the gentleman from Illinois was also attempting to get recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point of order is that the salary of $17,500, fixed for the ambassador to Brazil, is a change of existing law.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Mississippi is through, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to submit to the Chair that the existing law is the precise law which can be found in the Constitution of the United States, which vests in the President authority to appoint ambassadors, ministers, and consuls, irrespective of any power in Congress save the one of confirmation by the Senate of the United States. I would also like to submit to the Chair that the act of March 1, 1893, had a provision, not giving the authority to appoint to the President of the United States, for it was already vested in him by the Constitution, construed almost to be mandatory, that when any other country raised the rank of its representative in this country from that of minister to ambassador the President should reciprocate. I should also like to submit to the Chair that the act of 1856, which, while not bearing directly on this subject—and the fact is well recognized in the law—provides that where the ministers and ambassadors are undergoing what is called their "instruction period," because the law reads that their pay does not commence until they reach their posts, it is not provided specifically that they shall be compensated during this period of thirty days, which is known as the "instruction period."

Mr. Chairman, with these three authorities and, more particularly, the right vested in the President by the Constitution of the United States to appoint is the authority for Congress to make this appropriation to carry out the original power vested in him.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman answer one question? Is the grade of the officer to Brazil the same in this bill as it was in the last appropriation bill?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. No, sir. Whether that became a question was a doubt in my mind. If the President has a right to appoint an ambassador or minister, so far as this point of order bears, it has no bearing at all. As a matter of fact, this is a creation by the President and a raising in consonance with the act of March, 1893, and he has raised the rank of our representative at Brazil from that of minister to that of ambassador; hence the entire proprieties of law differ, and the salary should be raised to comport with the dignity, the increased expense, and putting it on the plane with the other ambassadors at $17,500.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is mistaken, I think, in saying that the change in grade of our foreign representative to Brazil has been made this year. The change was made from minister to ambassador last year, and the last appropriation bill contained an appropriation of $12,500 for the ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at Brazil.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is correct; I had forgotten that.

The CHAIRMAN. That being the fact, the Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Chairman, one word. I move to strike out the last word. The salaries of our representatives in Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Japan have all been raised $5,500 a year. I do not desire that the representatives of the Republic abroad should be underpaid, and I think Austria-Hungary, Italy, and Japan should be put in the same class with England, France, and Germany, because they are all among the great powers. Therefore, I will not make the point of order on them, though I make it on Brazil. I will ask how far the Clerk has read?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, Belgium, China, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Spain, at $12,000 each, $60,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order against fixing the salary of the ministers at Belgium and the Netherlands at $12,000 each. The salary that they formerly received was $10,000, each one of them.

Mr. PAYNE. I would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he fix the salary of the ambassador at Brazil. That having gone out, it makes it necessary to offer an mendment inserting $12,500.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will as soon as I get an opportunity to do so; I can not take the gentleman from Mississippi off the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. There is no salary provided in the bill now.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suppose the gentleman will in time make this appropriate motion.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I could not take the floor from the gentleman who raised the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that the provision for Belgium and the Netherlands is a change of existing law.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I submit the same argument as I did before.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I can be heard for a moment, I desire to say this: I do not submit the point of order merely because I can make it. If I regarded this as a justifiable increase, I would not make the point of order. Our ministers to Belgium and to the Netherlands are not put to the expense of the extravagant living rendered necessary, or fancied to be necessary in Paris, Rome, or London. An American citizen can live very well in Belgium as the American representative on $10,000 a year, and ought not to receive any more, either there or at the Netherlands.

Mr. FLOOD. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will first yield to the gentleman from Virginia, who made the first request.

Mr. FLOOD. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that, in reference to the salary of the minister to the Netherlands, it was represented to the committee that, owing to the fact that The Hague was located there, he would have a good deal of expense that otherwise he would not have, and therefore that this increase of salary would be proper.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is what I was going to suggest.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That would be a perfectly good reason for giving a special appropriation for a special purpose for one year.

Mr. FLOOD. That is all it gives it for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, no. I will show you in a moment that it is not. That would be a perfectly good reason for giving an appropriation to the minister to the Netherlands this year for this special purpose, but if this increase goes into the bill, then it becomes existing law for all time hereafter, except by a special law, and everybody with any knowledge of methods of procedure in our National Legislature knows that the minister there will continue to get that sum, whether he has to entertain any Hague court representatives or not, if only the sum be suffered to remain in this bill. Now, as I say, I would be perfectly willing to have an appropriation made to give the minister to the Netherlands this year an increased amount of money, if necessary, but not in this bill, and not in such a way as to entitle him to it for all time to come. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to be heard on the point of order. The gentleman himself, in discussing the point of order, has given his explanation or defense for making the point of order. It seems to me proper for me to reply to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to be heard in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yielded to the gentleman for an interruption. I have not yielded the floor.

Mr. PERKINS. I have a right to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has a right to be heard when the gentleman from Mississippi yields the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not understand the gentleman. I thought he was making the point that he had a right to argue the merits of the case. Of course he has a right to do that under the guise of talking to the point of order, if he so desires.

Mr. PERKINS. That is exactly what the gentleman from Mississippi has done. He has discussed the merits of the question in discussing the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certainly, and I accord exactly that right to the gentleman from New York. I thought the gentleman was trying to get beyond the point of order and onto the merits of the matter and I did not wish the point of order to be cut off.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly not.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Mississippi permit me to ask him a question? He says he is perfectly willing that this amount of money shall be voted to the Netherlands for this year. Now, the court of arbitration is settled there not only for this year, but for every year, and in the judgment of the committee there will scarcely be a year in the future when some case of arbitrament will not be submitted to that court. Hence the expense of our representative there will be continuous. For that reason our representative will be obliged to entertain not only those who sit as members of the court, but the distinguished jurists who practice before the court; and it would certainly be proper that our representative should entertain them. It was in view of that fact, that cases will probably come before that court not only this year, but every year, that we thought it proper to raise this salary to this not very extravagant figure. More than that, Mr. Chairman, I doubt if the salary will anywhere near cover the expense that our representative there will be put to annually from the very fact of the establishment of this court. And as the gentleman says he is willing that the increase shall be made for this year——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman, in that connection, tell me why he also raised the salary of the minister to Belgium?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The argument that was submitted to the committee was that the expense of living at Belgium had increased quite as much as at Paris, and that an increased number of Americans pass through there and call at the legation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There is no Hague situation in Belgium, is there?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Not the same thing. The gentleman admits that he will not object to this increase this year at the Netherlands, and so I appeal to him to allow——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would not object to an appropriation for the specific purpose of entertaining the American delegates to The Hague or something of that sort, but I would object to this addition to the salary.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in that connection I think there is a good deal of very un-republican talk about salaries. I am using the word "un-republican," of course, not in a partisan sense, because if I were using it in that sense my observation would be totally inapplicable, as Republican with a capital R is a synonym for extravagant. I think there is a good deal of very un-republican talk and thought, too, about how men who represent the American Republic abroad should live. There is no reason why they should live in any way except in the proper condition of an American gentleman, and an American gentleman can certainly live upon the salaries that these people now have. If they wish to outshine this man or that, or if their wives and daughters foolishly wish to outshine other diplomatic wives or daughters, that is another question. The American Republic is not outshining anybody, and they would stand in a better attitude if instead of wishing to outshine people they tried to set an example to snobs and the nouveaux riches of how little money they could live upon with honor and with dignity.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to state to the gentleman from Mississippi that one of the ablest ambassadors we ever had at the Court of St. James tried that experiment. Mr. Bayard tried to live as much within his means as he could, only in such a way as an American gentleman should, and only to return the actual hospitalities which every decent man ought to do, and he impoverished himself, so that it is well known that when he died he left very little property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He did not have much, if any more, or as much, maybe, when he went there.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. That is true; but he had less when he came back. Mr. Bayard tried to live just on the plan that the gentleman from Mississippi is now advocating—simply, decently, quietly as an American gentleman, performing his whole duty—and he could not do it, and no man can.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then we should abolish the office.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Mississippi, with all his learning and knowledge of parliamentary law, state as a justification and excuse for not raising the point of order against this raise, when, as I understand, he concedes that for this year at least it would be proper that this increase should be made; that if we should make it for one year it would therefore become an established law, and that the point of order could not be again raised. Now, Mr. Chairman, as little as I know about parliamentary law, I have not sat here for five years without having it decided——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, the gentleman from New York has misunderstood me.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman said that if this was put in this year it would become the law, because this bill would fix the salary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Undoubtedly it would practically fix the salary. What I said was, taking it for granted that it could be established that he would need it for this year, and even if that could be established I would not be willing to give him the salary. I do not know whether he would need it or not; if he did, I would be willing to give it to him.

Mr. PERKINS. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is wrong in thinking that allowing $12,000 to the minister at Belgium makes it established law for any other year. As I understand the law of this House, to become established law there must be a legislative provision. If we allow a man $12,000 a year, his salary having been $10,000, it gives the gentleman from Mississippi the same right to raise his point of order against it next year that he has this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the following provision read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the absence of a general law fixing a salary the amount appropriated in the last appropriation bill has been held to be the legal salary, although in violation of the general rule that the appropriation bill makes law only for the year.

Mr. PERKINS. Well, Mr. Chairman, speaking, then, to the point of order, and answering the argument that the gentleman made, the Committee on Foreign Affairs certainly tried to exercise all economy that was consistent with what I do not hesitate to call decency. For instance, take this clause: "The salaries of the ministers to the Argentine Republic and to Spain are allowed at $12,000." Does the gentleman claim that there is any right or reason why the salaries of the ministers to the Argentine Republic and Spain should have been fixed with his consent and with the consent of the House and should remain at a sum $2,000 higher than the minister to Belgium and the minister to The Hague? I do not believe any more than the gentleman from Mississippi in any undue splendor or display, but the gentleman knows, and everybody knows, that for a man to live with reasonable and proper regard for official decorum in this day and generation, with the prices that now prevail in any European capital, for $10,000 is impossible.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi knows no such thing.

Mr. PERKINS. Then the gentleman from Mississippi knows less than I supposed he did.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi may know much less than the gentleman from New York imagines he could possibly know, but that does not prove anything.

Mr. POU rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. PERKINS. I will yield.

Mr. POU. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], and that is this: If Representatives of the American people can live here in the city of Washington for $5,000, why is it that representatives of our country abroad can not live on $10,000 a year?

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have known some Representatives of the American people who live with the utmost modesty and in the utmost simplicity and who are unable, I regret to say, to make ends meet with $5,000 a year here in the city of Washington.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] that he might at least trust the Committee on Foreign Affairs to some extent in this matter. He concedes that during the next fiscal year there will be some extraordinary expenses attached to the legation at The Hague.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I concede there may be. I do not know.

Mr. FLOOD. And if that is the case and this additional $2,000 will be proper this year, with a proper argument before the Foreign Affairs Committee he might trust it to reduce the amount next year, because here is an instance in the bill where that committee did make a reduction. The minister to Cuba during the present year is drawing a salary of $12,000 a year. This bill reduces the salary to $10,000 a year, and I think the gentleman can trust the committee to investigate these various matters and try to get a fair salary and a salary that is commensurate with the expenses that will be incurred at the time that the committee is considering the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say just one word more for the benefit of the gentleman from Mississippi. The Foreign Affairs Committee unanimously, every Democratic member as well as every Republican member, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] who has just spoken, in considering the importance and the proper and necessary and reasonable and rational expenses of these posts, saw fit to reduce the salary of the minister to Cuba from $12,000 to $10,000, and saw fit to increase the salaries of the ministers to Belgium and the Netherlands from $10,000 to $12,000. It seems to me that the unanimous judgment of the judicious and economic members of the Democratic membership of that committee might have some weight even with my friend from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, one word. The gentleman has called the attention of the House to the fact that the ministers at the Argentine, at China, and at Spain are receiving this salary which he desires to give to the ministers at Belgium and the Netherlands. He has asked me if I can see any difference between them. As far as all of them except China are concerned, I frankly confess that I do not. We ought to have a high-priced man at Peking. If I had the opportunity to make a point of order whereby the Argentine and Spain could be reduced to $10,000, I would do it in a moment. I have no sort of doubt about the propriety of not making an increase in Belgium and very little about that at the Netherlands. I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in order to keep the bill in shape I move the following amendment:

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "fifty-seven" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty."
Line 2, page 2, strike out the word "five."

Mr. Chairman, that is to correct the total, due to the fact that we have struck out the salary at Brazil.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I also offer the following amendment:

Page 2, insert between lines 2 and 3 the following:
"Ambassador extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Brazil, $12,000."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to make an amendment to change the total.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the salaries at Belgium and at the Netherlands were stricken out and the salary at Brazil has been inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS] now desires to correct the totals in the same paragraph.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to change the total from $60,000, so as to conform to the point of order which takes out the Netherlands and Luxemburg.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. And that the Netherlands and Luxemburg be inserted in the same place as heretofore.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. But we have not yet reached that.

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], in a very vehement speech, charged Mr. Magoon, a representative on the Isthmian Canal Commission, with drawing a double salary of $17,500 in connection with his work as representative on the Canal Commission and $10,000 as minister or representative of this country to the Canal Zone. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. FOSTER] communicated with the Department of State and I communicated with the Secretary of War by telephone, and they both denied that Mr. Magoon received any salary whatever as a representative of this country as a minister, and that the only salary that he did receive or has ever received was the $17,500 as governor of Panama. I make this statement in order that it may be corrected in the RECORD and that it will not go out to the country that this man receives or ever has received other than the $17,500 salary. I commend to my friend an investigation of facts before he so vehemently denounces public officials. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I wish to make a brief reply to the gentleman from Missouri, intending not to use my five minutes, but only one or two sentences. I wish to assure the gentleman from Missouri—who apparently is apprehensive, or his fears have been excited, I know not how and I know not where—that nobody has any more thought of breaking down the policy of this Government in reference to the exclusion of Chinese coolies than we have of abolishing any other part of the established and recognized law of the land. I will suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, with all his vigilance, which I entirely commend, that if the Department of Commerce, if the Bureau of Immigration—whose zeal certainly nobody has charged with being insufficient, but whose zeal has been sometimes charged as being excessive—if they should think there could be changes made in the method of examination, in the mode of entrance, that would be for everybody's benefit and nobody's harm; that would not admit one cooly not entitled to come into the country, but would perhaps sometimes save from unnecessary discourtesy those who by the law of the land and the consent of the gentleman from Missouri are entitled to come into the country, that such legislation certainly would meet his approval, and such legislation only will he meet with as reported from this committee.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the gentleman a question before he sits down.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. PERKINS. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do you believe it is wise to turn over to the consuls in China the privilege of certifying to these various Chinamen who are coming over here, as to their character and calling, and taking that as evidence?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not, and I should not for one moment approve of a bill that would put that matter entirely in the hands of the consuls.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am very glad to hear it; I supposed you would be of that opinion——

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee and as the author of the Foster bill, I wish to corroborate everything that has been said by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] and so to allay any fears that our good friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] may have in reference to the Chinese-exclusion law. There never yet was a law that could not be improved, and it has been thought by some people and some officials who have this law to administer, who have been very industrious in administering it during past years, that amendments could be made which would make it more effective. And we are considering some of their suggestions. In this connection, Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of our good friend from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] to another error which he insisted on making.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Before you make that statement, let me ask you the same question I did him. Do not these bills and this propaganda that is going on about the Chinese now look to the proposition that whenever one of our consuls in China certifies that—whatever his name is—does not belong to the cooly class on that certificate he will be admitted to the United States?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Not at all. It has been suggested by the Commissioner of Immigration that a more rigid examination should be had before our consuls in China.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There has been a flood of literature of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. No. The suggestion came from the Bureau of Immigration.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is the committee considering your bill now?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Well, just now——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not mean just this minute.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I am not on the subcommittee to which these bills were referred. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS] is the chairman of that subcommittee, and I will let him answer your inquiry.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the gentleman that we are considering the bill introduced by Mr. FOSTER, a bill introduced by Mr. DENBY, and a large number of propositions submitted by the Department of Commerce and Labor, and from them all we hope to evolve something that may ameliorate the service in a way that will meet the approval even of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] as to the Chinese.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Now, does not every one of these bills look to the certification of the consuls as to the Chinese?

Mr. PERKINS. My friend is mistaken in that. The certificate is signed by the consul now. The present law provides for a certificate made in China and viséed by the consul in China. There is also an examination at the American port by the officers of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and the certificate of the consul is not conclusive. It has been suggested that the examination to be made by the officers of the Department of Commerce and Labor, which is a requisite under any bill that has ever been suggested, might in some cases be more profitably made in every way in the interest of investigating the facts as well as in the convenience of anyone who was to be examined at certain treaty ports in China. It has never been suggested that the visé or the certificate of the consul alone should entitle the man to admission, and if it were suggested I can assure the gentleman such a bill would never be reported favorably from the committee as at present constituted.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly, if I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from New York whether I am correctly informed in supposing that the decision of the officer of the Bureau of Commerce and Labor is a final decision, not reviewable by the court?

Mr. PERKINS. That is a very broad question. In certain cases it can be reviewed by the court. In certain cases they have held that the findings of the officers of the Department of Commerce and Labor and of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor were final upon the questions of fact, and if the disposition of the question of fact disposed of the appeal, as the finding of a jury often disposes of a question of fact and so the conclusions of law necessarily follow, to that extent their decisions are sometimes practically final.

Mr. SHERLEY. Has that gone to the extent of refusing the writ of habeas corpus to one claiming to be a citizen of the United States and who has been refused admission by the service?

Mr. PERKINS. It has not gone to the extent of denying the writ of habeas corpus, but it has gone to the extent of saying the finding of fact is final.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, I understand he could sue out the writ, but has the writ been denied because the court could not look into the question of fact?

Mr. PERKINS. There is that one case to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask whether the committee has been considering the advisability of changing the law that prevents such consideration of the facts by a court whether——

Mr. PERKINS. We have considered it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PERKINS. I would state, in answer to the gentleman from Kentucky, that that, as well as several other questions in reference to the administration of the Chinese-exclusion law, has been considered and is being considered. They are, as the gentleman can in a moment see, both of importance and delicacy. We are certainly considering them. What decision we may reach I can not say; but there are involved in that consideration—as, for instance, the decision in the Ju Toy case—questions of great legal importance and great legal delicacy that must be dealt with with care.

Mr. SHERLEY. My purpose in interrogating the gentleman was simply to call attention to this condition, because it seemed to me that was a rather dangerous condition of law that permitted a finding of facts as to citizenship by the officials of the Department of Labor and prevented them from being reviewable by a court.

Mr. PERKINS. I entirely appreciate the force of the gentleman's statement.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just one word to correct my friend the gentleman from Virginia, who insists on his statement that we had increased the salary of the minister to Mexico. Now, if he had just read the first page of our report he would have found out the mistake, and that the salary there has been $17,500 for some years.

Mr. FLOOD. I move to strike out the last word. I did make a mistake in saying that the ambassador to Mexico received only $12,000 a year. He receives $17,500. I do not know how I made the mistake, as I have a statement of it here before me, but I did, and that is all about it. But I did not make a mistake about the Panama minister; I do not care how many telephone messages come from the State Department or the War Department, it does not show that Mr. Magoon is not going to draw the $10,000 salary as minister to Panama. Now, who makes any statement from the War Department, saying he is not going to draw his $10,000 as salary as minister to Panama?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I did not ask if he was going to draw it. I asked if he was receiving any salary from the State Department as minister, and was informed that he was not.

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, that is just a subterfuge to fool this House and the American people. Mr. Magoon was appointed minister to Panama on the 7th of July, 1905, less than a year ago, and if he is not drawing his salary, there is no guaranty that he is not going to do so. He can draw it within two years from this time; and I do not believe there is a man on the floor of this House who does not believe that within that time he will draw that salary.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I certainly can say that there is one man who does not believe he will.

Mr. FLOOD. I believe that he will draw his salary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Vermont will, I suppose, admit that the appropriation is made of $10,000.

Mr. FLOOD. I was coming to that point.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And he will admit that Mr. Magoon has been appointed minister to Panama; and therefore Mr. Magoon may at any time claim that salary and the Government can not refuse to pay it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not concede it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He certainly has the right to demand it and draw it.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to say this to the gentleman from Mississippi: That it was this peculiar situation that influenced the judgment of the committee in putting this provision into this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Which was precisely right.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. That if anybody draws a salary as minister he can not draw any other salary from the United States Government; and I think as the committee has seen the wisdom of this provision and put it into the bill there is no good object in all this debate.

Mr. FLOOD. I have commended the provision. I simply insist that I was right in reference to the criticism of the appointment of the minister to Panama. When the gentleman from Indiana comes here with information from the State Department he should be full handed and be able to tell us not only that Mr. Magoon has not drawn that salary, but he will not draw it.

Mr. WATSON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FLOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. The Secretary of War stated to me that Mr. Magoon not only did not draw the salary, but he had no intention of drawing the salary, and that it was against existing law, and that he could not draw the salary if he desired to do so.

Mr. FLOOD. That is the very point I made, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the gentleman from Virginia understood the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. FLOOD. I think I do.

Mr. Chairman, I said it was against existing law. I said it was an illegal act of the Chief Executive, and for that reason that the Committee on Foreign Affairs put that provision into this bill. No one here knows whether or not Mr. Magoon will draw that salary. I for one believe he will draw it.

Mr. PALMER. Can he draw it without violating existing law?

Mr. FLOOD. Yes; he can.

Mr. MANN. You just stated that he could not.

Mr. PALMER. You said just a moment ago that he could not.

Mr. FLOOD. I said he could not be appointed to the position without violating existing law. If I said he could not draw the salary, I did not measure my words. The point I made was that he could not be appointed to this position without violating the law.

Mr. PALMER. That is another mistake you made.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman quote the section of the statute which he has just looked at.

Mr. FLOOD. I have read the statute, and I believe I am mistaken about it. It is section 1763 which would prohibit Mr. Magoon from drawing the salary as minister while he is drawing other salaries which amount to $2,500 or more, and with the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] that the Secretary of War says the salary as minister was not paid to Mr. Magoon on account of this statute, I must admit that I am wrong so far as the Panama salary is concerned; and if he is not to draw it, why not strike it out of the bill?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the gentleman's last question. We should not strike it out, because there may be another person minister to Panama next year, and we want a provision for the salary for such minister.

Now, I was going to reply to the gentleman's other reflection upon myself, but he has confessed that he was wrong entirely about it and that I was right. So it is unnecessary for me to reply to that at all. He said he agreed with the statement of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] as to what the Secretary of War had said. He did not mean to say that, but he meant to say something else, that Mr. Magoon could not hold two offices at the same time. Now he states that the statement made by the Secretary of War was correct, and that he could not draw this additional salary under the law.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Regular order!

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I want the regular order. I think it is about time we were taking out, and I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I should like to finish this paragraph, I will say to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. GARNER. For that purpose I withdraw my motion, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the motion to strike out the last word. When the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] made his outrageous attack upon Governor Magoon I called his attention to the fact that he might be mistaken; that having some knowledge of those matters myself, I had never heard that Governor Magoon drew two salaries or that such a proposition had ever been made. The gentleman, with a considerable degree of rankness, it seems to me, talked for campaign purposes, denouncing the action of Governor Magoon in very strong language, which was utterly unjustifiable unless he knew his facts. Now, the truth is, Mr. Chairman, that before Governor Magoon was appointed governor of the Panama Zone, Governor Davis was the governor, and Mr. Barrett was the minister. It was ascertained not only that there was the expense of a governor and a minister, but that two men there, dealing both of them with the Panama Republic, were not as satisfactory as one man would be; that it was far better, apparently, for our Government to deal with the Panama Republic through one source, rather than through two sources. And Minister Barrett, himself recognizing the situation, recommended that the place of minister to Panama be left unfilled. When the President appointed Governor Magoon a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission and assigned him as governor of the Panama Zone, the provision which the President had already put into the rules and regulations for the Isthmian Canal Commission provided that not one of them should draw any additional salary in any way or from any source whatever. If the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD] had desired to know the facts, he could have learned them from many men on the floor of this House. He could have ascertained, at a moment's notice, either through the Department of State or the Department of War, or through the Isthmian Canal Commission; but apparently without caring for the truth in the matter he makes an outrageous charge against a man who is, in his knowledge of the law, the peer of any man in this country; a man who has demonstrated his capacity as the adviser of the Insular Bureau, demonstrated his capacity as a great and wise counselor, and in his capacity as governor of the Canal Zone has demonstrated his ability to preserve harmony and good relations between our Republic and the little Republic of Panama. Instead of deserving the denunciation of partisans, Governor Magoon should receive the appreciation of his countrymen without regard to party. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of suggesting to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is after 5 o'clock.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to complete this section of the bill before we rise.

The Clerk read as follows:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Chile, Colombia, Cuba, Panama, Peru, Turkey, and Venezuela, at $10,000 each, $70,000.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 8, before the word "Chile," I move to insert the word "Belgium;" and after the word "Cuba," insert "the Netherlands and Luxembourg." And I ask the Clerk to be authorized to correct the totals.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was considered; and the amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving any other salary from the United States Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee a question for information.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to reserve a point of order on that paragraph until we have an explanation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This language provides that no salary herein appropriated shall be paid to any official receiving another salary from the United States Government. Now, if that is already existing law, what is the necessity for it being inserted in this bill?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. This was inserted to cover the case about which we have heard so much—the case of Mr. Magoon.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We have been informed that existing law covered that.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. This is a little different, and for this reason: He was appointed minister after he was appointed governor and a member of the Commission, and this was inserted so as to insure that he could not draw any salary as minister. I think the gentleman will see that it was intended to cover this particular case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, I do not yet comprehend that; if it be existing law that nobody shall draw two salaries for two different offices, then this is not a necessary provision. According to the views of the chairman of the committee, it could not possibly be a change of existing law, as it would appear to be in the opinion of the gentleman from Illinois who has just made the point of order. I confess I am a bit woolgathering about this. Perhaps the gentleman from Vermont can explain it.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I think it is a mistake, Mr. Chairman. I did not understand that there was this existing law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to ask the gentleman from Vermont something else. I have not the statutes before me, but in the statute in regard to the Panama Canal Zone and the Panama Canal we made some exceptions, it seems to me; I have an indefinite impression or a vague recollection about it, and it may have applied only to Army officers, but it seems to me that we made in that act some exceptions to the general law about a man's holding two offices. Does the gentleman from Vermont remember about it?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. I do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If we did make any exception there, then this provision is necessary.

Mr. HINSHAW. It can do no harm, anyway.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that, but on that supposition it is not a change of existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I may say to the gentleman that so far as the original Panama act is concerned, it does not provide for anybody drawing two salaries. It does provide that the President may detail officers from the Army or the Navy, and if he does do so the salary which shall be allowed to that officer by the Isthmian Commission shall have deducted from it the salary that he receives as an officer in the Army or Navy; so that they do not receive two salaries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That probably is the provision that I had in my mind, though perhaps nearly backwards.

Mr. MANN. They are not allowed to receive two salaries, but they receive the Army salary and the additional amount which they would receive if they were civilians.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They merely receive the civilian salary if it is the highest, and if the military salary is the highest they receive that?

Mr. MANN. Yes, but they do not receive the two. Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that the point of order is not good; it is a limitation, although I can see no object in having it put in, if it is put in to cover the Magoon case, because it is not only covered by law, but it is covered by the rules and regulations established by the President in relation to the Panama Canal Zone.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a statement about this. In the urgent deficiency bill passed at the beginning of this session, or early in the session, it carried a provision which prevented the payment of but one salary to any member of the Commission. Secretary Taft, before the Committee on Appropriations yesterday, when he was asked the question whether Mr. Magoon was receiving a salary as governor of the Canal Zone and also a salary as minister, stated positively that he was receiving no salary either as governor of the Canal Zone or as minister; that he was receiving only his salary as a Commissioner, and that that salary was fixed by the President of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman ought not to unintentionally misstate Secretary Taft. Governor Magoon receives a salary of $17,500 a year. If he were merely a Commissioner he would receive but $7,500 a year.

Mr. TAWNEY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is no limitation fixed by law.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand.

Mr. TAWNEY. Upon the discretion of the President as to the amount of salary he can fix for a member of the Commission, and the urgent deficiency bill expressly provided that no Commissioner could receive any salary for any office he might fill other than the salary of Commissioner, but the amount of that salary is in the discretion of the President. Now, the President has fixed his salary as a Commissioner at $17,500.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but he fixed it at that rate because he is governor of the Canal Zone.

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not know that. He is the only Commissioner serving in the Zone. He has fixed the salary of Mr. Shonts as chairman of the Commission at $30,000.

Mr. MANN. Because he is chairman of the Commission. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on that proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I wish also to be heard on that proposition.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made a motion to strike out that proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman was not recognized for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I think I am beginning to understand this affair. My intellect has been rather muddy about it. It appears that the law provides a salary "for the minister of Panama" at $10,000. I find that here on page 2, and it is not a change of the law hitherto prevailing. It appears by the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the salary of "a Commissioner" is $7,500. The sum total of these salaries would be $17,500. It appears by the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], as well as by the admission of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLOOD], after reading the statute, that there is an existing statute which prevents any one man from obtaining two different salaries for two different offices. That is, Governor Magoon could not draw a salary as minister for $10,000 and a salary as Commissioner for $7,500, making a total of $17,500, without a violation of the law; but it appears, then, by the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] that Governor Magoon is now receiving a sum of money which accidentally happens to be these two sums added together, and he is receiving it under an act "to govern" the Panama slip, giving discretion to the President which is not limited. The President can fix whatever salary he pleases for a Commissioner, and the President, in his discretion, being desirous not to violate existing law, could not permit Governor Magoon to draw $10,000 as minister to Panama and then $7,500 more as a Commissioner, $7,500 being the ordinary Commissioner's salary. He therefore fixed Mr. Mogoon's salary as a Commissioner, acting "governor," at $17,500, which Magoon draws as Commissioner, and which merely happens to be the sum of these two added together.

I know nothing about those facts; but this is the evidence that has come to me upon the floor here in the last three-quarters of an hour, and if the evidence is correct, then what I have said appears to be a statement of the case. I do not make this statement for the purpose of criticism, and I make no criticism, but having been myself muddy and unclear upon the proposition, having had an awfully hard time to understand it, I thought I would see if I had gotten it right, so that the House and the country might know.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to say that Governor Magoon gets the same salary that Governor Davis got when he was both governor and minister, and that Governor Davis's salary was fixed long ago?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The salary of the governor before Governor Magoon was appointed was $17,500?

Mr. MANN. The salary of Governor Davis, as member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, while he was acting as governor of Panama, was $17,500.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did he get it under that law or under the designation of the President as governor of Panama or as Commissioner?

Mr. MANN. He acted as Commissioner; he was a member of the Commission, assigned as governor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then it appears by the latest information, which is absolutely correct, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is one of the men in this House who never makes a statement without knowing what he is talking about, that not only has Governor Magoon received this queerly aggregated sum, queerly equaling these two salaries of the two offices which he holds, but his predecessor received it also?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a statement?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to say that Governor Magoon is the only member of the Commission who devotes all of his time to the work of the canal and the administration of the Canal Zone on the Isthmus. The other Commissioners, except the chairman, namely, the four Commissioners, including the three engineers of the War and Navy Departments, are merely consulting Commissioners. They receive salaries of $7,500, or the difference between their Army and Navy pay and $7,500. They are not serving on the Isthmus of Panama, but are serving here in connection with the work of the Commission in an advisory capacity, while Governor Magoon is spending all of his time on the canal, lives on the Isthmus, and is devoting his time and energy to the construction of the canal and to the administration of the government in the Canal Zone. He is also performing the duties as minister to that country from the United States. I think it is because of his exceptional services that he is receiving the salary fixed by the President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I am not arguing the merits or official excellencies of Governor Magoon. I want to get this exactly right, and I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question in order to get it exactly right and see if I understand it correctly. There is no such thing as governor of the Panama strip by statute, is there?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; but it is claimed he is governor de facto.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the President designates one of the Commissioners as governor.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman remembers, I suppose, what is commonly known as the "Spooner Act," which is a mere repetition of the act providing for a government for the Louisiana purchase——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I deny that. Yes; I remember the statute.

Mr. TAWNEY. We reenacted that and made it applicable to the Canal Zone. That law has expired. Under that law the President designated a governor of the Canal Zone.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And notwithstanding the expiration of the law and the absence of legal authority, the President keeps it up. Now, this is what I am getting at; the only officers designated in the act are Commissioners, are they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. There is——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean in the Spooner Act.

Mr. MANN. The President could name anybody he pleased.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know; but is there any statute which designates specifically a governor and fixes his salary?

Mr. MANN. The only statute, I will say to the gentleman, authorizes the President through such officials as he might appoint to govern the Canal Zone. That statute expired by limitation, and the President continued the government which was organized under that statute.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, then, what I am getting at is this: There is no such official known to the law specifically as governor of the Panama Canal strip?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman is not exactly correct there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a minute—but there is a general law under which the President could govern the canal strip by designation simply. Is that correct?

Mr. TAWNEY. Not entirely; you could not say "no person known to the law," but no person known to the law of this country except Mr. Magoon, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, is by designation of the President the governor of the Canal Zone.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, there is under our statute law such an officer as minister to Panama, drawing $10,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not drawing $10,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He is not?

Mr. TAWNEY. He is not drawing a cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is a mistake, then, of the bill I hold in my hand.

Mr. TAWNEY. He may be authorized to draw it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I mean authorized to draw it. I will take that, if the gentleman understands it that way, but I mean such an officer by name as "minister to Panama" is authorized by a statute law, whose salary as fixed by statute law is $10,000. There is also such an officer, whose name and salary is fixed by statute law as "Commissioner," drawing $7,500. There is not statutory——

Mr. TAWNEY. Again I desire to correct the gentleman. There is no law fixing the salary of a Commissioner at $7,500.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there none?

Mr. TAWNEY. None whatever. That is entirely within the discretion of the President of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then we are gradually getting it; we are going to have it nicely understood in a minute. There is no statute law fixing the salary of the Commission. There is a statutory law fixing the power of the President to appoint Commissioners and to fix their salaries, and under that general power to govern the canal he also gives one of these Commissioners the title and authority of governor and calls him by that name. Now, then, he fixes by his own ipse dixit—using the word respectfully, because the law gives him the right of ipse dixit, and it is legal—he fixes the salary of the Commissioners at $7,500, and then he fixes the salary of a particular Commissioner, whether Davis or Magoon, who is to act as governor, at $17,500, and then it merely accidentally happens that that is the same salary that Magoon would have drawn as "minister to Panama" and "Canal Commissioner," except that if he had pocketed the identical sum he now pockets, but had pocketed it as the sum of the two salaries of the two offices he holds, it would have been in violation of law, and he could have been impeached.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, did the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] make a motion to strike out this clause?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; I did not.

Mr. PERKINS. All right. It should not be stricken out, because it is entirely right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My motion was to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraw his point of order?

Mr. PERKINS. The point of order has been withdrawn.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad, $40,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to get some information from the chairman of the committee. I think I will probably withdraw it.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not make a motion to strike out the last word and be in order?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the point of order. I want to ask the chairman of the committee why that $5,000 increase was made?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will say that the statement of the Department shows that on the 31st of March they were $3,000 behindhand, having no fund in hand whatever with which to pay the salaries of the chargés d'affaires ad interim. I suppose that the gentleman understands that under the law when a minister leaves his post the secretary receives during his absence half of the salary of the minister. That has been used. There has generally been a deficit. The State Department asked an increase of $10,000, and we only allowed them $5,000, and when I state to the gentleman the condition of the exchequer of the State Department to-day——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. One minute, please. I want to make an amendment. I move to strike out, in line 9, "and diplomatic officers," and, in line 10, "abroad."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 9 and 10, strike out "and diplomatic officers abroad."

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will ask that the Clerk be authorized to change the total.

Mr. PAYNE. Let the committee change it. Why not offer an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "five," in lines 11 and 12——

The CHAIRMAN. Lines 11 and 12 have not been read yet. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total, $467,500.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the total, $467,500, so as to read "$458,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 19264—the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill—and had come to no conclusion thereon.

PURCHASE OF MATERIAL AND EQUIPMENT FOR PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the joint resolution be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That purchases of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine whether he expects the joint resolution to lead to any extended debate. I am heartily in favor of the measure just read, but I had intended to call up to-day the bill making appropriations for the expenses of the Post-Office Department. I shall have to leave Washington at the end of this week, to be gone for a week or ten days. If the joint resolution is, as I have been informed, likely to lead to a long and desultory discussion, extending over a day, or it may be two days, I can not give the Senate any assurance that I can be present myself to present the Post-Office appropriation bill before the middle of June. If the Senate is willing to go on with the bill in charge of some other member of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, I shall not object, but, of course, personally I would prefer to be here and to be in a position to expalin to the Senate any items or any questions which may arise in connection with the bill.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, it is very important that the joint resolution should be considered. It was reported last week, and on the request of some Senators went over. It ought to be passed. I can not control the Senate or control the debate. I see the force of passing the appropriation bills, but if I can get up the joint resolution, then I will see. I do not expect to occupy the day upon it, but we will see how it runs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. MORGAN. I object to its consideration.

Mr. HALE. I move, then, that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution which has been read.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand that the joint resolution will be subject to objection if it becomes evident that it is going to lead to continued discussion extending over a day or so?

Mr. HALE. I have stated that if I find it leads to a long debate and interferes with appropriation bills I shall not ask that it occupy the time of the Senate, although it is a very important measure.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I withdraw any opposition to proceeding to its consideration.

Mr. HALE. Let us go on with it for a time and see how it runs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 60) providing for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] will take the floor.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I should like to have the joint resolution read again. It is very short.

The Secretary again read the joint resolution.

Mr. RAYNER. I shall occupy the Senate only about ten minutes or so upon this measure.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator from Maryland yield to me?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I offer the following amendment to follow the text of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the joint resolution the following words:

Carriage of such material shall be exclusively in American vessels, unless the President shall deem the rates asked by American vessel owners unreasonable or extortionate.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. RAYNER. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Is it in order to offer an amendment to the joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an amendment pending, just offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HALE. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to withhold his amendment for the present.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will do so, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire withholds his amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. I send up an amendment and ask that it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment sent to the desk by the Senator from Florida.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the words "extortionate or" in line 7 of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I do not think I would occupy the time of the Senate at all if it were not for the fact that one of the largest corporations in the State of Maryland is the beneficiary of the joint resolution, and as I am opposed to the measure, I thought it proper under the circumstances to give my reasons for opposing it.

The Maryland Steel Company is located in the State of Maryland. It is a great industry, employing many mechanics and workmen in the prosecution of its business, and we are all, in the city and State that I have the honor in part of representing upon this floor, deeply interested in its success and prosperity. I am inclined to think that upon the ground set forth in the Senate document that has been reported with this resolution it should have been awarded the contract therein referred to. I believe that upon the merits it is entitled to this contract, and that upon a careful calculation it will be found that the cost to the Government would ultimately have been less if the offer of this company had been accepted. I desire particularly to advert to the fact that if these seagoing dredges are built in a foreign country it will be doubtful whether it is permissible under the law to use them in the waters of the United States, if they last beyond the period of the construction of the canal, while if they are built in the United States they can be of subsequent service to the Government. If this resolution passes, the contract for the dredges will be awarded to the Maryland Steel Company, as it is conceded to be the lowest American bidder.

I can not, however, vote for the resolution. I can not change the principles in which I believe and for which I have contended during the whole of my public career for the purpose of securing a contract for an enterprise in my State, or because it confers a benefit upon its citizens. I have always advocated the doctrine that the people of this country have the right to purchase every article of consumption in the cheapest and most desirable markets of the world, and I must apply to the Government the same rule that I apply to its citizens. It is impossible for me to shape my political principles or policies according to two different standards and to advocate for the advantage of my own State a governmental principle inconsistent with the principle that I contend for in every other State of the Union.

It is true that the tariff is not directly involved in this discussion, but the theory upon which it rests is indirectly and collaterally affected. I have always favored a tariff for revenue and not a tariff for protection. I have been against a prohibitive tariff, because it compels the consumer to purchase in a home market at any price that may dictated to him by the monopoly that manufactures the product and controls the supply. The principle is the same in this case. The money of the Government is the money of the people. We have no right to take the money of the people and expend it in a market where it possesses the smallest amount of purchasing power. This is robbing the Treasury, and however important the advantage may be to my constituency, it is impossible for me to abandon a great principle upon any such paltry ground as this. The Democratic party, in my opinion, can not afford to do so unless it is prepared to go down to its irretrievable defeat and doom.

The American Protective Tariff League, in an article which I send to the desk and ask to have read, has strongly indorsed this scheme.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That materials and supplies used in the construction and equipment of the Panama Canal should be furnished by American industry and labor, and not by foreigners, is the emphatic judgment of the employers of this country.

Three thousand of these employers, represented in the eleventh annual convention of the National Association of Manufacturers, have appealed to the Congress of the United States to order and direct that the people who are to pay for the canal shall have the first call in providing the necessaries for building and operating the canal. The appeal takes the form of the following resolution, unanimously adopted May 15, 1906:

"Whereas the Panama Canal, one of the greatest public enterprises of modern times, will be constructed and equipped by the United States Government, and paid for with American dollars drawn from American labor and industry: Be it

"Resolved, That the National Association of Manufacturers, in annual convention assembled at New York City, earnestly requests that American materials be exclusively used in the construction and equipment of the canal."

It is beyond question that this request voices the sentiment of the producing interests of the United States. When we say "producing interests" we include the men who work for wages as well as the men who pay wages.

Employed and employers are equally concerned in having the $500,000,000 that will probably be spent in the next twenty years in constructing a sea-level canal paid to American labor and not to foreign labor.

They want that $500,000,000 kept in this country, and distributed back into American channels of trade.

They do not want any part of that $500,000,000 of American money sent abroad for materials and supplies that can and should be furnished at home.

They do not, for example, want the United States Government to buy dredges in Scotland or cement in Germany, even though, because of lower wages, the Scotch dredges may be bought a little cheaper; even though the lower freight charges of foreign steamship lines may enable the Germans to underbid American cement makers.

It is the people's money that is to pay for these things, and the people want their own money paid out among themselves.

Congress has the power to grant this request. It can be done easily by adding to the canal appropriation bill the following brief amendment:

"Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended for supplies and materials purchased outside of the United States."

This is what the resolution of the National Association of Manufacturers means.

This is what the producers and the wage-earners of the country want.

The Secretary of War, persistently intent upon "buying in the cheapest market," awaits the instructions of Congress.

There should be no hesitation and no delay on the part of Congress in instructing the Secretary of War to buy in the American market exclusively. (From the American Economist, Friday, May 25, 1906.)

Mr. RAYNER. Mr. President, I stand upon an entirely different platform from the American Protective Tariff League, and can not join hands with it, even if by so doing I could benefit every industry in the country. In this article it is stated that $500,000,000 will be expended in the construction of the canal and its equipment.

Some time ago the executive committee of the Isthmian Canal Commission concluded to purchase in the open market the materials and ships necessary for the building of the Panama Canal. The committee, as I understand it, came to the conclusion that upon an average 50 per cent more would be charged here for materials needed in canal construction than the price at which the same materials could be purchased in Europe. At that time Chief Engineer Wallace claimed that several more ships were necessary for the work to carry supplies and materials to the canal, in addition to those running between New York and Colon and owned by the Panama Railroad Company. The statement was made at that time publicly that the Secretary of War had said that while he could purchase two 6,000-ton ships in Europe for $750,000, it would cost $1,400,000 to build such ships here. It was also stated that the Commission had decided that by reserving to themselves the right to purchase in the world's markets, it would at least oblige American manufacturers to give them the benefit of their foreign prices if they desired to sell the supplies and articles necessary for the construction of the canal and the prosecution of this work.

The effect of this joint resolution will be that perhaps $100,000,000 of money will be wrung as a tribute from the people to increase the profits of our protected industries.

It is therefore not a question whether the dredges referred to shall be purchased either in Scotland or in the United States. It is a much more comprehensive subject than this. This resolution closes to the Government of the United States every market in the world, with the exception of the home market, in connection with these enormous expenditures. We do not know how the President stands in relation to this matter. It has been claimed all along that he was in favor of purchasing the material and equipment for the canal, other things being equal, in the market where they could be purchased the cheapest. It is earnestly hoped that he has not changed his mind in reference to this matter, and that he is not now, either tacitly or by active participation, lending his aid to the passage of this resolution. Let this be as it may. I care not who may favor it. I raise my voice and enter my protest against the imposition of such an unnecessary and unjustifiable burden upon the American people as is contemplated by this measure.

The bond between the protected beneficiaries and the Treasury of the United States should be broken. The contract between them should long since have expired by limitation. This is a renewal in a new form of this unholy combination. It announces the doctrine that the Government of the United States has the right to take the hard-earned savings of the people collected by taxation and still further enrich its protected favorites. It is said it is in the interest of the wage-earners of the country. I deny it. It is claimed that the consumers of the country will profit by it. I deny it. It is an attack upon the rights of the people for the benefit of their financial oppressors. It is in the interest of the American Protective Tariff League, which, notwithstanding the respectable membership that composes it, represents every monopoly upon the American continent that is plundering the homes of the American people.

I can not remain silent and permit such a doctrine to be ingrafted upon our institutions without announcing my unalterable opposition to it. It embodies a policy that has enslaved the consumers of this country, and, feeling as I do, I shall fight it at every step wherever it makes its appearance until the hour arrives when the partnership between this Government and monopoly shall be dissolved and the people shall be liberated and disenthralled.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator——

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] offered an amendment, I think, which is pending.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida is not present at the moment.

Mr. BERRY. He offered an amendment to strike certain words out of the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida sent his amendment to the desk to be read; but he did not formally offer it.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I hope some way can be found by which the people of the United States shall enjoy what I venture to call the "monopoly" of furnishing products and materials of every kind for the construction of the canal at Panama. It is due to them, because we have entered upon a great altruistic work for the benefit of the nations of the earth, as we say, forgetting, I think very much too readily, to measure those advantages and benefits by the necessity and by the policy of the people and the Government of the United States, including a vast burden of taxation. In our sentiments and in our views on this subject we are going quite too far, in my judgment, either for safety or for the purpose of winning reputation for generosity in the minds of sensible people throughout the world. I think that every great nation in the world expects the United States Government to take care of its people as its first duty; and I am very anxious, in regard to the material, machinery, and supplies which are needed for the Panama Canal, that our people shall have the right and privilege of supplying such material, if it can be done by a proper arrangement of our own legislation. I think that is quite easy; but there is such a rush in the United States in the direction of conferring unlimited, uncontrollable, and almost unimaginable powers upon the President of the United States in regard to the construction of this canal that I despair, at present at least, to do more than merely make some suggestions, which I think worth while to be considered by the Senate of the United States. They may go for nothing now, but after a while they may answer a good purpose.

When France, contrary to our resolutions voted in this House and in the other House on more than one occasion, actually participated in the construction of the Panama Canal by authorizing the application of a lottery bond scheme, which is one of the general policies of that Government, by the old Panama Canal Company, which was also extended to the new company—a provision of law in France, Mr. President, that violated every resolution that the Government of the United States had ever adopted on the subject of our rightful control of that canal.

France enacted, as a condition or a part of that grant of authority and right, a provision that all the machinery that should be used in the construction of the works of the canal should be manufactured in France, and a further provision that all the material to be imported into Panama for the purpose of constructing the canal should have its origin in some French possession. France thought it was necessary to violate her duty to the United States Government by enacting this law; to throw a challenge in our faces that they thought we were afraid to meet, and I fear we were afraid to meet it.

France found no difficulty in her national policy or constitution in arriving at the power to make these provisions. Spain has never found any difficulty in her constitution and laws in arriving at the power to make such provisions; but when we come to the Government of the United States we have a Government of laws based on a Constitution, which is an ordinance or a law that is expected to be followed out by the acts of Congress in respect of all national matters and to every possible extent. It has been supposed that we have, by copying the act of 1803, for which Mr. Jefferson was responsible, and applying it to the Canal Zone, conferred unlimited powers on the President of the United States to enact laws for the government of that Zone; and he has gone on in the use and in the abuse of that power, and has enacted a number of laws there which the Congress of the United States would not dare to enact. No member of this body would venture to propose in this body any such laws as the President of the United States and the Canal Commission have enacted in that Zone. I will cite one of them—I will not quote it, but I call attention to it. The Congress of the United States would not undertake to enact a law for the banishment of a citizen of the United States from any part of our territory, whether it is under statehood or whether it is Territorial or whether it was a sort of territorial appendix. No member of Congress would get up here and propose a bill in this body by which the governor of the Canal Zone should have the right, and it should be made his duty, to banish men from the Canal Zone who are citizens of the United States, or even inhabitants, occupants, or denizens. No member of this body would undertake to propose the enactment of such a law as that; and yet the President has required the Canal Commission to enact such a law, and it is on the statute book there and has been frequently used, and men have been banished from that Zone without a hearing, without any trial, without a summons or warrant or any cause shown, except the judgment of the governor of the Zone that such a person was an improper person or a dangerous person to be there.

Mr. President, it may surprise some of my political brethren in the Senate when I shall announce my firm and sober conviction that such a law on the Zone is an absolute necessity. We can never control the Canal Zone with that law absent from its statutes; and yet the President of the United States can not enact it; Congress can not enact it.

What are we to do, then, in order to get things in such a shape that any such law can be enacted and can be enforced, which, as I have just observed, is absolutely indispensable to the peace, safety, and welfare of that Zone? We have got to contrive in that Zone some situation, some form of legal authority, some entity, where such a law as that can have full force and effect and can not be interrupted by a writ of habeas corpus, or by any other such motion that the citizen might make whenever he is arrested and taken into custody or ordered off the Zone. Is it possible under our own system of government and under our precedents that we have very frequently established and very frequently enforced to put that Zone in such a condition as that such a law as I have indicated would not only be constitutional, but in every respect justifiable? I maintain that it is.

There is a doctrine in the United States that in times of peace the civil authority of this Government is paramount to the military power. When a national state of war supervenes, by the declaration of Congress that doctrine is changed to suit certain localities and certain conditions where it is necessary that the military law shall be paramount. We all know, without quoting instances, how very frequently that doctrine has been applied throughout the United States and all of its possessions in time of public war. Can such a condition as that exist in time of peace? That is the question. It certainly can, Mr. President, in a certain locality; that is to say, in a military reservation, and it can not exist anywhere else in the United States. Within a military reservation the military law is paramount, but the civil law can be permitted to have its full sway except as to that one proposition, the paramountcy of the military law. If the Canal Zone were declared to be a military reservation of the United States, every institution of civil government that obtains there can be maintained in its full force and vigor in the presence of such a declaration, but the power to which I have adverted, of banishing a man from a military reservation, will exist there and be in full force and effect in a military reservation, notwithstanding the presence within that Zone of all the civil functions that are necessary for the execution of the purposes of the Government of the United States in this great work that we are trying to conduct there.

The first element of safety in the Zone is obedience to authority on the part of persons of every rank and condition who are there present. Obedience to civil authority can be secured there by appealing to certain courts that the Commission have established, even extending to an appellate court on appeal from the circuit courts—three of which exist, and the circuits are defined by that law.

The civil powers, to the extent that they are granted in the Zone, are just as complete as they are in the District of Columbia or in any State in the American Union. Yet over all of this there is the supremacy of the military power, by which and under which alone the President of the United States and his subordinates, clothed with authority by him, can take a man in that Zone, banish him from it, and forbid his ever returning. So that the conditions now exist in the Zone as I have described them. They are not otherwise; they are not different from the description I am now giving, as to the actual conditions that obtain there.

There, then, Mr. President, is a Territory of the United States—I call it a Territory of the United States upon the highest possible authority, because it has been frequently held and stated both by Governor Magoon, by Secretary Taft, and by other lawyers who have looked over the subject, that our rights in the Canal Zone are as perfect as our rights are to the island of Porto Rico itself, except that we have not got there what is called a technical political supremacy, something that I am unable to define, something that I am unable even to conceive of. Our rights in the Zone are quite as perfect under the Hay-Varilla treaty as they are in Porto Rico, or in the Philippine Islands, or anywhere else. We have, in virtue of those rights, established there what is in fact, but not in name, or not by the declaration of Congress, a military reservation, and in that reservation we exercise these powers.

There are certain necessary provisions of law to be made by somebody in regard to the conduct of business in that Zone—the purchase of material and supplies of every kind. That is one of the elementary and necessary prerequisites for doing any work at all in the Zone. What law shall obtain in respect of the purchase of these supplies for that Zone—materials, machinery, etc.? Such laws as Congress shall enact within its powers under the Constitution of the United States.

I do not make any question, Mr. President, that the Congress of the United States can enact a law that arms and munitions of war imported from a foreign country might enter into a military reservation of the United States without taxation, nor do I imagine that in passing laws of that kind we would make the slightest impression upon the general tariff system of the United States.

The tariff system of the United States is intended for the support of the Government of the United States, and all the regulations and restrictions that are imposed in the Constitution upon the method of levying, assessing, and collecting these taxes have reference to the revenues of the United States and only to that. In this military reservation at Panama—I call it such because that is what it is—the Government of the United States will not attempt, and does not attempt, to collect revenue for its support. It is as clearly excluded from that idea of taxation for the support of the Government of the United States as if it were on the planet Mars. They have no relation to each other at all; but the Government of the United States has got the right to levy and assess taxes, whether upon imports or exports, if you please, or upon the people or upon the property in that Zone. For what purpose? For the purpose of providing for the support of the Zone itself, the support of civil and military law within the Zone.

Mr. President, we have the power to levy such taxes in that Zone upon property imported, and we have levied them upon property imported and upon property held there, real and personal. We have levied it upon vocations, such as carrying on distilleries and keeping rum shops. We collect a steady revenue from these sources right there in the Zone, and the distilleries and the rum shops are conducted within 50 yards of the chapels which we have also erected there for the worship of the Almighty.

We have exercised a great deal of power there, as much as has been exercised, according to my limited reading, by any autocrat in any part of the world. We are exercising those powers now. The statutes are all displayed on the statute books of the Commission. The report of the Isthmian Canal Commission shows every statute. Each one is numbered. Each one is passed through the legislative body there under certain parliamentary rules which have been observed; they have received the approval of the President of the United States, and they have become laws. I have referred to just a few of them merely for the purpose of showing how much power we are exercising there.

Beyond that, the Secretary of War has made a provision—which is not perhaps to be considered as a final and conclusive provision of law; that is to say, it can be revoked upon the will and consent of either of the parties concerned—but he has arranged a tariff between Panama and the Zone. He has demarked ports there—ports of entry for the United States and ports of entry for Panama—and has provided that property not intended exclusively for the United States, but property that may enter in consumption at large within the Zone, shall pass through the Panama ports and shall not pay a duty exceeding

10 per cent, Panama getting the benefit of the duty, and it goes into her treasury. That is the law of the Zone. It is as much the law as any other law on the statute book there, and it is being executed to-day.

We have made other arrangements there, by the same officer, with the banks in Panama to control the rates of exchange, to control the supply of money, and to pay the laborers in the Canal Zone through the banks of Panama. We have made arrangements in regard to the sale of provisions to the laborers within the Zone whereby the Panama merchants have a virtual monopoly of the sale of provisions, unless it turns out that, in the opinion of the governor or the Isthmian Canal Commission, they are crowding matters too heavily and charging too much, in which event we claim the right to withdraw from that agreement and set up an establishment of our own.

I am not here now, Mr. President, to complain of these arrangements, although I think in some respects they are exceedingly unfortunate and in some they are very questionable, but I am illustrating now my proposition as to what law obtains in that Zone. I find there a 10 per cent duty levied upon all articles for consumption that go into the Zone under the requirement that they shall pass through the Panama ports and shall pay that duty to Panama. After they have paid that duty, then, of course, commerce is free between the Zone and the State of Panama, just as it is between Alabama and Mississippi. I am describing situations as they exist, Mr. President. I am not making any argument for the purpose of distorting the situation in the slightest degree.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question for information?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes.

Mr. MONEY. I am being instructed by the remarks of the Senator from Alabama, as I always am when I have the honor to hear him. He remarked a while ago that the laws there were on the statute book plainly to be read. I presume he meant the laws of the legislature of Panama?

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator did not mean that?

Mr. MORGAN. I mean the legislation of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. MONEY. They have their statutes?

Mr. MORGAN. They have their code of statutes—a very good code.

Mr. MONEY. Enacted by whom?

Mr. MORGAN. Enacted by the Isthmian Canal Commission and most of them drawn up by a Panama lawyer.

Mr. MONEY. That is it?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes. Mr. President, this situation presented to the Senate of the United States is satisfactory to me as a modus vivendi, as a method of living, as a necessary condition upon which affairs of great moment in Panama can possibly be conducted. I say it is satisfactory to me, because it appears that the Congress of the United States will not permit anything better to be done. They intend to surrender all the powers of control of every kind and character, including the salaries of officers, to the President of the United States. I do not expect, Mr. President, to throw myself in the way of that flood—disastrous as it is—of legislation that we have been indulging here since the Panama Canal Zone was instituted. I do not expect to do anything so vain and foolish as to resist and to claim that the Congress of the United States shall, after all, maintain some power in the exercise of authority in the Zone. But I am describing conditions as they exist.

How would I apply, under existing conditions, the principle of the resolution that is before the Senate, that a fair and just discrimination shall be made between the people of the United States and foreign people, as France, as I have observed, made exactly such a discrimination? How shall I apply it to the situation at present?

Before I state my proposition I wish to advert to another matter, which is entirely germane to the situation. The Panama Railroad produces a very considerable amount of money in transporting goods across the Isthmus for the commerce of the world. It has produced many, many millions of wealth in its fifty or fifty-five years of history. It continues to produce. But although the Panama Railroad and every piece of property connected with it, and every dollar of stock in the corporation—a New York corporation—belong to the United States, the money that comes in from that railroad does not go into the Treasury of the United States. It is purposely withheld from the Treasury of the United States and is administered locally in respect of railroad affairs and in respect of the affairs of the Isthmus. It is kept out of the Treasury of the United States. Some very singular, peculiar, and unfortunate arrangements have been made upon that predicate for the purpose of keeping the money arising from the Panama Railroad Company out of the Treasury of the United States and out of the power of appropriation by Congress.

So we see in the existing condition of affairs there a very abnormal situation, one that Congress never contemplated, and one that nothing but the most fertile and grasping imagination of an Executive could ever have devised. On some other day, perhaps on an appropriation bill, I may take occasion to bring up these instances, merely to present them to the Congress of the United States, if I may, for the purpose of showing the direction in which we are going and the rapidity of the pace. Here, then, is power exercised over a piece of property that unquestionably belongs to the Government of the United States, whereby its income is kept from the Treasury of the United States and put under the administration exclusively of the Isthmian Canal Commission. It is a great property, an enormous interest; but still there is where it is.

Now, if the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States, under the broad authority which we have ventured to confer upon him, can do these things, can enact a tariff as between Panama and the United States, a 10 per cent ad valorem duty, a common duty, applying to all imports, why can not the Congress of the United States enact that goods imported from abroad for the supply of the canal, whether in the form of machinery or any other form that you can conceive of, shall be put under a duty of 10 per cent, and allow the money that arises from the collection of such duties to be administered by the consent of Congress within that Zone?

I can see the necessity, the apparent necessity, at least, for the administration of it there by the Zone authorities without it passing through the long circuit it would have to taken in getting into the Treasury and again out of the Treasury under our complex system of appropriations and expenditures. The emergency of the work requires that there should be some provision of that kind, and while I look upon the situation created there by the President and the Isthmian Canal Commission through their legislative powers with apprehension and alarm, yet I understand perfectly well that if the Congress of the United States would vouchsafe to give its imprimatur, its stamp of authority, to that same line of transactions, the evils and difficulties would disappear, and we should have an open road down there to the progress of this canal under such liberal conditions as to money and as to men and as to banishments, etc., as would assure the final success of this work.

Mr. President, two years' experience there by the Government of the United States has established the proposition finally that this Government can never build that canal under existing laws. This failure—it is obvious and is the mockery of the world—this great failure has come from the fact that Congress has refused to take the time to understand the question, to penetrate it to its bottom, and to legislate justly and properly in respect of the Canal Zone. It is our fault, Mr. President. We have committed the whole subject into the hands of men who have no boundaries of power, except of their own prescription, and who, accepting the situation, go ahead and take all the liberties they choose to take in the enactment of laws.

If the Congress would say that the two ports of Cristobal and Ancon (which have been delimited by an arrangement not final, it is true, but just and proper, between General Davis, when he was governor, and President Amador and his Government) are ports of the United States for all purposes whatsoever, thereby removing all doubt as to their actual legal state; and if it should go further and say that all goods imported into the Canal Zone for consumption or for the use of the Government of the United States from countries foreign to the United States should bear an ad valorem duty of 10 per cent, we would thereupon get a margin of advantage which would enable us to countervail what I am sure do exist—combinations amongst European manufacturers to underbid American manufacturers and to put prices down, so that they can usurp the market in Panama. That is what is going on.

This bid from somewhere in Europe, with which we are now contending and trying to get rid of and trying to find an excuse for throwing overboard, is a bid gotten up in virtue of a combination in Europe for the purpose of breaking down our local manufacturers. It is a hostile act. I do not concede that it is anything else; and I want to meet it, I want to resent it, and to resist it. I do not propose, by my silence or by my acquiescence, to submit to it if I can avoid it.

If we had a tariff of 10 per cent ad valorem upon these two dredges, to be collected at Panama, in the Zone, and applied by act of Congress to the local purposes of government in the Zone, we should not violate any principle of the Constitution of the United States, and we would be doing precisely what we are doing in regard to articles imported for consumption by an agreement between the Secretary of War and President Amador. That is what we are doing to-day.

If the honorable committee which reported the joint resolution will take the time to look over this subject and to understand it perfectly, they will see they can reach this result constitutionally and properly and with due respect, which I am always ready to pay, to the preference which ought to be given to American manufacturers, simply by the device I suggest. I can not see how any tariff question comes up in this; how any great question of tariff taxation arises under such a plan as this, because it is an arrangement intended to last during the period of the construction of the canal. After that it will be entirely useless. It is intended for a local purpose, in which the Government of the United States has undertaken to do a great work in a country that was foreign, and in respect to which there are many things as yet foreign.

That act of Congress and that treaty which authorized us to go there and do this great work separate that Zone in every legal and proper sense, certainly in every logical sense, from the balance of the United States and make it a peculiar location for the purpose of doing a peculiar piece of work, requiring peculiar skill and persistence and an enormous outlay of money. That can be done. There is no difficulty in doing it, and it ought to be done.

Then the President of the United States, instead of being called upon to pass on a question of extortion or too high prices being charged by one of our own manufacturers, would have nothing to do but to appeal to the law and say to the foreign people who want to import cement, as they have imported a great deal of it into that Zone, and machinery and materials of every character. "You can not come in here without paying a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem." That gives 10 per cent advantage to our contractors, our material men, our food supply men, etc., and that is enough. It is enough to warn the foreigners off. It is enough to notify them that they can not conspire against American production and American manufactures and come in here and take from us not a market, but the opportunity to supply a material for a certain job of work. It is not any market. I submit now to the Senate that it is our duty to look into this thing more particularly than we have been in the habit of doing and to study the situation.

Mr. President, there can not be any declaration made by the Senate of the United States or by the Congress of the United States to-day in respect of that Zone which is as important as the first I propose as an amendment, by way of substitute for the joint resolution—that the Panama Canal Zone is declared to be a military reservation of the United States. For every reason that can be stated or imagined it is necessary to put it in that shape. It is in that shape virtually now, but it is necessary to have this Congressional declaration. Put it in that shape, and then you have the right constitutionally and under all precedents of legislation heretofore to say to anyone who wants to go into that Zone, that reservation, that military camp, if you please to call it such, "You can come here subject to conditions; you are not going to be allowed to trade here at all unless we want your goods and unless you are the right sort of person. We want to keep you and all speculators and thieves and promoters outside of this Zone. We want to control the labor of this Zone."

What does that mean? If you will read back in the history of affairs in Panama, you will find that strike after strike has occurred at Colon during a period of nearly fifty years, and the Government of the United States has been twice called upon by the Panama Railroad Company to go down there and suppress strikes. What is going to take place there? With 30,000 employees, whether they are under the control of contractors or under the control of the Government, what is going to take place down there? The walking delegate will appear. He has appeared already and has been ordered off. Leaving matters in the shape in which they are now, he will enter into lawsuits with you and apply for a writ of habeas corpus. We will have it in the Supreme Court of the United States, and this Government and this people will be turned upside down upon a labor question affecting the Canal Zone. How will the labor question affect the canal government? Fatally. You can not use any other word than that—fatally. The power must be there to suppress it, and there is but one power that can suppress it, and that is the power which is exercised by the governor of that Zone under a statute of the Isthmian Canal Commission—to banish the walking delegate or any other man who comes there to interfere with them.

That condition, thus established, for that purpose and for many other purposes, authorizes us to regard that as a special reservation outside of the political limits of the United States and to use within that reservation all the powers that are necessary, not merely for the control of the situation and the preservation of peace and order, but all the powers necessary in regard to the importation of materials. We have the perfect right to control it, and we ought to declare that right. We ought to put it upon record that this is the basis of it, and then the nations of the earth would understand us. They do not understand us now. These people in Scotland who are making this combination to underbid our workmen would understand, when they saw this declaration, that the Government of the United States was, after all, in earnest about this business and intended to exercise all of its powers over the situation.

Mr. President, I can not conceive of anything that is more important than such a declaration. Just now we are informed by the morning paper that the Vice-President, or the person who is called the Vice-President, of Panama, with a suite of politicians, is coming here for the purpose of getting Mr. Taft to interfere down there and have an honest election held in the State of Panama. Drawn into the political situations there in spite of ourselves, because of our too free and familiar intercourse with that Government, it is plain that we have not exercised the power of shutting out from that Zone people who are not needed there and are not useful there. Now, for the next three months, perhaps, after the election, which is to occur early in June in Panama, is held, the people of the United States are to be aroused and excited and agitated about some political affair down there between the Liberals and the Conservatives, as they are called.

What we need there is a Zone devoted to business, not in any sense devoted to the art of government or of politics. We are not going down there to establish manufactures or agriculture or the fine arts or anything of that kind. We are going down there to build a canal, and only for that business, and we ought to go attended with all the powers of government that are necessary to be focalized upon that one spot so that we will have an unimpeded way to success. Put your Zone there under a major-general of the United States as a commandant. Do not let him have anything to do with the building of the canal, the buying of material, politics in Panama, or finance or postal matters. Let it be his business there to conduct the government of that Zone and to do it under the rules and regulations provided by the President of the United States and the Secretary of War applicable to the particular situation. Then you would have a man there and you would have a power there that the Spaniard and the dago and the negro and the Chinaman and all of the other races of the earth would respect with absolute submission. There could be nothing placed in the Zone to-day that would be more beneficial to us than a major-general of the United States Army in control and in command of everything that relates to police affairs in that Zone. You could not put anything there that would make a finer impression; and then the Republic of Panama, instead of sending her messengers and missionaries to confer with the Secretary of War about politics in an election to occur next June, would stay at home and respect the man and the situation. They would understand then that we are not there, as I said, for the purpose of ordaining civil government.

But keep your institutions that are there now if you want them. I think they are useless, many of them; but if you want them keep them. There are circuit judges, there is an appellate court, and there is everything connected with the law, except the writ of habeas corpus. There is a penitentiary with eighty-odd convicts in it. There is the pardoning power. The governor of the Zone has pardoned men who have been convicted of high felonies without ever coming to the President of the United States to exercise the pardoning power. It is an imperium in imperio, strictly, so called—the first instance, and I hope it will be the last instance that will ever occur in the history of this country, and that we will never be so put to it, either by our want of attention and diligence to our highest duties or by the creation of autocratic power.

At the proper time, Mr. President, I shall offer this amendment in the nature of a substitute. I have made my remarks upon it. I do not know that it will receive the approbation of any Senator in this body except myself, but I want to go on record, for I will not have many years, or many days even, to put myself on record here, in favor of the proposition that I conceive to be absolutely indispensable to the welfare of the Canal Zone and the canal. I ask to print it as part of my remarks, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Panama Canal Zone is declared to be a military reservation of the United States.

"SEC. 2. That all revenues collected in said Zone, except the receipts and income of the Panama Railroad, are set apart for the use of said Zone, under the direction of the President of the United States, through the Isthmian Canal Commission or the authorities of government in said Zone, to be administered without being covered in the Treasury of the United States.

"SEC. 3. That a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem shall be levied and collected on all merchandise, machinery, or material imported into said Zone from any country that is not within the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, except freights arriving by sea that are destined or consigned for transportation across the Isthmus of Panama to or from a foreign country: Provided, That the President may remit such duties, in whole or in part, when the same apply to imports for consumption in the State of Panama.

"SEC. 4. That the ports of Cristobal and Ancon, as the same are now delimited under agreement with the Republic of Panama, are ports of the United States for all purposes."

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At the request of the Senator from Maine, the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert as a substitute therefor the following:

That the Panama Canal Zone is declared to be a military reservation of the United States.

SEC. 2. That all revenues collected in said Zone, except the receipts and income of the Panama Railroad, are set apart for the use of said Zone, under the direction of the President of the United States, through the Isthmian Canal Commission or the authorities of government in said Zone, to be administered without being covered in the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem shall be levied and collected on all merchandise, machinery, or material imported into said Zone from any country that is not within the limits or jurisdiction of the United States, except freights arriving by sea that are destined or consigned for transportation across the Isthmus of Panama to or from a foreign country: Provided, That the President may remit such duties, in whole or in part, when the same apply to imports for consumption in the State of Panama.

SEC. 4. That the ports of Cristobal and Ancon, as the same are now delimited under agreement with the Republic of Panama, are ports of the United States for all purposes.

Mr. HALE. I might make the point upon it that the amendment is not germane, and I think it is not; but I do not make the point. I am willing to take the vote of the Senate on it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to address the Senate briefly at this time. The amendment pending is the one offered by the Senator from Florida, as I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not pending. The amendment read at the Secretary's desk was not formally offered.

Mr. MORGAN. It has not been offered. I will let my amendment stand aside until the Senator from Florida has an opportunity to present his amendment, if he desires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida has a right to offer his amendment in the way of perfecting the text of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I had hoped that the Senate might come to a vote upon the proposition covered by the joint resolution—either adopt it or reject it—so that the Department would have a rule of proceeding in reference to these necessary operations on the Isthmus. I should like very much now, without in any way seeking to interfere with any Senator who desires to debate it, if I could, before 2 o'clock, to get the joint resolution out of the way. I do not object to a vote upon any amendment that is offered or upon the joint resolution itself. I do not desire to take up any time myself—I shall not say a word—but I should like very much, for the guidance of the Departments, to have the joint resolution out of the way.

Mr. CARMACK. What is the Senator's proposition?

Mr. HALE. Of course, it is in the hands of the Senate, but I desire very much to get a vote upon the matter and dispose of it in one way or the other; either adopt the joint resolution or reject it, as a guidance to the Departments, who are waiting for the action of Congress as to how they shall conduct this dredging business.

Mr. CARMACK. I thought the Senator from Maine proposed that a vote be taken at a certain hour.

Mr. HALE. Oh, no; that is only done upon subjects of great public interest and the disposition of which requires a great deal of time. No, I do not ask anything of that kind. I am entirely at the mercy of the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire if the Senator from Alabama has withdrawn his amendment?

Mr. STONE. He has.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdrew it temporarily. Mine is a substitute, and the amendment of the Senator from Florida would have preference over mine.

Mr. MALLORY. Then I offer the amendment now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 7 of the joint resolution it is proposed to strike out the words "extortionate or;" so as to read:

Unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be unreasonable.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I have no desire to unduly delay the final consideration of the resolution. I have no objection to a vote upon it at any time. But this joint resolution, it seems to me, should and ordinarily would provoke a good deal of discussion. I can not but feel surprise that so little interest appears to be taken in the measure by Senators, at least by Senators on this side. I desire to submit some observations before a vote is taken.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] proposes to strike out the word "extortionate" from the joint resolution. If that should be done, then canal supplies could be purchased outside the United States if the prices offered here were regarded by the President as unreasonable. I can not see why there should be any objection to striking out that word. "Extortionate" is a word of larger reach and more drastic than the word "unreasonable." A bid could not well be extortionate without being unreasonable. The price of material could not be extortionate without being unreasonable. But it is possible that a price might be considered as unreasonable which would not be extortionate. The term is in the disjunctive—that is to say, it reads "extortionate or unreasonable"—and the President may decline to purchase American products and go abroad if, in his opinion, the prices offered are either the one or the other. In that view the word "extortionate" is not significant.

However, I am personally not importunate about this. I do not care very much about it. I did not arise to discuss this amendment, but the resolution itself. Mr. President, I have been wholly unable to comprehend just why this joint resolution is proposed. It seems to me to be meaningless, absolutely so in a practical sense. It is useless, needless, and without any practical meaning. What is intended to be accomplished by it? It declares "that purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal shall be restricted to articles of domestic production and manufacture, unless the President shall, in any case, deem the bids or tenders therefor to be extortionate or unreasonable." Restricted? Why, I presume no one imagines that the President would purchase any material outside of the United States if like material could be purchased at home for substantially the same price, all things considered. It is inconceivable that any American official would buy abroad in preference to buying at home when the conditions upon which purchases could be made were substantially the same.

The joint resolution does not absolutely restrict the President to purchases in the United States. It restricts him only in cases where the bids made or the prices demanded are extortionate or unreasonable.

I do not see that any substantial thing is accomplished by the joint resolution, either of good or evil. Then, Mr. President, what is the real purpose of the resolution? Is the President or his subordinates asking Congress to provide an easy place for them to fall? Are they asking the Congress to give them an excuse for not doing something they have boldly proclaimed they intended to do?

Mr. MORGAN. And have done.

Mr. STONE. The Secretary of War, a gentleman for whom personally I entertain an unusually high regard, both as a man and as an official, declared some months ago that he would consider it his duty to purchase canal supplies in the open markets of the world; that he considered it his duty to build the canal as cheaply as possible, and that if the supplies necessary for the construction of the canal could be had in other markets than our own at prices materially less, he would feel it to be his official duty, under his oath and in the proper administration of his office, to purchase the supplies wherever they could be had the cheapest. The head of the Canal Commission made similar statements, and all these statements have had the official indorsement of the President.

Some months ago, when this canal business was before the Senate in some form, I had occasion to call the attention of the Senate to some expressions from these high official sources on this subject. I want again to call the attention of the Senate to some of them. I read at that time an article which appeared in the Washington Post May 16, 1905, now just about a year ago, and I wish to read it again. It is as follows:

A new and very important policy was entered upon yesterday by the Isthmian Canal Commission, when members of its executive committee decided to purchase both materials and ships in the markets of the world. This was approved by Secretary Taft.

* * * * * * *

This decision with regard to the canal was reached with some reluctance, because it was appreciated by Secretary Taft and the executive committee that there would surely be a great outcry from two great interests in this country—the producers of material and the shipowners—if the purchases were not limited to the American product.

But it was decided that the money consideration was so great that it could not be ignored, for it was held that in cases fully 50 per cent more would be charged for material needed in canal construction than the same goods could be produced for in Europe.

Chief Engineer Wallace, for instance, showed that two ships, in addition to those running between New York and Colon and owned by the Panama Railroad Company, were absolutely necessary to carry the food supply and material needed for the work. No American ships could be bought at any reasonable price, and when it came to building such ships it was found, according to Secretary Taft's statement, that while you could buy two 6,000-ton ships in Europe for $750,000, it would cost $1,400,000 to build such ships here. And, in addition, while the European ships could be had at once, it would take at least eighteen months to secure American boats. Therefore it was decided to buy the ships in Europe, or, rather, in any port where they could be had the cheapest and obtained the quickest.

* * * * * * *

Secretary Taft explained yesterday that he felt obliged to indorse this decision. * * * And in this connection he called attention to the following recommendation contained in the first report of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

And now I quote from that report:

An important question of policy is yet to be determined. If the Isthmian Canal Commission is not bound by any restriction of Congress as to where it shall purchase machinery, material, and supplies, then it would seem to be its duty to construct the canal as cheaply as possible, and buy what it needs where it can get it cheapest.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. KITTREDGE] is, of course, entitled to the floor, and I understand he is ready to submit some remarks to the Senate. But could not the Senator yield and allow the joint resolution to be proceeded with until it is finished?

Mr. KITTREDGE rose.

Mr. STONE. I will say at this point, if I may be permitted, that I understand possibly there is to be some additional debate on this side, and the matter can go over if the Senator from South Dakota wishes to proceed with the unfinished business.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I would be very happy, of course, to yield to the Senator from Maine to continue the consideration of the joint resolution if I felt that I ought to do so in duty to the unfinished business. I had expected to ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate at an earlier hour to-day, and I must ask that it be proceeded with at this time.

Mr. HALE. The Senator desires to submit some remarks?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have that purpose, Mr. President.

Mr. HALE. Of course I can not interfere with that. The joint resolution will then go over for the present. I give notice that I shall call it up as soon as possible after the Senator from South Dakota has concluded his remarks.

Mr. CARMACK. I submit an amendment as a substitute for the joint resolution which has been under consideration.

The amendment was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

"That in all contracts for the purchase of material and equipment for use in the construction of the Panama Canal preference shall be given to articles of domestic production or manufacture, conditions of quality and price being equal."

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. STONE. Before the Senator proceeds, I ask permission to say to the Senator from Maine that when the joint resolution which has been under consideration was called up I was notified by three Senators on this side that they desire to debate it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do, for an inquiry.

Mr. PENROSE. I simply want to make a statement. I am as strongly in favor of the joint resolution as the Senator from Maine, but it is very plain that it is going to lead to prolonged discussion. I stated to the Senate this morning the absolute necessity, as far as I am personally concerned, of being relieved of the Post-Office appropriation bill before the middle of the week. I should like to ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he will have any objection, as far as the unfinished business is concerned, if I should move to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill at the close of his remarks?

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Answering the question of the Senator from Pennsylvania first, I would simply say that at the conclusion of my remarks I expect to ask to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I shall move at that time that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Before that is settled I wish to make a statement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do, for an inquiry.

Mr. CLAPP. In an informal talk with the Senator from South Dakota I notified him that I was going to ask to bring up the conference report on the Indian appropriation bill at the close of his speech. The report was brought in on Friday, and I should like to call it up as early as possible.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota whether the conference report will lead to any extended discussion?

Mr. CLAPP. I would not suppose that it would, but of course I can not tell what might happen.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not know whether the Senator from Minnesota was in the Chamber this morning when I made a statement in regard to the Post-Office appropriation bill. If I can not have the bill disposed of by the middle of this week, I can not assure the Senate that I can call it up until the middle of June. While I know the conference report is entitled to precedence, and I have every desire to facilitate the Senator's work, I sincerely hope that he will let me have the appropriation bill disposed of. He will doubtless be here all week, and he will have ample opportunity to have the conference report disposed of. My personal engagements are such that I want to be relieved of the appropriation bill by Wednesday.

Mr. CLAPP. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania how long he expects it will take to complete the Post-Office appropriation bill?

Mr. PENROSE. The Post-Office appropriation bill seldom takes very long in the Senate. It has not done so in recent years. I do not know of any matters in controversy in the bill that will lead to any extended discussion.

Mr. KITTREDGE. So far as the consideration of the appropriation bill and of the conference report is concerned, I assume that is a matter for the Senate to determine after I have concluded such remarks as I may submit.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator from South Dakota is prepared to go on with his remarks, and has also stated that at the conclusion of his remarks he will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, I was going to ask that he be allowed now to go on and the Senate then will decide what it will take up. I hope the Senator from South Dakota will be allowed to go on with his remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives.

H. R. 18900. An act correcting the military record of E. J. Kolb, alias E. J. Kulb.

REGULATION OF RAILROAD RATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. TILLMAN. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and consent to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, pending that motion, I shall not move, because I doubt if it would be in order, an instruction to the conferees of the Senate, but I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the Senate conferees to an amendment to an exception which seems to have been ingrafted upon amendment No. 5 on page 5. I sincerely hope that the conferees on the part of the Senate will agree to so much of the disagreement of the House as strikes out the words "other than timber and the manufactured products thereof."

The original Senate amendment was intended to divorce the business of transportation from the business of manufacture and distribution, and I do not believe that any living man can assign a valid reason against carriers producing and transporting coal, iron, and other commodities that will not apply with equal or greater force to lumber.

I think this exception is equivalent to an admission that the entire amendment is of doubtful wisdom and of doubtful utility. I can not myself comprehend what better right a railroad company has to buy a pine forest and engage in the manufacture and transportation of lumber than a railroad company has to buy a coal mine and engage in the business of producing and transporting coal.

Without intending to detain the Senate, I venture to express the hope that those words which constitute that exception will be stricken out of the bill. I did not, I frankly say, know that such an exception had been adopted by the Senate until last night. I remembered the speech of the Senator from the State of Washington [Mr. PILES] in favor of it, and while he was on the floor some constituents of mine called me into the Marble Room, and supposing that an exception so important as that could not be adopted without a roll call, and no roll call having been ordered, the matter passed out of my mind as having been defeated.

I discovered last night that this provision is in the bill, and I think it is equivalent to conceding that the whole proposition is a vicious one. I sincerely hope that the people who produce lumber will be put on precisely the same plane as the people who produce coal. If there is any wisdom in the effort of the Senate to divorce transportation from manufactures, mining, and production, that wisdom reaches to and includes lumber as well as it does coal, iron, and other products. If we are in earnest, and I hope we are, in this effort to separate the business of a common carrier from the business of manufacturers, producers, and merchants, that exception ought to be eliminated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. ELKINS, and Mr. CULLOM as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PANAMA CANAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, the Spooner law, approved June 28, 1902, provided, conditionally, that a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans should be located at Panama. The first section of that act authorized the President to acquire for and on behalf of the United States all the properties of the New Panama Canal Company, of France, paying therefor the sum of $40,000,000, provided a satisfactory title to said property could be obtained.

That condition was satisfied, as is evidenced by the opinion of the then Attorney-General of the United States, now a member of this body, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. The second section of that act authorized the President to acquire from the Republic of Colombia for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he might deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land across the Isthmus of Panama, which is therein described, and authorized the payment of $10,000,000 for such property so to be acquired.

This condition was satisfied by the ratification of what is known as the "Hay-Varilla treaty," which the Senate ratified on the 23d of February, 1904, and it was duly proclaimed on the 26th of February, 1904.

The Spooner law which I have mentioned made an appropriation of the sum of $60,000,000, $40,000,000 to pay for the property which was to be acquired from the New Panama Canal Company, $10,000,000 for the purpose of paying the Republic of Panama, or Colombia, as it then was, for the right we acquired from that Government, and $10,000,000 for general purposes. Sixteen million five hundred thousand dollars additional has been appropriated by the present Congress.

By the act of April 28, 1904, the President was authorized and directed to take possession of the properties acquired from the Republic of Panama and from the New Panama Canal Company. That was accomplished early in May of that year. In the same act certain governmental powers were vested in such persons as the President might direct.

Under section 3 of the Spooner law to which I have referred it was required that the canal to be constructed across the Isthmus of Panama should be of sufficient capacity and depth as should afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated.

By the seventh section of the same act an Isthmian Canal Commission was created, composed of seven members. That Commission was organized in March, 1904. It consisted of Admiral Walker; General Davis; of Mr. Burr and Mr. Parsons, both of New York; Mr. Harrod, of New Orleans; Mr. Grunsky, of California, and Mr. Hecker, of Michigan. Mr. Hecker resigned from that Commission early in November, 1904, and all the other members of that Commission resigned in March, 1905. On the 1st of April, 1905, a new commission was appointed. Mr. Shonts was made chairman; Judge Magoon was made a member; Mr. Wallace, then the chief engineer, as he had been from the May previous, was also made a member; General Hains, General Ernst, Mr. Harrod, and Admiral Endicott were also made members of it. That Commission continues as at first appointed, except in the latter part of June, 1905, Mr. Wallace resigned.

On the 24th day of June, 1905, the President created a board of consulting engineers, as he was authorized to do by section 7 of the Spooner law to which I have referred. The language is as follows:

> In addition to the members of said Isthmian Canal Commission, the President is hereby authorized through said Commission to employ in said service any of the engineers of the United States Army at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work.

General Davis was designated by the President as the chairman of the board. As before stated, he had been a member of the first Isthmian Canal Commission, as had also Mr. Burr and Mr. Parsons, of New York. The other members of the board—ten besides those above named—were General Abbott, of the Army, retired; Mr. Noble, of New York; Mr. Randolph, of Chicago; Mr. Ripley, of Michigan; Mr. Stearns, of Boston; Mr. Hunter, of England, who is the chief engineer of the Manchester Ship Canal; Herr Tincauzer, of Germany, at the head of the Kiel Canal; Mr. Welcker, of The Netherlands, at the head of the canals of that country; M. Guerard and M. Quellennec, of France, connected with the Suez Canal, the latter being now the chief engineer of that work, and the former connected with it in an advisory capacity.

The board met early, September 1, 1905, and in November, 1905, reached a conclusion, eight of the members of that board favoring a sea-level canal, which the majority of the Interoceanic Canal Committee approve and adopt, while five members of the board recommend a lock canal of the type and character I will later mention.

These reports were not at that time made public. They were first, as I understand, submitted to the Isthmian Canal Commission. The board of which I have been speaking, the Board of Consulting Engineers, reported, as I have stated, to the Isthmian Canal Commission, and they in turn submitted their findings to the Secretary of War.

On the 19th day of February, 1906, the President transmitted to Congress the report of the Board of Consulting Engineers, which I have mentioned, also the report of the Isthmian Canal Commission upon the type of canal, together with a letter of the Secretary of War submitting to the President, with comments, said report. That document was on the desks of Senators some time ago. It is Document No. 231 of the present session. Immediately after the submission of the message with the reports the Interoceanic Canal Committee began its investigations. With careful and painstaking attention they heard numerous engineers upon this question. The testimony so given is to be found in a volume of evidence, nearly a thousand pages, which can also be procured by Senators. The Committee on Interoceanic Canals having this subject in charge based its finding upon all the testimony that has been presented to the committee, and its conclusion is now before the Senate. I ask that the bill, which is the unfinished business, may be read for the information of this body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That a sea-level canal, connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, be constructed in accordance with the report and plans of the Board of Consulting Engineers for the Panama Canal created by the order of the President dated June 24, 1905, in pursuance of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans," approved June 28, 1902.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, thus far we have not had the benefit of any suggestions on the part of the minority of the Interoceanic Canal Committee concerning their recommendations. Neither in the committee nor as yet in this body has the minority of that committee presented its views. It is only fair to say, however, that the chairman of the committee has informed me that in the near future he will submit the views of the minority. This is regretted on my part, as I can not have the opportunity, in this opening presentation, of commenting, so far as I may, upon the points or arguments they will cite in discussing this measure. However, it will be assumed in these remarks that the minority of that committee will base their conclusions upon the minority report of the Board of Consulting Engineers, to which reference has been made.

At this point it may be well to call attention to one or two of the maps upon the walls of this Chamber. The canal at Panama runs east of south from Colon; that is to say, the city of Panama is east of the city of Colon, which is the Caribbean, or Atlantic, port of entrance to the canal. It is 50 miles, in round figures, from the point where dredging begins in the Atlantic Ocean to where it ends on the Pacific Ocean. The high-tide waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans are only 24 miles apart. That, of course, means that, except for 24 miles of the distance I have mentioned, the work is that of dredging, presenting absolutely no unusual, untried, or doubtful problems of engineering.

Of the 24 miles to which allusion has been made, the maximum height above sea level now is only 160 feet, which, for a sea-level canal, means simply the excavation of the material for the distance of about 24 miles to the height of 160 feet and of the width provided for by the majority of the Board of Consulting Engineers, plus, of course, the 40-foot depth of water, as provided in that plan of canal.

At a very early date, so the geologists suggest, an arm of the Atlantic Ocean or of the Caribbean Sea extended 30 miles from the point where land now begins to Gamboa. At that point—Gamboa—the solid rock is at sea level, and we are told that all the lowland now existing in the valley of the Chagres from Gamboa to the Caribbean Sea, or Atlantic Ocean, has been made ground. It has been formed by the wash, silt, and drift of the river Chagres and deposited in the valley, gradually filling it up and making the land as it now appears.

The highest point on the Isthmus traversed by the canal is what is known as the "Culebra divide." Before any work was done by the French company the maximum height along the route of this canal was a little more than 330 feet, but it had been excavated by the French to the extent already mentioned.

If the sea-level canal shall be adopted, there are only two structures of importance to be made—one a dam at Gamboa, restraining and controlling the waters of the Chagres River, and the other (possibly necessary) a tidal lock or gate near the Pacific terminus, in order to restrain the waters at high tide from rushing into the canal, the gate operating as a dam, and also to enable ships to emerge from the canal and pass out to the Pacific at all stages of tide. The tidal lock is not regarded as necessary by all the engineers who have appeared before us. It is, however, recommended, in order that by no chance can the flood waters, or the tide waters, rush through the canal and injure it or any shipping that may be passing through.

The structure at Gamboa would not be a very large one. By that I mean that in this country and in all countries where works of this sort are constructed, many dams of greater magnitude have long been in existence and are being built. The rock at that point is only 50 or 55 feet below the surface of the ground. At present surface the distance across the valley is only 600 feet; at the surface of the ground 1,150 feet; and at the top of the dam the distance across will be only 2,250 feet. One of many strong points in favor of the dam at that place, is the fact that on either side are hills of solid rock, and the dam, if constructed there, will not only be placed on solid rock, but will be buttressed on either flank by rock as solid and firm as can anywhere be found.

These, as has been stated, are the only two structures of any importance that are contemplated by the sea-level type of canal. I do not forget the fact that some of the little streams that flow into the canal are to have dams across them, throwing the water back upon their source and to the ocean in another way, but those are inconsiderable in size and of no moment so far as any vital feature is concerned.

On the other hand the lock canal would require structures of unusual, doubtful, and experimental features. The first structure of importance required would be at Gatun. There it would be necessary to construct a dam one mile and a half in length, a half mile in width, and 135 feet in height, supporting a head of 85 feet of water. At one end three locks are proposed, with an aggregate lift of 85 feet.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me if I ask him what he means by the width of the dam being half a mile?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I mean it is half a mile up and down stream.

Mr. DRYDEN. The thickness?

Mr. BACON. The thickness of the dam would be half a mile?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Yes. I will explain that feature a little later on.

These locks, as has been stated, are in flights, in steps one above the other, all in direct contact. As the ship leaves one lock it enters the next above it, or below, as the case may be. The same is true upon the other side, except one of the locks is to be located at Pedro Miguel or Miraflores, and two at or near La Boca.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly, I do.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the interruption will not disturb the Senator, I understood him to say that under the sea-level type of canal the only dams that would be required would be the one at Gamboa and one on the Panama side——

Mr. KITTREDGE. A dam at Gamboa and a tidal lock near Panama.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that there are some other dams which have been proposed as being involved in the construction of the sea-level type of canal. As I understand, there will be three other dams necessary, one controlling the River Caño, one the River Gigantito, and a third controlling the Rio Gigante. One of those dams will be 2,800 feet long. Does the Senator understand that it will be necessary to construct such a dam as that under the sea-level plan?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am not sure about the length of the dams, but they are small structures and unimportant.

Mr. HOPKINS. The evidence shows that one dam would have to be 2,800 feet long, and that another dam would have to be 490 feet long, and another 820 feet long. The height of these dams will be 75 feet above the ground. I want to call the Senator's attention also to the fact that there is no evidence showing how deep, for a sea-level canal, it will be necessary to go in order to get a foundation for any one of these dams designed to check the rivers which it will be necessary to control. Unless those dams are constructed, the flow of water from the rivers referred to would go into and practically destroy the navigation of the sea-level canal by making cross currents in the canal.

Mr. KITTREDGE. That, Mr. President, is the Senator's statement of what will happen.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will ask the Senator if it is not the fact that the sea-level canal plan involves the construction of the three dams I have named?

Mr. KITTREDGE. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. Is it not also a fact that there have been no borings to determine how low it will be necessary to go to find a rock foundation for any one of these three dams?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Those dams, Mr. President, and the rivers which they are to cross are of such inconsiderable importance as not to be worthy of any attention in the settlement of this question.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] lays stress upon the depth it will be necessary to go to find rock foundations for these small dams. Am I correct, I will ask the Senator from South Dakota, in supposing that the enormous dam at Gatun, that will be necessary if we have a lock canal, a mile and a half long, half a mile wide, and I have forgotten how high, will necessarily be built upon a mud foundation?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The Senator is absolutely correct, as I will later show.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from New Hampshire has referred to me, by the permission of the Senator from South Dakota, I want to say that the dam at Gatun is going to be upon a rock foundation. There are two depressions, one 258 feet and another 205 feet, that will be required to go below the rock level of the dam, but at every point it will strike a rock foundation.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment, and then I will yield to him?

Mr. DRYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Before I leave the question asked by the Senator from Illinois, let me read what Mr. Hunter states regarding the dams which the Senator from Illinois has mentioned. It is found in the letter which was presented to this body one day last week and placed upon the desk of each member of the Senate. I read from page 9 of that letter.

Mr. FORAKER. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The letter is dated April 28, 1906, and is written by Mr. Hunter, who was a member of the Board of Consulting Engineers. He is now, and has been for many years—in fact nearly all his life—connected with, and at the present time is the chief engineer of, the Manchester Ship Canal.

He says:

> Much unnecessary apprehension has been expressed, both as to the effect and as to the probable cost of the works required for the regulation of the side streams which will flow into the sea-level canal. The works will be very simple in their design, and very direct in their operation. No elaborate systems of masonry construction, for the purpose of converting the streams into cascades, will be required or need be contemplated. It will suffice if the streams when not diverted altogether, whether higher or lower in level (as compared with the level of water in the canal) are in each case allowed to fall directly into a pool to be formed at the foot of each, from which pool the water will flow over a weir into the canal, the short channel from the weir being laid out on such lines, and at such depths, as will reduce velocity to the point required to eliminate appreciable current. This, in principle, was the method adopted for dealing with the flood waters from the river Mersey, which pass into the Manchester Canal, and has, in practice, proved to be entirely successful, as even in times of very heavy flood, when the quantities discharged from the Mersey are much greater than those which will be discharged from any of the subsidiary streams on the line of the Panama Canal, the current velocity in the waterway never exceeds 2 miles per hour, which velocity has had no effect whatever upon passing steamers, whether moving with or against the current.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I had promised to yield to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN]. I will yield to whichever desires to proceed first.

Mr. DRYDEN. I merely wanted to make a brief statement, and it is very pertinent in view of the testimony of Mr. Hunter.

The Senator from South Dakota, who is thoroughly informed upon this whole subject, is well aware that there are seventeen different streams which will enter into the canal, the mouths of which streams are all the way from 13 to 130 feet above the surface of a sea-level canal. Now, let Senators imagine for a moment, when these great floods which take place from time to time in that territory occur, when the Chagres River is so filled that it overflows everything and carries everything in its course, what will be the effect upon the sea-level canal, getting water into it from a height of 130 feet above the canal, and what is going to be the condition of these great ships which will undertake to navigate the canal when they meet these cross currents.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. KITTREDGE. Just a moment. Permit me first to answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey.

The effect of these dams across the little streams which would pass into the prism of the canal if the dams were not constructed is to reverse the flow of the streams and turn them altogether the other way and out of the Chagres Valley or the prism of the canal.

Mr. DRYDEN. Does the Senator mean to say that these streams will not empty into the canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. They will if the dams are not constructed, but the dams which the Senator has in mind will accomplish the purpose I have stated.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I simply wish to make an inquiry. Is not Mr. Hunter, whose letter seemed to have been of sufficient importance to have it printed and laid upon the desk of each Senator, and who testifies in favor of a sea-level canal, the same Mr. Hunter who was a member of the technical commission of France, appointed by the French canal company to report upon the question of a sea-level or lock canal, and did not report against a sea-level canal and in favor of a lock canal, with two locks at Bohio not very much smaller in size and height than the flight of locks at Gatun?

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose, if the Senator from South Dakota will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I yield.

Mr. MORGAN. I suppose those facts must have been known to the President when he invited Mr. Hunter to come over here and take a place on this Commission. He invited Mr. Hunter to come here. The President had confidence in his judgment and in his integrity; and I think there will be difficulty in submitting Mr. Hunter to any impeachment whatever before the Senate.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I only want to have an answer from the Senator from South Dakota as to whether or not those are the facts?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania is correct. Mr. Hunter was a member of what is known as the "technical committee" of the New Panama Canal Company. But it must not be forgotten that at the time the committee was investigating, that company was in financial difficulties, and their study was to discover the cheapest form of canal, the one soonest made and earning tolls, and at that time they did recommend the construction of a lock canal of small capacity, and it included locks at Bohio. But in that connection it must be further remembered that at that time it was supposed that the rock foundation at Bohio was less than 130 feet. It has since developed, upon investigation made by former Chief Engineer Wallace, that a rock foundation can not be reached at Bohio unless at a depth of 168 feet below sea level, which makes absolutely impossible the securing of a rock foundation for the dam at that point.

It must not be forgotten, further in this connection, that notwithstanding that fact a minority of the board of engineers abandoned Bohio, for the reason I have stated, and have gone to Gatun. There they have already made borings to a depth of 258 feeet, and they discover sand, gravel, mud, decayed vegetable matter, trees, seashells, and water bubbling at varying distances from the grass roots to that depth. Upon such a foundation the minority propose to put in the Gatun dam, which is the very key to the integrity of the entire canal structure.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] said, as I understood, that the borings across the mile and a half at Gatun had reached rock foundations except in those two cavernous places, one being 258 and the other 200 feet deep. I do not understand the evidence if a rock foundation has been touched with an auger anywhere in that mile and a half. They have stuff there which they call indurated clay, which is far from being rock—so far from it, indeed, that either by earthquake disturbance or by the washing of the waters of the Chagres River one channel has been cut through it 228 feet deep, and within a few hundred yards another channel has been cut through it 200 feet deep. It is not rock, and it is not correct to say that it is. I ask the Senator from South Dakota if I am right about that?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. KITTREDGE. The Senator from Alabama is entirely correct in his statement of the facts regarding the underlying material at the Gatun dam. Mr. Stevens in his testimony before the committee referred to this material as "so-called rock."

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from South Dakota allow me right here?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I will allow this question——

Mr. HOPKINS. If it disturbs you——

Mr. KITTREDGE. It does not disturb me at all, but I should like to submit my remarks in more consecutive form.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I yield.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do not the present chief engineer and five American engineers all agree that what the Senator from Alabama calls "indurated clay"——

Mr. MORGAN. I take that from the report.

Mr. HOPKINS. Is as good rock foundation as it is possible to find anywhere for the construction of a dam of the character proposed at Gatun?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do not understand that they go that far.

Mr. HOPKINS. They all do.

Mr. KITTREDGE. In making the suggestion regarding interruptions, I do not wish to have it understood that I shall decline to yield for the purpose of permitting a Senator to ask a question for information. I shall be very happy to do that. But I should much prefer not to engage in argument regarding the facts during the remainder of my remarks.

Mr. President, the selection of the best type for the Panama Canal for the United States Government is a much greater question than would arise if the canal were to serve a commercial purpose only. The canal which could be constructed in the shortest period of time and at the least cost would be a lock canal of comparatively high summit level, higher than has been considered suitable by the Board of Consulting Engineers, with locks of less dimensions than would meet the exacting requirements of the law under which the subject is now being considered. Such locks, and a corresponding canal prism between them, while sufficient to afford a measure of accommodation for nearly all the ocean traffic seeking such a waterway, would be highly unsatisfactory for the purposes contemplated by the Government. Its locks would be too small to give accommodation either for the largest ships afloat or for the largest of those now in process of construction, nor would it give that freedom of passage for war vessels of the United States Navy from one ocean to another which is one of the most important services of the contemplated waterway.

The cost of maintenance of such a high-level canal would be unduly high and the dangers of its navigation far greater than should characterize a suitable passage for a great traffic between oceans. These objections would be to a considerable extent removed by reducing the summit level of the canal and by increasing the size of a lessened number of locks. Even with these desirable modifications the main broad question still exists whether the selected type shall be that of a canal with summit level above mean tide or a sea-level canal with a tidal lock only at its Panama end, where the maximum range of tide is about 21 feet, but where the tidal lock may have its gates wide open at least one-half of the time.

There is one crucial question to be considered and answered at the very outset of the contemplation of such a lock canal with its summit level above high tide. The employment of locks requires the supply of a lock full of water for every use of a lock. With great locks of the size required by the isthmian canal, if the traffic is considerable, a relatively large daily flow of water is required to feed the locks. There is but one river on the Isthmus of Panama whose size and location is such as to supply a sufficient volume of water for the feeding of a lock ship canal, and that is the Chagres. Its high and low water discharges have been continuously observed throughout a considerable period of years, and its adequacy for the purpose has been thoroughly discussed by the first Isthmian Canal Commission as well as by the present Commission. It appears that that river may be confidently expected to furnish sufficient water for the operation of a lock canal, even with locks of a usable length of 1,000 feet, and of a usable width of 100 feet, for a tonnage variously estimated from 30,000 to 35,000 tons up to 50,000, or even 70,000 tons. Both the majority and the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers appear to have accepted these results as being impregnable to criticism.

The main terminal harbor features outside of the shore lines are practically the same for both sea-level and lock plans, and the general conditions of approach at each end of the canal proper are to be treated in practically the same way whether one type be selected or the other. A wide and deep approach channel must be constructed from the 7-fathom contour on either side of the Isthmus to the canal proper, which may be taken as lying wholly within the shore lines at the two extremities of the Canal Zone. As the Bay of Limon is directly open to the north, the harbor of Cristobal, at the Caribbean end of the canal, must be protected from the violent "northers," although these dangerous storms occur on the average not more than three or four days in the year. On the Pacific side, on the other hand, no harbor protection is needed, as the Pacific terminus of the canal is never visited by storms. There are times when there is considerable breeze, but there is no record of winds whose severity is such as to class them among storms. The terminal approach channel on the Pacific side lies between the shore and the group of four islands, about 4 miles offshore, which would afford much protection were it needed. Obviously all these terminal harbor features are not affected by the type of canal.

THE SEA-LEVEL CANAL.

The majority report of the Board of Consulting Engineers has set forth a complete plan for a sea-level canal, and has recommended its adoption for the ship waterway to be constructed across the Isthmus of Panama. The main features of this plan for the waterway between the terminal harbors are a channel prism with the surface at the elevation of mean tide from one ocean tide water to the other, but with a tidal lock at the Pacific end of the canal to afford suitable provision for exit from and entrance to the canal at the extreme ranges of spring tides, the extreme range being 21 feet in Panama Bay, the mean range being about 14 feet.

In this connection it may be an interesting fact to note that the mean tide level of the Atlantic and the Pacific are practically the same; and were it not for the high tide of Panama, if a sea-level canal should be constructed, the difference between the two oceans would not form a current.

These extreme spring tides are of rare occurrence, and the majority report sets forth the fact that the gates of this tidal lock will be wide open for at least one-half of the total time. Some engineers of repute believe that the experience gained in the construction of the canal will show that the entrance from Panama Bay into the canal may be so devised as to make a tidal lock there unnecessary. The majority, however, has assumed that the lock will be necessary to the extent stated, and it is provided for in the estimated costs of construction, operation, and maintenance. As the extreme range of tide at the Colon end of the canal never exceeds about 2.5 feet, obviously no tidal lock would be needed there.

The Chagres River, having a total watershed variously estimated from 700 to 800 square miles above Bohio, the point where it leaves the higher ground of the Isthmus and enters what may be called the "coastal plain" on the Caribbean side, cuts the canal line in its downward flow at Gamboa, 30 miles from Colon. The great tropical rainfall on the Atlantic slope of the Cordillera, varying from 100 to 125 inches per year, subjects the Chagres River to sudden and high floods. The rate of discharge of this river may vary from about 300 cubic feet feet per second at Gamboa to possibly nearly 80,000 cubic feet per second at the same point, although there is no flood on record of over 65,000 cubic feet per second.

These great floods occur at rare intervals, as but five have been recorded during a period of nearly fifty years. Smaller floods or freshets, however, varying from 5,000 cubic feet per second to 20,000 or 25,000 cubic feet per second are comparatively common. As such floods from any one stream might cause destruction to a ship canal if allowed to flow directly into it, adequate controlling works must be constructed in connection with any type of canal, for the Chagres River or for other streams even of a much less magnitude. The only other river of considerable magnitude beside the Chagres is that known as the "Gatuncillo," or, as the Isthmian Canal Commission now call it, the "Gatun River," which is a tributary of the Chagres and empties into that river at the little native village of Gatum, 7 miles from Colon. The main features of control of these streams, as planned by the majority of the Board of Consulting Engineers, consist of a great dam across the Chagres at Gamboa, with the proper regulating sluices. An independent diversion channel, already nearly completed, will carry the waters of the Gatun River from Gatun to an easterly arm of Limon Bay, thus preventing any discharge of that river from entering the canal prism. Obviously the latter plan makes any further treatment of the waters of the Gatun River unnecessary.

The superficial area of Gamboa Lake is about 39 square miles with its water surface at its maximum height at the elevation of 170 feet above the sea. The reserve storage capacity in this lake is abundant to receive any two of the greatest possible floods of the Chagres River in succession without discharging any of the flow into the canal prism and without exceeding the highest water surface given above. The regulating sluices at the Gamboa dam are so designed as to permit at will any rate of discharge of the flood waters from the Chagres River into the canal up to a maximum of 15,000 cubic feet per second, producing no greater current in the canal than 1¼ miles per hour, which is negligible as to its effect upon navigation. Some of the streams, having small discharges at most, are retained by suitable dams so as to be compelled to reverse their flows over dividing ridges into other streams which discharge into the ocean without entering the canal; while others, still smaller in their volume of flow, are caught in receiving basins alongside of the canal prism and are discharged into it over masonry weirs. By these means all the streams which affect the canal throughout its entire length are not only controlled at their flood stages, but they are also prevented from discharging silt into the canal prism. This result eliminates nearly all dredging required to maintain the channel prism, and correspondingly reduces the cost of maintenance.

In general the prism of the canal is designed to be 150 feet wide on the bottom, with a minimum depth of water of 40 feet, but for a distance of about 8 miles through the great divide cut known as Culebra, where the canal prism would be entirely in rock, the width is made 200 feet, with sides of the prism proper nearly vertical. In all other rock sections these dimensions are also found.

In firm earth the side slopes of the prism are taken at one vertical on one and one-half horizontal, which would make the width of the canal at the surface of the water 270 feet. These widths exceed any widths of maritime canals now in use in the world. The bottom width at 150 feet is greater than that of the turning out places in the Suez Canal. Ample width is thus afforded for the passing of large steamers without tying up on either bank up to a length of 500 to 550 feet, or possibly more. It would only be necessary for ships of that size to decrease speed and pass each other without actually coming to a stop. Great ships, 600 to 800 feet in length, would not pass each other in motion, but one would be obliged to tie up at the bank while the other passed. Inasmuch as there would be few of the latter size for a number of years, or perhaps many years, it is clear that the actual capacity of the canal for carrying traffic would scarcely be affected by the meeting of the largest ships stopping in the canal. It would not be necessary for a large ship to stop for the passing of a small one.

Nor would the capacity of the sea-level canal be materially affected by the presence of the tidal lock already alluded to at the Panama end. Inasmuch as the gates of this lock would be open at least one-half of the time, and that would mean a considerable portion even of the extreme spring tides, there could be no congestion, for any group of ships seeking the canal would be relieved during the period of the open gates. Within wide range, therefore, it may be assumed that the traffic capacity of the sea-level canal would be practically unlimited. If, however, it were desired at any time in the future to secure greater freedom of navigation, the desired widening or deepening of the canal could be made expeditiously and economically by ordinary excavation of those portions of the material to be removed above water and by well-known and economical methods of excavating either earth or rock under water.

The least radius of curvature in the sea-level plan is 8,200 feet, and the total curvature measured in degrees is but little different from that of the Suez Canal, only that many of the Suez curves are sharper. Taking the width of prism and its easy curvature, a free and ample waterway is offered for the greatest volume of traffic and for the largest ships which will seek the canal in the future. The Consulting Board recognizes the fact that ships 800 feet in length and of 88 feet beam are now being constructed, and, apparently, has extended its anticipation in the future to the construction of ships 1,000 feet long and of nearly or quite 100 feet beam. The sea-level canal, as planned and recommended, is sufficient to give convenient accommodations for the greatest traffic that can reasonably be anticipated, and for ships of the maximum dimensions stated. Such ships of maximum size could readily pass through the canal, as planned, but at a speed reduced below that which would be permtited for smaller ships.

Mr. President, the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers, and those engineers who appeared before us, complained that the canal proposed by the majority of the Board was too restricted. That was an argument not appealing strongly to the majority of the committee, for the reason that the proposed prism of the canal at Panama is much larger than that at Suez, in which the largest war ships and commercial steamers conveniently pass. But that there might be an opportunity for practical business men, practical seamen, to express themselves, I secured some letters upon this subject, one or two of which I ask the Secretary to read, and ask that the rest be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED HARBOR NO. 1, AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF MASTERS AND PILOTS OF STEAM VESSELS,
OFFICE OF THE GENERAL MANAGER,
New York, May 10, 1906.

Mr. FREMONT HILL,
No. 17 State Street, New York, N. Y.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to inform you that at our last regular meeting, held at Grand Opera House, May 5, 1906, the matter of lock canal and sea-level canal was taken up and most thoroughly discussed.

I am directed to inform you that this association indorses the sea-level canal, for the reason that a ship can make very much better time and not running the risk of damage to ship and cargo. This is the unanimous opinion of all present at the meeting and who have had experience with both sea level and lock canals.

Yours, very truly,

WILBUR E. DOW, Secretary.

JOHN C. SILVA, National President,

NEW YORK, May 11, 1906.

Senator A. B. KITTREDGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have been following closely the arguments pro and con on the sea-level and lock canal types, being much interested in a correct solution thereof.

Being of the opinion that two points, viz, "speed in passage" and "safety during passage," could be passed on best by those who are daily handling ships as masters and pilots, practical men whose views would eliminate the theoretical viewpoint, of which we have had a surfeit, I submitted the two points to the American Association of Masters and Pilots, with the inclosed result.

It is hardly possible that any sane man will set up his opinion contrary to the judgment of such men as these.

By reference to the Blue Book of American Shipping you will find that this association includes all the men in the United States who are in actual charge of the operation of ships.

Hoping that this opinion may have its proper consideration, I am,

Yours, truly,

FREMONT HILL, C. E.

The Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge receipt of your valued favor of 11th instant, relative to the type of canal to be constructed by the Government across the Isthmus of Panama, and would say that I have taken some time to give proper consideration to the important questions involved and have laid them before the masters of a number of the steamers of our line, who have had experience in the navigation of the Suez Canal, and also before other experts, who would be in a position to give an intelligent opinion as to the questions involved.

The replies that I give you are the result of my own consideration, as well as of the united thought of those whom I have consulted.

In reply to your questions I answer as follows:

The chief reason for this answer is the constant possibility of a derangement of or accident to the lock gates or other parts of canal locks, which would paralyze traffic and might place in jeopardy very valuable property.

The size and number of locks proposed in the Panama lock canal plan, in my opinion, render a comparison with the Soo Canal out of place. I am informed that the Dortmund-Ems Canal, in Germany, was closed for several months two or three years ago by an accident that put the hydraulic-lift lock on that canal out of commission. Such an accident might at any time occur on the Panama lock canal, and the results might be disastrous.

It is doubtful, in my judgment, if a large amount of tonnage to the East that would naturally use the Panama Canal, would not preferably take the Suez sea-level route rather than be exposed to the possible danger of delay, damage, and loss in a lock canal across the Isthmus of Panama. This applies, of course, to those lines of traffic in which the advantage of one route over the other in point of time is not too great a consideration, but it might involve a very appreciable loss in business to the Panama Canal.

It is an open question in my mind if our Government might not find itself obliged to insure or guarantee safe passage through the lock canal in order to secure a satisfactory amount of traffic.

In my judgment, the supreme importance of the Panama Canal to us as a nation lies in its use in time of war, and any delay or damage to war vessels in time of war in a lock canal might be fatal to the issue of a campaign and might involve consequences of extreme gravity to the nation. For this reason a sea-level canal appears to me to be absolutely essential to the future safeguarding of our interests on the Pacific, as well as on the Atlantic.

As well from an economic standpoint as from that of our safety as a nation, I regard the question of expense and also of time to weigh nothing, as compared with the advantages that would accrue to the United States by the construction of a sea-level canal. No other canal, in my opinion, is worthy of this nation.

To your second question (b), Would a sea-level canal of the dimensions proposed provide an adequate, safe, and convenient waterway? I answer "Yes."

My reasons are based upon the experience of shipmasters in the Suez Canal.

To your third question (c), Does the idea of passing your ship through the locks above described, being joined in flights of steps, impress you as attractive and practicable from the standpoint of facility, delay, and danger? I answer "No."

My reasons are based upon my experience in the management of steamships and upon the experience of shipmasters consulted.

With reference to the proposed tidal lock at Panama Bay, while I regret the necessity for any lock, I admit that the varying height of the tidal levels of the two oceans to be connected by the canal render such a tidal lock unavoidable. I assume that such tidal lock would be placed at some distance from the open sea, or would be protected by an adequate breakwater, so that the lock would be entirely uninfluenced by the varying conditions at sea and could be used in any weather.

Trusting that I have covered the ground sufficiently, I am, sir,

Your very obedient servant,

GUSTAV H. SCHWAB.

The remaining letters referred to are as follows:

W. R. GRACE & CO.,
New York, April 14, 1906.

Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE,
Chairman Interoceanic Canal Committee,
United States Senate.

DEAR SIR: We acknowledge your letter of April 11, and note the question which you ask us to deal with. In complying with this request we can not claim such knowledge as qualifies us to criticise the views of the eminent experts who, having gone over the ground, have made their reports, which were transmitted by the President to the United States Senate February 19, 1906.

Our standpoint is that of shippers and shipowners who will naturally use this waterway when completed.

To question "A" we answer: The voyage of a ship always is regarded as involving dangers, and the prudent shipowner seeks to minimize these hazards. In this view we regard the sea-level canal as being safest in respect to possible accidents and detentions, and consequently advise that type.

To question "B" we reply: In our opinion, the sea-level canal, having a bottom width of not less than 150 feet, curves of a minimum radius not less than 8,200 feet, with 200 feet width at the bottom, where the material excavated is rock, and a uniform depth of 40 feet, would be an adequate, safe, and convenient waterway.

To question "C" we reply: It appears to us, as stated in our answer to question "A," that the sea-level plan presents fewer dangers to navigation. We are not favorably impressed by the idea of passing through a large system of locks, having the safety of the ship in view, and the danger of such accidents to the locks themselves, as might obstruct the traffic or damage the canal itself, seems to us a very serious objection to that type.

Very truly, yours,

W. R. GRACE & CO.,
E. EYRE, Vice-President.

T. HOGAN & SONS,

New York, April 16, 1906.

Hon A. B. KITTREDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your communication of April 11, answering your questions, I prefer a sea-level canal. I consider the dimensions proposed would be adequate, safe, and form a convenient waterway. With regard to question "C," I do not like the idea of passing large steamships through steps of locks, as there would be, in my opinion, an element of risk should even a slight accident occur to the lock gates, and, in addition, there would be more or less delay in handling a large number of steamers.

I must apologize for the delay in answering your communication, but I waited to obtain the opinion of our marine superintendent.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. W. HOGAN.

Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE,
Acting Chairman Interoceanic Canal Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of April 12 on the proposition as to whether the canal to be constructed by the Government across the Isthmus of Panama should be sea level or a lock canal, I would state in response to the stated questions:

(a) Without question in my mind, if cost is not to be taken into account, a sea-level canal is the more desirable, if for no other reason than that of the congestion it seems to me certain would result in the lock operation.

(b) I think the dimensions stated for a sea-level canal would prove adequate, safe, and convenient.

(c) Passing of ships through the locks described in your letter does not seem attractive, and, while doubtless practicable, for reasons stated in reply to "(a)" does not seem to me desirable.

Yours, respectfully,

HOWARD PHELPS.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, a most important provision to be afforded by any canal across the Isthmus is that for the rapid and safe transference of a naval fleet of the United States Government from one ocean to another. The sea-level canal is the only one which can truly fulfill this condition. In an exigency requiring such transference all commercial traffic would be stopped in the canal, so that the fleet could rapidly pass through in procession from one ocean to the other without the delay of meeting other ships. If the conditions of the tide were such as to leave the tidal gates open a fleet of at least twenty or twenty-five ships could be passed through the canal in eight to ten hours, for manifestly the ordinary limitations put upon commercial traffic would not control the speed of naval vessels in an emergency. If the stage of extreme spring tides existed at the time of the desired transference both of the twin tidal locks would be in use, and the interval between two ships passing either lock would be but half that determined by a maximum lift or lowering of 10½ feet only.

The time of passage of a ship through the sea-level canal would not be much affected by the order of arrival of ships at either port, whether singly or in groups or fleets, as will be the case much of the time. Whenever such congestions of arrival should take place during extreme spring tides, that portion of those tides during which the gates would be open would so completely relieve the congestion that no ship would be waiting at the end of that period of open gates. The average time required, therefore, for the passage of ships through the canal, even if the average speed be taken no higher than 6 miles per hour, aside from such delays at either terminal as would be required for the receiving of supplies, completing ships' papers, and other similar delays of a business character, would not exceed eight to nine hours, including the passage of the tidal lock at the Pacific terminus whenever necessary.

The estimated cost of the sea-level canal, like that of the lock canal, is based upon unit prices fixed by unanimous action of the Board. The evidence taken before the Senate committee shows that those unit prices are adequately high, and that there is even a probability of the work being done at unit prices less than those used in the estimates rather than more. The allowances for contingencies and for exigencies of construction are well considered and ample for the purpose. It may be confidently assumed, therefore, that the total cost of the sea-level canal will not exceed the estimate found in the majority report.

One of the most disputed points in connection with the proposed construction of this ship waterway is the estimated time required for the completion of the entire work. The majority estimate of time necessary for the completion of the sea-level canal is from twelve to thirteen years.

I will explain later regarding the way that was reached. As a matter of fact, from the testimony appearing before the committee, based upon the manner in which it was acquired, the majority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals is convinced that a sea-level canal can be constructed in not to exceed ten or eleven years. Mr. Hunter in his letter, to which reference has already been made, states that that period, in his judgment, is ample for the completion of a sea-level canal, and that if the work is performed by contract and more than one shift each day is operated, the time can be considerably lessened.

Mr. DRYDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. DRYDEN. Did not Mr. Stevens, after being on the ground and speaking from practical observation of the conditions, state that, in his judgment, it would take from eighteen to twenty years to complete a sea-level canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. Stevens so stated. Mr. Stevens also stated on the 16th of January, before the committee, that he was not at that time ready to talk to the committee regarding the type of the canal, explaining that at that time he had been so busy in administrative matters he had time to read only the majority report twice. One week later, on the 23d day of January of this year, he appeared before the committee and stated that since he had been before the committee he had had time to read the minority report twice, and upon that basis gave the testimony to which the Senator has made reference.

In that connection the former chief engineer, Mr. Wallace, who had been in charge of all the engineering work on the canal from May, 1904, until the 1st of July, 1905, testified that, in his judgment, from his experience and his observation and his calculations, a sea-level canal could be constructed within ten or eleven years. I call attention further to the statement of Mr. Hunter upon that point, and read from page 8 of his letter:

It is agreed on all hands that the duration of time required to complete the excavation of the length of 8 or 9 miles of the canal, commonly known as the Culebra cut, will furnish the measure of the time required for the completion of the sea-level plan, as from that length a quantity of excavation amounting to 110,000,000 cubic yards is to be removed, and as the removal of such quantity will be the major operation in the execution of the project.

It seems unnecessary to consider further the schemes for the removal of a part of this excavation by means of dredging operations; such schemes are wildly chimerical, and are based upon no experience.

The excavation must be effected in the dry, and I beg leave to refer to the diagram showing the manner and times of its removal, which is appended to the report of the Board.

In the preparation of the diagram it was assumed that there would be no limitation of plant; that all the plant which would reasonably be required would be furnished. It was further assumed that the ordinary working year of a steam shovel of three hundred days would be reduced to two hundred and forty days, owing to the climatic conditions of the Isthmus, and that owing to the same cause the daily output of each shovel—working during the day only, no night work having been included in the calculation—would not average more than 800 cubic yards. That is to say, that the annual average output of steam shovels of the exceptional size and power of those about to be employed in Culebra would not be more than 192,000 cubic yards. These figures are beyond the scope of reasonable and unprejudiced criticism, especially when the allowances made in the diagram for delay in getting into full work at the outset of the contractors' operations and for diminution of output toward the close of those operations are duly considered, and they show that the excavation of the Culebra cut can be completed in nine years.

I have added a year to this term for contingencies, and have thus arrived at the time of ten years for the completion of the sea-level canal, as to the feasibility of which I have expressed and do again express so confident an opinion.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLARD. I will state to the Senator that the chief engineer is now in the city, and he states that the testimony which he gave before the committee as to the different types of canal he stands by at the present time.

Mr. KITTREDGE. The examinations made by the Senate committee disclose the important fact that this estimate of time has been based upon results obtained in actual excavation work since the creation of the Isthmian Canal Commission about two years ago, under most disadvantageous conditions of exceedingly deficient track conditions, ill-adapted plant, and incomplete organization. The estimate has further been made with allowance for extreme inefficiency of labor on the Isthmus, for the interruptions and damages caused to work during the rainy season, with provision for the usual laying off of excavating machinery and other plant for repairs and maintenance, and finally on the assumption of but one shift of laborers per day of eight hours only.

These elements of the time estimate show that the entire excavation of the great Culebra cut, which is the controlling element in the time required for the construction of the whole work, can be brought within ten years, to which period, however, an addition is made of 25 per cent, which was done by the Board of Consulting Engineers to secure, if possible, an agreement by the minority, giving the maximum period of construction of ten or twelve years only, as is found in the report.

When it is remembered that it is entirely feasible, and from some points of view desirable, to work two shifts per day during the greater part of the time at least, it is reasonable to anticipate that the sea-level canal could be constructed certainly in a period not exceeding ten to eleven years, and probably within a sensibly less time.

As has been stated, Mr. President, the minority of the Canal Committee has not as yet presented its views to the committee or to the Senate.

Mr. MILLARD. I will say for the benefit of the Senate and Senators that those having charge of the work for the minority have been unable to get their report ready. We hope to present it to the committee to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. KITTREDGE. What I shall say will be upon the assumption of the minority report following the plans proposed by the minority Board of Consulting Engineers and by the Isthmian Canal Commission, or a majority of that Board.

THE RECOMMENDED LOCK PLAN.

The recommended lock plan has a summit level to be maintained at an elevation of 85 feet above mean tide, chiefly by a great earth dam across the Chagres River at Gatun, 7 miles from Colon, but also by a lock and relatively small embankments or other approach works at Pedro Miguel, about 39 miles from Colon and 6 miles from Panama. The superficial area of this great terminal lake on the Carribean side of the Cordillera is over 100 square miles. It receives directly the flow of the Chagres River and all the small streams tributary to it down to Gatun, the location of the dam, including the Gatun and Trinidad rivers.

A terminal lake on the Panama end of the canal called "Lake Sosa," with its water surface 55 feet above mean tide, is formed by three earth dams, one called the "Ancon-Corozal," another the "Ancon-Sosa," and the other the "La Boca dam," the latter extending across the Rio Grande estuary near the La Boca pier. The total superficial area of Lakes Gatun and Sosa is 118 square miles. The flood discharges of the Chagres River and all its tributaries, including the Gatun and the Trinidad, are received into the Gatun Lake, which constitutes therefore a complete control of the Chagres River. A waste waterway or weir with suitable controlling sluices is designed to be placed in the natural hills at one end of the Gatun dam, over which will be discharged the waste waters of the lake.

A wide channel leads from Cristobal Harbor to the Gatun dam, in which are constructed three masonry twin locks in series or flight, constituting the ascent to the summit level of the lake. Each lock has a usable length of 900 feet and a usable width of 95 feet and a maximum lift of about 28½ feet. As these three locks are in a flight or series a ship is lifted by three steps in rising from mean sea level to the summit level, each step constituting a lock. In the operation of either locking up to the summit level, or down from the summit level to mean tide, a ship would pass from one lock chamber directly to another without any space between.

In passing down from the summit level at its southern end there are also three twin locks, each of which has a maximum level of about 32 feet; one is located at Pedro Miguel and the other two are on the westerly side of Sosa Hill, the latter constituting a series of two locks. The increased lift of each of the three locks on the Pacific side is due to the fact that extreme low spring tide is taken to be 10½ feet below mean tide, making the total lift of that extreme low tide to the summit level 95½ feet. The lower of the two locks at Sosa Hill is partly a tidal lock, and it is reached by the wide approach channel leading to it from the deep water of Panama Bay precisely as the tidal lock of the sea-level plan east of Sosa Hill is approached by a similar channel.

In passing from Colon toward the Pacific the first feature of prominence in this plan is the great earth dam across the Chagres Valley at Gatun. This dam is a mound of earth resting directly upon the alluvial, sandy, and gravelly material found there after stripping the surface soil and vegetation growing upon it. There is no core wall or other device extending from the surface down to bed rock, or partially so, for the purpose of cutting off any possible underground seepage or flow of water which might be induced by the head of water of 85 feet produced by the lake behind the dam. The minority do not consider this a serious feature in the design of this dam, as involving hazard of its stability. The majority, on the other hand, regard this feature of the recommended lock plan with disapproval.

The testimony before the Senate committee showed a very strong feeling on the part of some of the members of the Consulting Board that the new conditions created by an unbalanced head of water of 85 feet behind the dam might induce a dangerous seepage or flow of water through the porous subsurface material under the dam, although the maximum thicknesses of the latter might be as much as 2,600 feet. Instances were cited in the testimony taken where such subsurface or underground flow is found in large volumes, even in the absence of any such unbalanced head of water as that acting upon the Gatun dam. These observations acquire much significance and weight in consequence of the fact, not disclosed on the plans submitted with the minority report, that the borings made at Gatun dam site show the subsurface material to be permeable and freely water bearing at various depths from 32 feet below the surface to about 250 feet, the deepest being 258 feet below the surface. This permeable material was found to be so freely water bearing at the various depths named that water flowed over the tops of the casing pipes used in the boring operations as the permeable strata were penetrated. The freely water-bearing character of these strata might lead to conditions highly dangerous to the stability of the dam. The building of such a structure on which the safety of the entire canal and the ship navigating it must depend would be most injudicious.

The Gatun dam site has an interesting history. The occasion on which the conclusion reached by the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers regarding the location at Gatun was not the first time that this site had been considered. As early as 1878 it was seriously taken up by De Lesseps and his consulting engineers in Paris. I have here a history of those investigations, and I will briefly call attention to them and ask that the paper be printed in full in connection with my remarks.

The first mention made in the literature of the Panama Canal of the idea of constructing a dam at Gatun appears in the report of the International Canal Congress, held in Paris in 1878 under the auspices of De Lesseps. Mr. Kleitz, inspector-general of high roads and bridges, dissented from the views expressed by others favoring a sea-level canal, and urged that the Chagres Valley should be inundated, converting the same into an interior lake at an elevation of 78¾ feet, proposing to maintain this level by a dam at Gatun, which, he remarked, was the point nearest the Atlantic which seemed to offer a favorable site for such a structure. This suggestion was disapproved by the technical committee.

The next was in 1880, when it was recommended by Mr. Welch and considered.

The third time it was considered was shortly before the collapse of the old Panama Canal Company, when De Lesseps, finding that company in financial difficulties, called together a number of his engineers to determine some cheaper method of construction. At that time he adopted a suggestion made by M. Eiffel, by whom it was proposed that a lock canal be constructed. The points proposed for the location of the dam by him were eight or ten in number. The one nearest to the Atlantic side of the Isthmus was at Bohio.

The fourth time it was considered was in 1889. At that time the old Panama Canal Company had gone into liquidation, and a liquidator had appointed a commission to study a plan and make recommendations. A lock at Bohio was proposed, but none at any lower point was considered feasible.

The next study for the canal at Panama was made by N. B. Wyse, to whom the original concession from the Republic of Colombia for the construction of the canal was granted, which was transferred by him to the old Panama Canal Company. He proposed six locks in the Panama Canal, three of which were to be at Bohio, and he rejected the idea of a lock at any lower point on the Chagres.

In 1892 Bunau-Varilla prepared a project for the completion of the work, and recommended a series of locks. The nearest lock to the Caribbean Sea on the Atlantic Ocean was at Peña Blanca, about 1 mile distant from Bohio toward the sea.

Soon after the organization of the New Panama Canal Company, which took place in 1894, a technical commission was appointed. That is the commission to which the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] referred. The members of that commission were, as he has stated, Mr. Hunter, whose letter is upon our desks, and also General Abbott, who was one of the minority board of consulting engineers. As appears from a report dated November 16, 1898, they recommended a series of locks with a summit level at 90 feet, two of them at Bohio, and they signed this recommendation:

In the whole valley of the lower Chagres, between Gamboa and the sea, only one location showed favorable conditions for the building of a high dam capable of impounding a lake which could become the summit level.

At that time, as was stated in answer to the inquiry made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, it was supposed from the borings then made that solid rock could be obtained by going to a depth of 128 feet below sea level.

In 1898 the further fact appears that Chagres Valley at Gatun was filled with sand, gravel, clay, shells, and wood to the depth of 258 feet.

The first study of the Panama Canal under the authority of the United States Government was intrusted by the President to the Isthmian Canal Commission, of which Admiral Walker was chairman, and General Hains, General Ernst, and Mr. Noble were members. Mr. Noble, who was mentioned here, was a member of the minority of the consulting engineers who recommended the dam at Gatun. General Hains and General Ernst are members of the Isthmian Canal Commission who also recommend that Congress approve of the plan of locating a dam at Gatun.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do.

Mr. DRYDEN. Has not every project, with the exception of the original project of De Lesseps, contemplated the construction of a lock canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Every project after De Lesseps's proposition was for a lock canal, but the reason that a sea-level canal, as proposed by De Lesseps and the old Panama Canal Company, was abandoned was because of the lack of funds. The old Panama Canal Company found itself in financial troubles, and it went into the hands of a receiver. The New Panama Canal Company, being organized upon the ruins of the old, was anxious to construct the canal with the least possible expenditure of money.

Mr. DRYDEN. I ask the Senator if lack of funds troubled the United States Commission which recommended the several projects for a lock canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. In 1899, when the Walker Commission, as it is called, was created and appointed, it was not for the purpose of locating canals and determining their types, but it was simply and solely for the purpose of recommending to this Government the location of an isthmian canal. Bear in mind, Mr. President, that upon the Walker Commission, to which allusion has been made, Mr. Noble, who is a member of the Board of Consulting Engineers, was a member of that Commission, and General Hains and General Ernst, who are members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, were also members of the Walker Commission.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. If it will not trouble the Senator from South Dakota——

Mr. KITTREDGE. Not at all.

Mr. CLAY. If it be convenient for him to do so, I should be glad if the Senator would state about what would be the difference in cost of the two types of canal—one a sea-level canal and the other a lock canal.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I shall be glad to do that presently when I reach that point in my argument.

Mr. CLAY. All right.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I will state it now, however, if the Senator so desires.

Mr. CLAY. Oh, no; it will be entirely satisfactory to me if the Senator intends to state it later.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to suggest to the Senator from South Dakota, following the question which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. DRYDEN] propounded, that the Walker Commission considered, first, the proposition as to a canal by the Nicaragua route, and not by Panama at all; and on the Nicaraguan route there would necessarily have to be a lock canal.

If I may be permitted to say a word further, I will suggest that when the De Lesseps canal was determined upon by France every American engineer, without a single exception, based his objection to a sea-level canal on the ground that it was too expensive.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am very grateful to the Senator from Colorado for recalling to my mind that fact. It has been accurately stated by him, of course.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator is it not true that De Lesseps collected and had more money at his disposal to carry out his project of a sea-level canal than the majority report states will be necessary to build a sea-level canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, it has been stated that there was squandered by the old Panama Canal Company the sum of $260,000,000, and I hope that this Government will not have such an experience in constructing this canal.

Mr. DRYDEN. The point is that it was not lack of funds which influenced De Lesseps, for he had the funds.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, in the beginning De Lesseps had ample funds, but in 1889, before any steps were taken toward the construction of a lock canal, the company had become bankrupt in fact, or, at least, it was in serious financial trouble.

Mr. DRYDEN. I was only speaking, Mr. President, of course, of the funds he had at the inception of the enterprise.

Mr. KITTREDGE. And he then was constructing a sea-level canal.

Mr. DRYDEN. Which he was not successful in carrying through.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Which he was not successful in carrying through at that time, Mr. President, because he failed in funds, and for no other reason.

The gentlemen whom I have named signed a report which contains a statement which I will read. To repeat, so that it may be well understood, Mr. Noble, a member of the Board of Consulting Engineers, now recommending to us this lock canal; General Hains and General Ernst, also members of the Walker Commission signing this report and now members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, recommending the lock plan, state:

No location suitable for a dam exists in the Chagres River below Bohio.

That is quoted, and it is found on page 62 of the Commission's report.

In the paper read before the American Society of Civil Engineers the late Mr. George S. Morison, a member of the Walker Commission and one of the most noted engineers in this or in any other country, stated:

All engineers who have examined the route of the Panama Canal agree that the neighborhood of Bohio is the only available location for a dam by which the summit level must be maintained.

In 1904 Congress authorized the commencement of the work of the construction of the Panama Canal. A commission was appointed under the Spooner law. That Commission had an engineering committee consisting of General Davis, Mr. Burr, and Mr. Parsons; and they recommended, the chief engineer, Mr. Wallace, concurring, the establishment of a sea-level canal. The report was submitted to the Commission, and at one of its meetings in March, 1904, Mr. Harrod, a member of the first Commission and a member of the present Commission, who now recommends a lock canal, with the dam at Gatun, moved that the report of the engineering committee, as respects the type of canal, be adopted by the Commission. So that of the five members of the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers now recommending that Congress adopt a lock canal, two—General Abbott and Mr. Noble—stated in writing that it was not possible to construct a dam nearer the sea than Bohio; and three—General Hains, General Ernst, and Mr. Harrod—directly, or indirectly in the case of Mr. Harrod, reached the same conclusion and put it in writing.

Gatun was again rejected by the Board of Consulting Engineers.

I ask to have this statement inserted in the RECORD at length, without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

MEMORANDUM.

1. The first mention in the literature of the Panama Canal of the idea of constructing a dam at Gatun appears in the report of the International Canal Congress, held in Paris in 1878, under the auspices of M. de Lesseps. M. Kleitz, inspector-general of highroads and bridges, a Government engineer of the French Republic, dissented from the view expressed by others favoring a sea-level canal, and urged that the Chagres Valley should be inundated, converting the same into an interior lake at an elevation of 78½ feet, proposing to maintain this level by a dam at Gatun, which he remarked was the point nearest the Atlantic which seemed to offer a favorable site for such a structure.

This suggestion was disapproved by the technical committee appointed by M. de Lesseps and a sea-level canal was favored, thus disposing of the proposition to erect a dam at Gatun.

2. The next mention observed in the literature of a dam at Gatun was by Ashbel Welch, former president of the Society of Civil Engineers of the United States, who in 1880 proposed that an artificial lake in the Chagres Valley be maintained by a dam at Gatun, its height not mentioned. Mr. Welch refers to Mr. C. D. Ward, member of the Society of Civil Engineers, as having first proposed a dam at this place, but no action by anybody authorized to express an opinion on this subject appears to have been taken.

3. Shortly before the collapse of the old Panama Canal Company, M. de Lesseps, realizing that funds could not be raised in sufficient amount to complete the sea-level canal, adopted a suggestion made to him by M. Eiffel, who conceived the novel idea of constructing locks, to be located at various points along the canal line, these to be made of metal, the intention being to utilize them for the interoceanic transit for a few years and then to displace them and convert the lock transit into one at sea level. The points proposed for location of dams by M. Eiffel were eight or ten in number, the one nearest the Atlantic side of the Isthmus to be placed at Bohio.

4. In 1889 the old Panama Canal Company went into liquidation. The liquidateur appointed a commission, which made a study respecting the then condition of the works of the canal enterprise, and recommended to the liquidateur that the canal be completed, utilizing for this purpose all the work so far accomplished, but to introduce a system of lockage. A lock or locks at Bohio were proposed, but none at any lower point on the Chagres River. It was, of course, known to this commission that Gatun had previously been proposed for a dam and locks, but the liquidateur's commission rejected this idea.

5. The next study for a canal at Panama is embodied in a report made upon the proposition by N. B. Wyse, who was the officer of the French navy who had obtained from Colombia the original concession under which M. de Lesseps proposed to operate, and which concession is the basis of all work that has since been done at Panama. This gentleman proposed six locks in the Panama Canal, three of them to be at Bohio. He rejected the idea of a lock at any lower point on the Chagres. The report was addressed to the liquidateur of the old Panama Canal Company.

6. In 1892 M. P. Bunau-Varilla prepared a project for the completion of the Panama Canal. He proposed five locks on each side of the divide, the summit level to be raised to about 130 feet. The lock nearest the Atlantic side, recommended by M. Bunau-Varilla, was to be at Peña Blanca, about 1 mile below Bohio, but he suggested no lock at any point below Peña Blanca.

7. Soon after the organization of the New Panama Canal Company, which took place in 1894, a technical committee was appointed for the purpose of making a study of plans for the completion of the Panama Canal. The committee consisted of twelve eminent engineers. Included in that number were Gen. Henry L. Abbot, of the United States Corps of Engineers, and Mr. Hunter, recently member of the Board of Consulting Engineers for the Panama Canal. This committee reported to the New Panama Canal Company on November 16, 1898, and recommended a series of locks with a summit level at 90 feet. The locks on the Atlantic side were to be located two at Bohio and two at Obispo, but none at any point on the Chagres below Bohio, thus again rejecting Gatun as a site for a dam and locks. The report of this technical committee, which be it remembered was signed by General Abbot, contains the following:

"In the whole valley of the lower Chagres, between Gamboa and the sea, only one location showed favorable conditions for the building of a high dam capable of impounding a lake which could become the summit level." (See page 97, Part II, data on Panama Canal submitted to the Board of Consulting Engineers by the Isthmian Canal Commission September 1, 1905.)

In 1898 it was not known that the Chagres Valley at Gatun was filled with sand, gravel, clay, shells, and wood to a depth of 258 feet; yet General Abbot now thinks this site for a dam is available and suitable.

8. The first study made of the Panama Canal under United States Government authority was intrusted by the President to an Isthmian Canal Commission, of which Admiral Walker was chairman and Generals Hains and Ernst and Mr. Noble were members, and its report is dated November 16, 1901. A lock canal was proposed by this commission, with summit level at 90 feet, to be maintained by locks on each side of the Isthmus. With respect to location of locks, the Commission remarked in its report: "No location suitable for a dam exists in the Chagres River below Bohio." General Hains and Colonel Ernst, present members of the Isthmian Canal Commission, signed this report. (See page 62 of the Commission's report, Government print.) In a paper read before the American Society of Civil Engineers on the 5th of March, 1902, Mr. George S. Morison, a very distinguished American engineer, who had been a member of the Walker Isthmian Canal Commission, remarked: "All engineers who have examined the route of the Panama Canal agree that the neighborhood of Bohio is the only available location for a dam by which the summit level must be maintained." It therefore appears that the Isthmian Canal Commission unanimously and Mr. Morison specially rejected the idea of a dam at Gatun.

9. In 1904 Congress authorized the commencement of the work of constructing the Panama Canal, having previously purchased all the rights and franchises and property that belonged to the old French companies, and having acquired a right of way from the sovereign Republic of Panama. This Commission as a body never took any definite action with respect to the type of the canal that was to be constructed beyond ordering new examinations and consideration; but an engineering committee of its own members, consisting of Messrs. Burr, Parsons, and Davis, in February, 1904, recommended, the then chief engineer concurring, that no lift locks be utilized in the transit route that the Government was proceeding to construct, but, instead, that the canal be made at sea level. The report of this engineering committee was submitted to the Commission, and at one of its metings in March, 1904, Mr. Harrod moved "that the report of the engineering committee as respects a type of canal be adopted by the Commission." (See p. 426, Proceedings of the Isthmian Canal Commission.) Action, however, upon this resolution was confined to a reference of the subject to a committee on engineering plans of the whole Commission, and no further action by the Commission has resulted.

10. Under authority of the President, by Executive order dated June 24, 1905, a board of consulting engineers was appointed "for the purpose of considering the various plans proposed to and by the Isthmian Canal Commission for the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Panama." This board consisted of eight American and five European engineers, the latter nominated, by request of the President, by the diplomatic representatives of foreign governments, and their report has been submitted to Congress. All plans for a canal at Panama that were on file in the office of the Isthmian Canal Commission were considered by the Board of Engineers. Their report is dated January 10, 1906, and a canal at sea level was recommended by the Board, the report being signed by eight of the engineers composing it. But a minority report was submitted by five of the members, recommending a lock canal, three locks on either side of the Isthmus, with summit level at 85 feet. In the report of the minority of this board Gatun was selected as the site for the three locks on the Atlantic side, this summit of 85 feet to be maintained by a high earth dam at this point and the valley of the Chagres submerged and inundated throughout its whole extent, the lake extending nearly to Alhajuela. The majority of the board, eight to five, strenuously opposed the idea of a dam and locks at Gatun on two grounds: First, that the introduction of locks in a treatment of the question was objectionable from many points of view; and, second, that the maintenance of a summit level by means of an earth dam of immense magnitude to control the flood waters of this river introduced an element of great danger, since the dam, without sheet piling, was proposed to be founded on the alluvial-filled gorges of the Chagres River, where the depth at one point extended 258 feet below the level of the sea.

Of this minority one member, Mr. Noble, was a member of the former Isthmian Canal Commission, who, as above stated, had reported that Bohio was the lowest point on the Chagres where a dam was practicable.

11. The report of the Board of Engineers was reviewed by the present Isthmian Canal Commission, which then and now comprises Major Harrod and Generals Hains and Ernst. These three engineer members indorsed the recommendations of the minority of the Consulting Board for the lock canal with dam at Gatun, while Admiral Endicott, the fourth engineering member, indorsed the views of the majority for a canal at sea level.

It appears that in March, 1905, Major Harrod was, as above shown, opposed to any lock plan, and that his two associates favoring locks and the dam had said in 1901 that no proper site for a dam existed below Bohio.

It therefore appears that every consideration of the Panama Canal type by any unauthorized body, either corporate or governmental, rejected the idea of a dam at Gatun, and its indorsement is confined to a minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers which was called by the President to advise him upon the type of canal that ought to be adopted, and to three members of the Commission who had previously either been in favor of a sea-level canal or who had said, in effect, that Gatun was not a proper site for any dam.

Those who earlier proposed Gatun as a dam site, Messrs. Kleitz, Welch, and Ward, had no technical information whatever as to the physical characteristics of this site. Had these three engineers known that the dam would have to be nearly a mile and a half long, and that the alluvium in the gorge upon which the structure was to rest was 258 feet deep, it may be safely doubted if they would ever have proposed so hazardous a project.

Mr. KITTREDGE. In this connection I will read a few sentences from the report of the Board of Consulting Engineers upon the subject of the Gatun dam. They say:

The United States Government is proposing to expend many millions of dollars for the construction of this great waterway, which is to serve the commerce of the world for all time and the very existence of which would depend upon the permanent stability and unquestioned safety of all dams. The Board is therefore of opinion that the existence of such costly facilities for the world's commerce should not depend upon great reservoirs held by earth embankments resting literally upon mud foundations or those of even sand and gravel. The Board is unqualifiedly of opinion that no such vast and doubtful experiment should be indulged in, but, on the contrary, that every work of whatever nature should be so designed and built as to include only those features which experience has demonstrated to be positively safe and efficient.

In the face of these facts, Mr. President, with this record before them, it remained for the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers to advise the Congress to recommend the construction of a multilock canal, with locks of absolutely unprecedented size and yet of dimensions too small to fulfill the requirements of the present statutes.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I interrupt the Senator?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do I understand the Senator to say that the engineers who said that a dam could not be built at Gatun now recommend a lock canal with a dam built at Gatun?

Mr. KITTREDGE. That is true, Mr. President, in the case of General Abbot, a member of the Board of Consulting Engineers; that is true in the case of Mr. Noble, a member who signed the minority report of the Board of Consulting Engineers; it is true of General Hains and General Ernst, who signed the majority report of the Isthmian Canal Commission, and it is true by indirection in the case of Mr. Harrod in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. OVERMAN. Do they give any reasons for the change in their recommendation?

Mr. KITTREDGE. None whatever, except that they had changed their minds.

Mr. DRYDEN. And I suppose, Mr. President, that they have changed their minds because further investigation and a more complete knowledge of the conditions there convinced them that the dam could be built at Gatun.

Mr. KITTREDGE. The dam can be built there, Mr. President. The question is, How long will it stay if it be built?

Mr. BACON. I should like to ask the Senator in that connection——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. If the dam should be built and by any possible contingency it should be swept away, what would be the result as to the construction of the canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The dam would be ruined completely and absolutely.

Mr. BACON. The dam would be ruined, of course; but I am speaking of the canal itself. What would be the effect on the canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The canal itself would be ruined, because the Gatun dam is the key to the integrity of the entire work.

Mr. BACON. In other words, the maintenance of the dam is necessary to preserve the water level?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Absolutely. It would be by means of this dam that the water would be raised to the height of 85 feet, thus enabling the shipping to pass across the Isthmus.

Mr. BACON. That was the fact I wished the Senator to state.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Yes.

Mr. DRYDEN. It can be just as appropriately asked, What would happen in case the dam at Gamboa should be carried away? Of course, if the foundation and everything else connected with any structure is carried away, there will be ruin in the pathway; but it will be shown before this debate closes that some of the greatest authorities in the world upon dam building have staked their words and their reputations that a dam at Gatun can be built which will endure any attack upon it by the Chagres River under the most violent conditions that have ever been recorded with regard to that river.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Will the Senator permit me to first answer the question of the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. KNOX. Certainly. I did not understand that a question had been asked.

Mr. KITTREDGE. It had been, as I understand. If the dam at Gamboa be destroyed, which by no possibility will happen any more than in the case of the Croton dam near New York City, or the simplest dam that you can find on any river in the United States, the canal itself would not be destroyed. Upon the question if eminent engineers have not recommended the Gatun dam, I agree with the Senator that they have. The minority of the Board of Engineers have told us by their report and in oral testimony before the committee that that dam would stand. My point in reference to it is that the fact that just as eminent engineers say that it will not stand creates such a doubt in reference to its stability that this Congress ought not to take any chances upon a structure that is the key to the integrity of the entire work. I now yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not true that Mr. Barclay Parsons, who is one of the most eminent engineers who favor the sea-level canal, testified that his objection to the lock canal did not depend upon any doubt as to the stability of the dam at Gatun; and did he not, in reply to the specific question, say that he thought the dam at Gatun would be a stable dam?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. Barclay Parsons so stated in substance. He also stated—I read from page 1786 of the testimony, in reply to a question asked by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO]:

Senator TALIAFERRO. Do you consider the dam as proposed by the minority at Gatun, is it not?
Mr. PARSONS. At Gatun; yes.
Senator TALIAFERRO (continuing). Do you consider that a safe dam?
Mr. PARSONS (after a pause)—

I do not read it all, but it is in substance as the Senator has stated—

I do not know that I quite go to the length that some of them do—

Speaking of the integrity of that structure—but when you have a question mark opposite the key detail of your whole structure one naturally hesitates.

That was the testimony of Mr. Parsons.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator be kind enough—he has the testimony before him and I have not—to read what Mr. Parsons replied to the question that I asked him specifically whether it would be a stable dam? If the Senator has not the testimony at hand, of course I will not ask him to read it.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I have it; but the Senator, Mr. President, has stated with substantial accuracy Mr. Parsons's testimony upon that point.

Before leaving the point suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I submit that Mr. Parsons's testimony is absolutely against the Gatun dam. He covers and touches upon the precise question that must appeal to every thoughtful man, and that is, in a great work of this kind, why leave any one of the great structures in any possible doubt? If a man has a business proposition that he may accomplish by pursuing either of two ways, one a safe way and one involved in doubt, it requires no statement from me to convince, I hope, every Senator that the man of prudence takes the safe course, and that is the course the majority of your Committee on Interoceanic Canals have advised the Senate to take. Eliminate all the doubtful, unusual, and untried propositions that are involved in the construction of a lock canal at Panama and take the safe course, the sea-level course, where every doubtful, unusual, untried, and experimental proposition is absolutely eliminated.

With a sea-level canal there is left a single simple question—the excavation of an immense quantity of material, it is true, but not so much that this Government, strong in resources, should balk at the proposition of digging out a few miles of rock and earth.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I do.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator to say that the majority of the committee recommend a sea-level canal because, in their judgment, a lock canal would be unsafe? And do I understand the Senator to say that a majority of the Board of Consulting Engineers take that course, basing their report upon the fact that the lock canal would be unsafe?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The Senator is absolutely right. I might go further and state that there are other reasons in addition to the one suggested, but that is the prime reason.

Mr. DRYDEN. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. DRYDEN. I suppose the Senator will admit with equal grace that the minority members of the committee do not concede any such thing?

Mr. KITTREDGE. We are not advised what their course is.

Mr. DRYDEN. You will be.

Mr. MILLARD. The Senator will be.

Mr. KITTREDGE. We will be by to-morrow, I am told.

Mr. MILLARD. We expect so.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, I turn to the testimony of Mr. Parsons and will read a few sentences in connection with the lock feature of the canal, which I had not yet reached.

Senator DRYDEN. Do you consider that the flights of locks, as provided by the minority, are dangerous or impracticable?
Mr. PARSONS. I consider them exceedingly dangerous, Senator.
Senator DRYDEN. You think that the machinery is liable to get out of order so that there will be difficulty in operating the locks?
Mr. PARSONS. It is not merely the question of machinery; it is the question of human fallibility. Take the Manchester Canal, for instance. There have been three cases in the history of that canal where vessels have actually gone through a lock.
Senator DRYDEN. Gone through? You mean where they have broken it down?
Mr. PARSONS. They have broken it right down—charged and gone through; and the day will come at Gatun—it may not come the first year, it may not come for ten years, it may not come for twenty years, but that it will come I do not think there is the slightest doubt—when some steamer will go plunging down that ladder.
Senator DRYDEN. And the effect of that would be to put the locks out of business for a long time?
Mr. PARSONS. The effect of that would be to put the canal out of business for a period of anywhere from one to five years. In other words, you would have to rebuild the locks; you would have to refill the lake; you would have to reconstruct the channel below the locks, to say nothing of the damage that would result from such an accident.
Senator DRYDEN. I understood you to say that such an accident would delay the use of the canal for from three to five years, possibly?
Mr. PARSONS. Probably. You would have to reconstruct the canal.

I will not read further, because it is plain to every Senator, and substantially the same facts appear in the letter from Mr. Hunter, to which reference has been made.

Passing now from Gatun to the dams on the Panama side, the same general considerations and corresponding hazards to stability are applicable to a more or less degree to the earth dams designed to be built in the same general way at the Pacific end of the canal for the creation of Sosa Lake, involving the same grave hazards to stability, except that the La Boca dam would rest upon the slippery mud and silt found at the mouth of the Rio Grande estuary. In consequence of this latter condition the majority of the Consulting Board regard the stability of that dam to be further endangered by the possibility of its being pushed completely out of position by this mud and silt acting as a lubricant, in spite of its great mass.

Returning for a moment to the Gatun dam, although perhaps I have dwelt at too great length upon it, the minority propose simply to strip off the surface of the earth, the decayed vegetable matter, for a depth of from 10 to 20 feet, and on that foundation—not pretending to go to solid rock, because it is an impossibility, not pretending to put down any core wall or any other means to cut off the seepage of water, or further protect the dam—to pile in this mountain of earth, as it is, upon a foundation of the character I have mentioned. And the same is true at Panama, with the further additional fact that the surface at that point is of the character just stated.

When it is remembered that the actual existence of the entire canal, as designed in the recommended plan, would depend wholly upon the safe maintenance of these terminal lakes, it will be seen that any element of the situation which hazards the existence of those lakes jeopardizes not only the safety but the actual existence of the entire canal. It is a grave question whether the United States Government should enter upon an expenditure amounting in the total to nearly $200,000,000 for the attainment of a project the very existence of which is threatened by so serious a danger.

The flight or series of three locks at the Gatun dam, which must be passed by any ship using the canal, is a dangerous menace to the safety both of the canal and of the ships seeking its use. It has been the experience of every lock and lock canal, as exemplified by the Manchester Ship Canal and the great locks at Sault Ste. Marie, that ships will inevitably be brought into dangerous collision with lock gates in consequence of the engineman misunderstanding the signals given by the pilot. The latter may signal to go ahead or to stop or to reverse, and in each instance the engineman may misunderstand the signal and do precisely what he has been signaled not to do. A considerable number of serious accidents of this kind have been brought out by the Consulting Board. Three times have the lock gates at the "Soo" been put in serious jeopardy in precisely the manner described, and this experience has been more than duplicated on the Manchester Canal. On a number of occasions the complete wreckage of the gates in the one case, and putting the canal out of commission in another, has been narrowly escaped. If serious accidents can occur in the single lock (the Poe lock) at the Sault Ste. Marie, where ships run practically on schedule time and pass and repass so often as to make the passage of the lock a matter of weekly or fortnightly routine, they would be practically certain, with much greater frequency, in the six great locks in the Panama Canal, each with 50 per cent greater lift than at the "Soo."

As pointed out in the majority report, a ship might easily ram the gates of the upper end of the Gatun locks and plunge down through the whole series of three, destroying the lock gates and itself, and destroying the canal, as well, by draining the summit level. The possibility of such a catastrophe is greatly enhanced by the fact that both shipmasters and crews would be unfamiliar, in consequence of rarely visiting the Panama Canal, with the operation of locking up and down through these flights or series of locks. Nor would it be safe to pass ships up and down the Gatun lock flights by permitting one ship to follow another as closely as possible, a procedure which would put two ships at the same time in the flight separated at most by one lock chamber. So much hazard would attach to this operation that doubtless traffic regulations would be so made that but one ship only would be permitted in one series or flight at a time. While this would enhance the safety of the ships using the locks it would also materially increase the time required for the passage of the ships.

The hazards to passing ships would become more serious still if it were desired to put a fleet of United States naval vessels through the canal in the shortest possible time in consequence of some pressing exigency. In any case there would be great danger of losing a ship by accident and putting the canal out of commission at the same time. All these hazards are too great to be permitted if it is feasible to build a canal in which they are avoided. These hazards are enhanced in the proposed plan by the fact that ships 850 to 900 feet long can not pass the upper lock of the Gatun flight without dispensing with the use of the safety gate. In other words, the safety gate can not be employed when it is most needed—that is, with the greatest ships.

In this connection I ask to have inserted, without reading, two letters from Mr. Parsons upon the subject of earthquakes, calling attention simply to the last sentence in one letter, in which he says:

As I wrote you in my last letter, I am more than ever convinced since the earthquake—that our Government should not expend its money in a canal with elaborate locks. If the Government does do so, it will regret it and will undo the mistake at a later period at a very greatly increased cost.

Referring to the California earthquake—

I also present a little memorandum upon the subject of earthquakes and their possible effect, and I also call the attention of Senators to Senate Document No. 264 of this session of Congress; and, if I may be pardoned the further suggestion, this subject is briefly treated in the report of the majority of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, accompanying this bill, to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

60 WALL STREET, NEW YORK, April 19, 1906.

MY DEAR SIR: The terrible disaster that has occurred in San Francisco should be considered in connection with the Panama Canal. While it appears from the papers that there was no disturbance of the ground or any movement in the hills which compose San Francisco sufficient to produce topographical changes, or that would have altered any channel cut through the hills, nevertheless the disturbance was sufficiently great to throw down houses and destroy great masonry buildings, such as the city hall.

Had a similar movement, or even one of very much less intensity, occured at Panama, while the canal itself would not have been damaged, it is a certainty that the lock mechanism and the lock gates would have been disturbed enough to have stopped them from working, even though they had not been damaged enough to permit water to pass through. In the case of the three-lock scheme this would have involved at the minimum the drawing off of the water from the upper level, and might have involved the destruction of the canal.

Of course this was all gone into in the testimony taken by your committee, but I call it to your attention so that the committee may have it fully in mind when they come to make a desision.

The building of three locks in flight is, in my mind, as I stated to the committee, an absolutely unwarrantable risk for the United States Government to take.

Very truly, yours, WM. BARCLAY PARSONS.

Hon. ALFRED B. KITTREDGE,
Committee on Isthmian Canal Affairs,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR KITTREDGE: I have your letter of April 20, which has been unanswered on account of my absence from the city.

I do not consider that either the Gamboa dam or the Gatun dam would have been injuriously affected by such an earthquake as they had in San Francisco. To throw down a dam of the dimensions of either of these dams would be practically impossible. A dam that is built of masonry could not be destroyed, and the worst that could possibly happen to it would be a crack, which would allow the reservoir behind it to leak off; the dam itself would not be washed away. In the case of an earthen dam, especially where the foundations could not go to rock, it is conceivable that a great earthquake might open the underlying seams of impervious material and allow a dangerous amount of water to escape. A big crack in an earthen dam would allow the water to rush through and wash the dam away, as was the case at Johnstown. Personally I should not be afraid of either dam.

With the locks, however, the case is quite different, and an earthquake, such as they had at San Francisco or even one of much less intensity, would throw the lock mechanism out of order, and might throw the locks themselves so much out of position as to draw off the water in the summit level, which it would take a year to replace. With the locks all located at one place, as the minority report proposes, I think it is safe to assume that such an earthquake as the one we have just had in San Francisco would have rendered the canal useless for some months.

It is true that a tidal lock would also have been damaged, but even if the tidal lock had been destroyed the canal would still have been serviceable. During the neap-tide period, or one-half of the month, a tidal lock is not necessary, and during the spring-tide period a tidal lock will not be necessary except at the extreme range of high and low water for three or four hours of the twenty-four. Herein lies the great advantage of the sea-level canal. The damage to its lock is not fatal.

As I wrote you in my last letter, I am more than ever convinced since the earthquake that our Government should not expend its money in a canal with elaborate locks. If the Government does do so, it will regret it and will undo the mistake at a later period at a very greatly increased cost.

Very truly, yours, WM. BARCLAY PARSONS.

Hon. A. B. KITTREDGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

EARTHQUAKES.

The most pertinent discussion of the danger to the Panama Canal from earthquakes, found in the canal literature, will be seen in the report of the first Walker Commission, pages 113–114 of the Government print, as follows:

"The effect of the undulations of the earth's surface upon any structure increases with the height of the structure above the ground. A force which would leave the foundation intact might throw down a high wall.

"The works of the canal will nearly all of them be underground. Even the dams are low, compared with the general surface of the country, and with their broad and massive foundations may be said to form part of the ground itself, as they are intended to do. The locks will all be founded upon rock. It does not seem probable that works of this kind are in any serious danger of destruction by earthquakes in a country where lofty churches of masonry have escaped with a few minor injuries.

* * * * * * *

"It is possible and even probable that the more accurately fitting portions of the canal, such as the lock gates, may at times be distorted by earthquakes, and some inconvenience may result therefrom. That contingency may be classed with the accidental collision of ships with the gates, and is to be provided for in the same way—by duplicate gates.

"It is possible also that a fissure might open which would drain the canal, and, if it remained open, might destroy it."

In the report of the majority and minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers, and in the canal hearings before the Senate committee, are references to the danger to be apprehended from earthquakes and their effects upon the different structures proposed. The dangers to be apprehended from these earth shakes that have been forecasted are the following:

1. A disturbance of the alignment of the lock walls, either by overthrowing, cracking, or tilting them.
2. The fissuring or overthrowing of masonry dams.
3. The formation of fissures in earthern dams.
4. The sliding into the canal of the upper masses of earth and rocks along the deep excavations at Culebra.

The masonry work least liable to destruction or serious injury is a masonry dam reenforced with steel bars, with wide base founded upon rock and joining two or more hills of rock, or of a masonry core wall similarly strengthened and founded, also reenforced or buttressed, one might say, above and below with great masses of earth piled against it. This proposition is obvious.

The Culebra upper slopes might, if previously saturated with water from long rains and followed by a quake, become loosened and slide into the canal; but the only earth on those slopes at all liable to such action is the upper strata at Culebra, and the danger from its loosening or sliding is precisely as great with a lock type as with the sea-level type. The lower rock masses will be no more liable to move than are the hill slopes, which are as nature, through the ages, has left them, and they are found all along the Isthmus near Culebra with slopes sometimes almost vertical.

If an earth wave passed the site of an earthen dam on an alluvial base with a high head of water against the structure, disaster would almost certainly result.

If such a wave passed the site of a lock or a double series of them—six in all, which, empty, would show parallel walls over 40 feet high above water and 40 feet below—the alignment would almost certainly be disturbed, to say the least, so that the gates would not close, for any movement at all would almost certainly result in tilting the walls inward or toward one another. Extra gates, prepared against such an emergency, would be useless, for no one could say to what extent the tilting or leaning might go, and the new gates would not fit, for the former vertical walls would be so no longer.

Again, such a wave would almost certainly result in the fracture of the filling and emptying pipes, conduits, or tubes, relied on to let in and out the lockage water.

The above is all that can be said or predicted respecting the effect of earthquakes on the Panama Canal.

The least structures there are the safer the canal will be. A ditch is less liable to disturbance than any structure.

The accounts we have read of the San Francisco earthquake tell us that the destruction was greatest to those buildings founded on filled in material and on the low alluvial material. They also tell us that the water pipes fetching water, relied on for extinguishing fires, though buried in earth, were cracked and broken and the whole system of water supply put out of commission for many days—a result that could easily and almost certainly be foretold at Panama of the cast-iron conduits or pipes used for filling and emptying the Gatun, Pedro Miguel, and La Boca locks.

Mr. KITTREDGE. The small map at the left shows the number of borings that have been made under the proposed Gatun dam site and the locks at that point. An examination of the map will disclose the fact that in that area of ground, a mile and a half long and a half mile wide, and under these great locks as the minority propose to construct them, they have taken not over forty borings to determine the character of the foundation upon which they propose to rest that great dam, and especially the lock structures. They propose to construct locks having a usable dimension of 900 feet in length and 95 feet in width, three in flight, and the lock structure, the guard walls, approach walls, and all the other necessary elements of that design will make a structure more than 1 mile long. It will be observed, if one examines the map, that with one or two exceptions not a boring has been made under the site of the proposed locks at Gatun to determine the foundation.

In this connection I again remind the Senate of the fact that four years ago before the Interoceanic Canal Committee, as well as in the report of the Walker Commission, filed in November, 1901, it was confidently and positively stated that at Bohio a solid rock foundation could be secured at a depth of only 128 feet. When Mr. Wallace visited the Isthmus to begin his operations as chief engineer and began his explorations, he discovered that the rock at Bohio, instead of being 128 feet, as stated, was 168 feet, a depth that absolutely precluded the possibility of a dam at Bohio with a rock foundation.

I now present and ask to have incorporated in my remarks a statement from the address of Mr. William R. Hill, the engineer in charge of the Croton dam, the great water reservoir for the city of New York. It gives his experience in the foundation of that structure. I will read just a word:

Such a structure—

Referring to the Croton dam, where they made a few borings and put up their wall, and it appearing defective, caused them to take it down because they discovered trouble not anticipated—

Such a structure can not be regarded as anything but an experiment. It is abnormal and unprecedented in all its dangerous features. The engineer might apply in vain to science for aid in computing the efficiency of such a structure; he could get no light, for he could find not even the slightest guaranty of safety in a structure so built.

The same would be especially true in any dam at Gatun and the locks connected with it, as well as the dams on the Panama side.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Before the writer assumed the responsibility of this work, the foundation of the stone dam had been completed to the surface of the ground and the core wall had been completed, excepting the stretch between the stone dam and the gate house, which lacked about 60 feet of its height.

In the spring of 1901 this core wall cracked in five places within a length of 100 feet. This caused the writer to believe that some serious disturbance had taken place, as in his opinion the cracks were too close together to be caused by contraction. After close study of the conditions there was no conclusion to be arrived at except that there was a fundamental weakness here, and therefore it would be unsafe to proceed with the work. This close study brought to view objectionable features of the plans of the embankment and core wall, the most conspicuous of which were three. First, the excessive height, narrow base, and unstable foundation of the embankment; second, the great height of the core wall, and, third, the double means afforded the water to reach the core wall.

To take up the first, the embankment: It was to be 150 feet high and only 650 feet thick at the base. This section would be not only about 40 per cent higher than any heretofore built, but in comparison with other high embankments its base was narrow for its height. As an example, the Amawalk dam, which forms one of the upper Croton reservoirs, while only about half the height—85 feet—yet has a base even wider than that of this embankment of unprecedented height. And further, this embankment was hazardous because of the unstable nature of its foundation. It was founded over a great refilled pit, which was 360 feet wide at the top, 170 feet at the base, and 70 feet deep. This pit was a necessary excavation for the foundation of the end of the stone dam, which was 164 feet wide at the base, as before stated. It would be impossible to refill this pit as compactly as original ground; hence the safety of the reservoir was dependent not only on an embankment of a problematic section, but this problematic section rested upon an unstable foundation.

The second of the objections: The core wall of this embankment was 200 feet high and with no lateral protection or support from original ground whatsoever, as the artificially placed earth on each side of the wall had the height of the wall itself, 200 feet. Considering the height of the wall, and this in artificially placed earth, it could be but an experimental structure, inasmuch as it would be about twice the height of any heretofore built.

The third objection, the double means afforded the water to reach the core wall. This is another serious objection, as the water, by starting at the end of the embankment in the reservoir and following between the face of the stone dam and the embankment would inevitably reach the core wall. It would be impossible to puddle or otherwise compact the embankment against the dam to prevent this, as settlement would surely follow in any embankment of this great height. This objectionable feature here exists because of the combination of a stone dam and an embankment, while it could not exist in either a continuous stone dam or, on the other hand, a continuous embankment and core wall. As to the second channel by which the water could reach the wall there is also little doubt, for it would be afforded freer access through the refilled material of the great pit than it would have in ordinary cases, where the wall below the original surface of the ground is in a narrow trench and protected by original soil. It would be useless to consider any proposition to increase the width of the embankment, because the means afforded the water to reach the core wall along the face of the dam would always remain. This is a most dangerous feature, as the core wall would not have sufficient weight or strength to resist the pressure of the water that would come against it.

A fourth objection might here be stated, namely, the permeable and light character of the earth of which the embankment was made, but even with the best of material, an embankment so constructed would be insecure.

Thus it will be seen that the safety of this reservoir was dependent not only upon an embankment of a problematic section, resting upon an unstable foundation, but also upon a core wall of phenomenal height, unprotected and unsupported by original soil and attended with the greatest of all possible risks—that is, the means afforded water to reach the center of the embankment against the core wall.

Such a structure can not be regarded as anything but an experiment. It is abnormal and unprecedented in all its dangerous features. The engineer might apply in vain to science for aid in computing the efficiency of such a structure; he could get no light, for he could find not even the slightest guaranty of safety in a structure so built.

The failure of this embankment might not only create a devastating flood in the valley below, but also cause a current above of such irresistible velocity as would destroy the earthen part of the old Croton dam, thus at once cutting off the supply of water to the city until the old dam could be repaired, and in addition postponing indefinitely the time when the city could have the additional supply of water which the enlarged reservoir was to furnish.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President, furthermore, it is shown in the testimony taken that inasmuch as the summit level of a lock plan is necessarily of fresh water, the locks proposed by the minority do not afford sufficient depth of water in them to pass ships drawing 38 feet of water, which the largest ships now building will require.

A large portion of the lake channels contemplated in this plan have submerged banks, which are sources of much danger to navigation. These dangers, it is true, may be lessened by buoys, if they are placed sufficiently near together. The submerged banks of such channels, however, do not lose all their dangers by buoying even when those buoys are comparatively close together, as the eye of the pilot is not clearly informed of the limits of a channel by anything short of a continual visible bank. Whenever submerged banks are found it is customary, in order to avoid as much danger as possible, to give as much increased width as practicable. This has been done in the recommended plan, but there still remain the dangerously objectionable features of submerged channels, which experience in the interlake navigation through St. Marys River and the shallow portions of Lake Huron and Lake St. Clair has shown by years of inconvenience and many groundings, should be avoided whenever practicable. A continuous visible bank is such a sure and unerring guide for a pilot that scarcely any practical width in connection with submerged banks will compensate for its absence. Any plan of canal which involves submerged channel banks contains in it a dangerous and unsatisfactory element.

The cost of annual maintenance of a great ship waterway of this character should be kept as low as practicable. There should be no feature of an adopted plan which would entail increased cost of maintenance or which would enhance the difficulties of operation. It was brought out in the testimony taken before the Senate committee, as also appears from the reading of the minority report of the consulting engineers, that inasmuch as the Chagres and all its tributary streams discharge directly into the Gatun Lake, all the silt, sand, and other similar material eroded from the banks and beds of rivers by floods and freshets will be discharged directly into the terminal lakes. In the case of the Chagres River and some of its tributary streams, all the solid material or sediment brought down by the river from above Gamboa and from some distance below that point will largely be deposited in the channel of the canal between Gamboa and Tavernilla and below the latter place, a distance of over 8 miles. Throughout this distance the lake is narrower than it is both above and below, and the natural concentration of sediment-bearing current in the canal channel, not only below Gamboa, but above it, will invariably result in serious silting or deposition of sediment. A large annual expenditure will therefore have to be made in order to meet this single serious feature of maintenance. Other streams also bring their sediment directly into the lake, in some cases where material sedimentation is practically certain to occur, with the corresponding annual charge for its removal.

The actual time of passage of a ship through the canal proper, after having actually entered it at either terminus, in the recommended plan, will be largely affected by the time required to pass the locks, although it will be affected by some other considerations, such as the size of ship, the largest ship contemplated to be passed by the canal requiring more time in consequence of less speed than smaller ships. The minority count on one ship following another in the shortest possible time in passing the series of three locks in flight at Gatun, but in the actual working of the canal doubtless but one ship at a time would be permitted in the Gatun flight. If all the lock machinery and all the appliances were to work with ideal perfection, each ship moving promptly into and away from a lock or a series of locks, and without delays of any kind, the time of passage of a ship 400 to 500 feet long would probably require eight to ten hours. Without such perfection of working of machinery and appliances, and with the usual derangement of machinery and such other delays as in the long run would be covered under the head of "repairs and maintenance," the time of actual passage would be at least 50 per cent greater.

Ocean steamships seeking the passage through the canal would, in the long run, largely or mainly arrive in groups or fleets of greater or less number within short periods of time. In such cases those ships which fail to pass into the canal promptly would be delayed by waiting frequently a considerable number of hours. Again, the annual experience of such a canal would show the locks to be out of commission at least a number of weeks each year, in consequence of repairs and work of maintenance always consequent upon the installation and use of such great masses of machinery and appliances. The locks at the Soo are laid up each year about one-third of the time in consequence of the severe winter of that locality. A considerable portion, or perhaps nearly all of this part of nonuse, is then required for repairs, reconstruction, and other similar work. Hence, the time consumed for the much greater repairs and works of maintenance at Panama, when distributed over all the ships delayed, would be a material amount, although it can not be exactly estimated. If both these classes of delays to vessels be added, as they must be, to the time of actual passage, it is scarcely possible that the average time of each vessel in this lock plan can be less than from two to three times required for passage through a sea-level canal.

These delays, due to lock passages and other retarding influences, would act in a manner most gravely objectionable if the United States Government should desire to pass a fleet of twenty or twenty-five naval vessels from one ocean to the other in the shortest possible time to meet some extraordinary exigency. It may be presumed that all commercial traffic would be stopped in such a case, leaving the entire canal free for emergency use. The period of time between two consecutive vessels would be that required to pass the flight of three locks, which would not be less than one and one-half to two hours. If it be assumed that both sets of locks are in order and used for passage in the same direction, as may be supposed, it would require from twenty-eight to thirty-six hours to accomplish the transference, provided no accident happened to any of the locks during their use, or that no vicious enemy put one or more of them out of commission by the use of a small quantity of high explosive. The manner of passage of the ships would be a slow procession, with an interval of at least one hour between consecutive ships, whereas in a sea-level canal they would pass through in close order in about one-third the time required by the lock canal. In the sea-level canal, at the worst, there would be a period of separation between two successive ships of one-half the time required to pass one tidal lock with a lift of only 10½ feet.

The capacity of the recommended lock plan has been estimated by the minority at 70,000,000 tons annually. This capacity is estimated essentially on the assumption that all ships reach the terminal ports in proper order and at suitable times to enter the locks immediately, and that they pass through all the locks of the canal without any accident or delay whatever. The estimate is further based upon the assumption that the machinery and appliances of all locks work promptly, without defect or failure from any cause, and that two ships passing in the same direction may be in triple flight of locks in the Gatun dam at the same time. Nor is provision made for those periods in each year when individual locks would be out of commission for repairs and overhauling. It was shown in the majority report, and in the testimony before the committee, making due allowance for these various sources of delay, and recognizing the fact that the lockage of a ship in the general use of the canal would occupy much more time than that computed, that while the exact annual capacity can not be reliably estimated, it can not reasonably be expected to be more than about 35,000,000 tons, and perhaps materially less.

Although much reference is made by the minority in this connection to the capacity of the single lock at Sault Ste. Marie, it was shown that such a reference is greatly misleading. The navigation of the St. Marys Falls Canal is of a highly specialized character. It consists of ships of various sizes plying with almost the regularity of a railroad schedule between lake ports, so that there is practically no congestion of ships arriving in groups. Each ship, arriving essentially on its schedule time, generally passes the lock without delay. Furthermore, there is but one lock at the Soo, so that the delays and internal congestion of a multilock plan, which increase in a much higher ratio than the number of locks, are entirely absent. The facility with which a large traffic passes the Poe lock at the Soo is correspondingly no indication whatever of the lack of facility which would characterize the passage of a Panama lock canal by ocean ships, arriving frequently in groups or fleets, with crews untrained for the special canal navigation.

The proposal to lock two or more vessels at one time through the series of two or three locks in flight in order to increase the capacity of the minority plan is delusive. It was shown in the testimony before the Senate committee that that operation involves too much danger and delay in a flight of locks to be permissible. It would be fortunate if the capacity of the recommended lock plan should in actual use even approach 35,000,000 tons annually.

These considerations regarding the annual capacity of the lock plan acquire a most serious significance when it is observed that any amount of widening or deepening of the canal between the locks will not increase the capacity of the canal by even a single ton of traffic without the reconstruction of the locks, the latter feature absolutely limiting the capacity of the canal. While it would be possible to reconstruct the locks in order to give them greater capacity, it would be a long and very costly operation. After such reconstruction the locks originally built still be retained for the passage of smaller ships, should there would practically be wastage, although, if desired, they could be a sufficient water supply.

The President emphasized, to the Consulting Board, in his instructions of September last, the importance of the transformability to a sea-level plan of any lock plan that might be considered for recommendation. The minority plan possesses practically the minimum of transformability of any lock plan that can be devised. The existence of the great terminal lakes with the twin triple series of locks in the Gatun dam render the operation of transformation, after the canal is once in use, very difficult and expensive. The great dams and all the locks and other subsidiary works, amounting in the aggregate to upwards of $60,000,000, would be absolutely wasted. All the money which the Government would have expended in paying for the submerged lands would also have been practically wasted, although, after the draining of the lakes, those lands might in time become salable.

The cost of transformation of a lock canal, almost identical with that recommended by the minority to a sea-level canal, with the sections recommended by the majority, was found to be $208,985,000, without any allowance for contingencies. If there be added to this sum the usual 20 per cent for allowance, employed by the board in its regular estimates, and the estimated cost of the lock plan, $139,705,000, the total cost of the sea-level canal, ultimately attained in this manner, would be $390,487,000. To this sum again must be added the land damages paid by the United States Government for the lands submerged by the terminal lakes, which would bring the total cost up to a sum of over $400,000,000. It is not surprising, therefore, that both the majority and minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers believe that if the recommended lock plan should be adopted the attainment of a sea-level canal would never be realized in any reasonable future period of time.

The total curvature in the sea-level plan is sensibly less than the total curvature in the lock plan. The former therefore gives an easier and safer navigation. The banks of the sea-level channel are everywhere visible, giving a constant and more easily followed course than the submerged banks of the lock plan. Although it is the intention in the lock plan to buoy the submerged banks at all turns and probably at intervals along straight courses, the invisibility of the banks of the channel where submerged is a source of constant danger. Although this danger may be reduced by placing buoys close together, it can not be removed in the absence of visible limits to the channel, unless the latter be much wider than generally contemplated by the minority.

The smallest radius of curvature in the sea-level plan is 8,200 feet, or over 1½ miles. The greatest radius of curvature reaches 13,222 feet. In the lock plan the curvature as laid down on the plan of the minority indicates a radius of curvature as small as 1,700 feet.

If a model in plan of a ship 1,000 feet long and 100-foot beam be moved along the plan of the sea-level canal proposed, it will be found that it can be passed freely around all curves, and that in no case when it is moved centrally along the canal will the prolongation of its center line strike the bank of the canal ahead of it within a distance of nearly the ship's length. This condition has been shown by experience in the Suez Canal to give sufficient freedom in rounding curves. All these considerations show that the sea-level canal prism, as proposed in the majority report, will give complete facility and ample freedom for its navigation by the largest ships contemplated by the consulting board—a conclusion which is justified by experience in navigating existing maritime canals in Europe, including the canal at Suez, whose prism is much less in dimensions than that proposed by the majority. On the other hand, it has been shown in the testimony before the committee that if the full usable dimensions of 900 by 95 feet for the locks of the minority plan be allowed, those locks, on the completion of the canal, will fail to accommodate ships then afloat, if the rate of increase in ships' dimensions during the past ten years continues during the next ten years.

The estimated costs of the canal under both plans is based upon unit prices determined by the whole board. The testimony taken before the Senate committee indicates that these unit prices are more likely to be found too high than too low for all classes of excavation. This observation is justified by the actual work of excavation which has been done since the American occupation of the Canal Zone. Owing to the difficulty in securing suitable sand for concrete on the Isthmus, and the necessity of transporting the great quantity of cement required in the masonry of the lock plan, and the further necessity of skilled labor to manufacture and put the concrete in place, the unit price for concrete may be found a little low. As the lock plan requires far greater amounts of concrete masonry than the sea-level plan, any shortness of unit price for the concrete would affect the estimate for the lock plan much more than that for the sea-level plan.

The criticism of the Commission and the minority on the unit price of $1.25 per cubic yard for the excavation at the bottom of the Culebra cut below the elevation of 10 feet above mean tide is without any foundation. The canal prism in the bottom of the Culebra cut would not be excavated under water. That excavation would be an ordinary open excavation in the dry. Any small amount of water flowing into the excavation from springs or from rainfall could readily be pumped out in the ordinary way. No water from the sea can possibly get into the bottom of the Culebra cut until it is permitted to come in. Natural bulkheads of rock or temporary dams at the Pacific end of the excavation for the prism would keep out all sea water until the completion of the excavation. Excavation of the bottom 40 or 50 feet of the Culebra cut for the sea-level canal presents no unusual feature. Every part of the process is common to similar work being done all over the United States many times every season.

The testimony given before the committee shows that a reasonable estimate for the annual cost of maintenance of a sea-level canal would be not to exceed $1,600,000, whereas the annual cost of maintenance of the lock canal, as estimated by the minority, would be at least $2,400,000, or at least $800,000 more than that of the sea-level canal.

The dredging in the Suez Canal between the two terminal ports is chiefly caused by the wind blowing into the canal each year about 2,500,000 cubic yards of sand. No such element of maintenance is required on the Isthmus. All streams tributary to the two terminal lakes in the recommended lock plan bring in great quantities of silt, which would result in the serious silting of the channels for considerable distances, whereas in the sea-level plan practically no heavy silt is brought into the canal prism at all. The tributary streams either pass through sedimentation basins, which catch practically all the silt, or, as in the case of the Gatun and other rivers, the discharge reaches the ocean without passing into the canal prism at all.

In answer to the inquiry of the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] regarding cost, I will say that the cost of a sea-level canal on the plan proposed, agreed to by all the engineers, the minority as well as the majority, with the addition of 20 per cent for contingencies, was, in round figures, $247,000,000; for the lock canal, in round figures, $139,000,000, leaving a difference, in round figures, of a hundred million in first cost between the two plans.

I am now proceeding to show that if the decreased cost of maintenance and operation of a sea-level canal as compared with a lock canal be capitalized, as is proper, and if account is taken of the submerged land, the actual difference in cost between the two will not exceed fifty or sixty million dollars.

The charge for maintenance of the sea-level canal prism is therefore relatively very small. In the recommended lock plan the annual maintenance charge for dredging the deposited silt out of the channel, added to the costs of repairs and maintenance of the six locks, makes a large sum. Erroneous estimates have been made by the minority for the maintenance of the sea-level plan, which the testimony before the committee showed to be about $800,000 per year too great. If this excess of annual maintenance charge for the lock plan be capitalized at 2 per cent the total estimated cost of the minority plan should be increased by the resulting sum of $40,000,000.

It was further shown in the testimony before the Senate committee that the damage costs to the United States Government for the 118 square miles of land submerged by the proposed terminal lakes in the lock plan might reach from fifteen to twenty millions of dollars. This estimate also should be added to the estimate of the minority for the cost of the recommended lock plan.

Regarding these estimates, I will say they have been stated to be as high as $25,000,000. For the purpose of this estimate I am dividing it, and place it at $10,000,000, and the experience of this Government in the condemnation of land on the Isthmus justifies that estimate. If to that is added $40,000,000 as the capitalized amount of the decreased cost of maintenance and operation, it leaves the extra cost not more than $50,000,000 or $60,000,000.

Mr. DRYDEN. Does it not also appear in the testimony that the estimate for the purchase of the submerged lands, including an estimate by Mr. Stevens, does not exceed $300,000?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Oh, yes, it is so stated; but the committee find otherwise, and it bases it upon the experience of the United States Government in the matter of condemnation and acquisition of land upon the Isthmus during the time it has been on the Isthmus.

The total cost of that plan, estimated upon all the detailed items of expenditure, would thus be about $195,000,000. As the total estimated cost of the sea-level plan is about $247,000,000, it is seen that the actual cost of the completed sea-level plan is about $50,000,000 in excess of the recommended lock plan. The computed interest charges upon the cost of the sea-level plan would necessarily be greater than those resulting from the construction of the lock plan, but it has been shown that the latter would be defective and insufficient in capacity as well as dangerous to operate and costly to maintain. The excess of cost of annual maintenance for the lock plan would probably balance the greater interest charge of the sea-level canal.

The more complicated character of the work required in the locks and other great masonry structures of the lock plan involves correspondingly great uncertainties as to the time required to complete them. These more involved classes of work requiring the building and transporting of great quantities of heavy machinery to the Isthmus and installing them, the fabrication and placing of great quantities of concrete masonry, the total being not far from 3,500,000 cubic yards, together with the securing and maintaining of the requisite force of skilled labor, give to any estimate of time for the completion of such constructive work great uncertainty. The estimated period for completing the lock canal is almost certain to be overrun, so that the actual time of completion of each plan would not be very different from the other. Any estimated amount of interest charges on the cost of the sea-level plan, based upon any such period of construction as fifteen to twenty years, as found in the minority report, is without any real foundation.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from South Dakota permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I presume the Senator recognizes that in the case of a sea-level canal it would be entirely practicable, as the necessities might develop, to deepen the canal. I think the Commission itself states that fact. Is that true of a lock canal? If a lock canal is built, is it not necessary that its maximum depth shall be established in the beginning? In other words, to increase the depth of a lock canal would it not necessitate a rearrangement of all the locks and everything connected with it? I am led to make that inquiry from the fact that I noticed in the report of the Commission they speak of the fact that the canal, if the sea-level plan be adopted, might originally be at a depth of 35 feet, and thereafter 5 feet more could be readily added, when the larger ships made that necessary, without stopping the operation of the canal.

Mr. KITTREDGE. The Senator is absolutely right in his statement, and the reason clearly appears from the report to which he refers. It may be added that the capacity of the lock canal is absolutely limited by the capacity of the locks. You can not get a ship through the canal greater than can pass the locks, and once you limit the lock capacity, as is done in this case, the only remedy to increase the capacity is to tear down the lock structures and build anew.

Mr. BACON. Whereas with a sea-level canal the capacity of enlargement is not limited by any such condition?

Mr. KITTREDGE. The Senator is absolutely right. It can be enlarged in any direction to accommodate the necessities of commerce or the desire of the Government.

Mr. CLAY. With the Senator's permission——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KITTREDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator has any information on the subject, how much longer would it take a ship to go through a lock canal than a sea-level canal? Is it not also true that there would be more danger to a ship going through a lock canal than a sea-level canal? I presume the committee has investigated all those questions.

Mr. KITTREDGE. There is, of course, greater danger to a ship going through a lock canal than a sea-level canal. That point is thoroughly and completely determined by the testimony given before the committee, as well as in the report.

It will take between two and three hours longer to pass through the lock canal than a sea-level canal when the locks work well. It will require between four and five hours to pass through the locks that are proposed by the minority of the Board of Consulting Engineers, and, I presume, by the minority of the committee. In other words, it will take more than half the time necessary to pass the entire distance of a sea-level canal to get through the locks alone.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator is it not also true that insurance would necessarily be a great deal higher on ships going through a lock canal than a sea-level canal?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I am unable to answer that question. It is possible that it is.

Mr. CLAY. Is it not probable?

Mr. KITTREDGE. It is possible that in the testimony we have covered that subject, but there has been such a great mass of it I have for the moment forgotten. My impression is that it would cost more in the way of insurance to pass through a lock canal than a sea-level canal.

Mr. DRYDEN. Mr. President, the Senator has been very accommodating in permitting me to interrupt him, and I hesitate to do so again.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. DRYDEN. I think I shall not interrupt the Senator again, but I simply want to say here that as to certain statements which the Senator makes from his point of view, and which he thinks are substantiated, the minority, of course, have a different view of this matter. I am only going to add that if issue is not taken as to certain matters stated it is not that they are to be considered as admitted by the minority. The minority will have their day, and they will present their views.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I assume that I am not expected to answer that inquiry.

Mr. President, the only material difference in the elements of time and cost in these two types of construction is about $50,000,000, estimated upon a correct basis for the lock plan; but that plan has been shown to be seriously defective in capacity, falling far short of the requirements of the statute, and likely to be inadequate for the ships afloat at the time of its completion, and, as has also been clearly shown, involving grave dangers in operation and high cost in maintenance. In other words, the great advantages of various kinds possessed by the sea-level plan far more than compensate for its small additional cost.

On the question of cost I again refer to the letter of Mr. Hunter. He says:

> It can not be denied that a lock canal, of whatever type, can be constructed at less cost in money than a sea-level canal. But when the estimates of cost contained in the report of the board and in the minority report are compared, and when to the latter are added the additional costs required (a) for removing the kinks from the line of the channel through the Gatun Lake, (b) for increasing the locks to the dimensions called for by the Spooner Act, (c) for adding cut-offs and core walls to the dams, (d) for clearing so much of the tropical growth from the areas to be submerged as will be absolutely necessary for navigation purposes, the difference between the two projects will be reduced to a capital sum, which will be insignificant when compared with the relative advantages and disadvantages of the projects particularly when the volume of the traffic which must, in the natural development of the world's commerce and the inevitable increase in the world's population, pass over the isthmian canal, be taken into consideration, as there seems no reason to doubt that the revenue from that traffic will afford a return satisfactory to the citizens of the United States for their expenditure on the waterway.

Now, Mr. President, with an apology to the Senate for having taken so much time, I submit this question for the present. During the progress of the debate I shall, with the permission of the Senate, if it becomes necessary, take occasion to reply to some of the arguments which I infer from the junior Senator from New Jersey may be submitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator wish to have the unfinished business temporarily laid aside?

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania does not desire to call up the Post-Office appropriation bill until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania gave notice this morning that he would call it up to-day.

Mr. KEAN. If he desires to call up the appropriation bill, I will give way to him. I withhold my motion for the present. The Senator from Pennsylvania will be here in a moment.

FALSE ALARMS OF FIRES.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14513) to prevent the giving of false alarms of fires in the District of Columbia.

Mr. KEAN. That is a very proper bill, and it ought to be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, under the subhead "Office of the Postmaster-General," on page 1, line 8, to reduce the appropriation for advertising from $5,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, after line 9, to insert:

For traveling and other necessary expenses of three experienced postal officials, to be designated by the Postmaster-General, whose duty it shall be to investigate postal systems and conditions in Great Britain and the continent of Europe, and submit to the Postmaster-General detailed report of the results of their inquiries, with such recommendations as to improvements in the postal establishment and service of the United States as may seem desirable, $10,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads the necessity for this provision. I had supposed that we already knew about as much in regard to postal matters as they do in Great Britain or on the Continent.

Mr. PENROSE. That item was put in the bill on the special recommendation of the Postmaster-General. He seems to be of the opinion that if he can have this appropriation to send skilled officials from the Department here to keep abreast of improvements and to compare our system with the system abroad, probable results will ensue. The amendment was put in by the committee on the special request of the Postmaster-General. It is not a very large amount. I myself am of the opinion, after an investigation, that it would be profitable for the Government to keep in touch with improvements in the postal service in foreign countries.

It may be said that our consuls have, as a part of their duty, the keeping of the Government advised as to such improvements. But, as a matter of fact, the consuls have not the skill and the technical knowledge of postal methods to enable them to profit by investigations into the postal systems of other countries.

It is not a very large appropriation. There is no branch of the Government that, in its mechanical and administrative features, is improving every year more than the postal service in new methods of distribution, transportation, and postage. I believe this is a good provision.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to oppose it in any captious way. It occurred to me that our consuls might, with great propriety, look after a matter of this kind, and I think now that it properly belongs to them. But if the Senator has done this at the suggestion of the Postmaster-General I assume that is probably a reason we ought to acknowledge without question.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I do not see the occasion of sending three men. I think one good man would accomplish all necessary purposes.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course they want companionship.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that it is a question of companionship, but, as I understand it, the office of the First Assistant would have a specialist from his bureau skilled in the various matters arising under the office of the First Assistant. The Second Assistant, having a vast and important branch of the postal service, might want to investigate and compare matters abroad relating to his department. There are several great departments of the postal service somewhat different and considerably segregated.

Mr. NELSON. Who are these men to be? Are they to be men already in the service?

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand it, they are supposed to be employees of the Department.

Mr. NELSON. Detailed from that Department?

Mr. PENROSE. Detailed from that Department. The appropriation is simply for their traveling expenses. I do not understand that it is the creation of any extra places or any junkets for visiting statesmen.

I know that General Shallenberger two years ago went abroad and made some valuable investigations in the transportation of the mails, especially in the great cities of London, Paris, and Berlin, and on his return he was able to advise the Postmaster-General and the Senate Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in a very lucid and important way as to the methods of transportation and the delivery of mails in the city of London and in other places.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I trust that the $10,000 appropriated will result in that amount of good to the service. I have my doubts, but I raise no further objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the amendment be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again read.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 8, before the word "dollars," to strike out "two thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "three thousand;" in line 9, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "six" and insert "ten;" in line 13, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "one hundred and thirty;" in line 15, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "eighteen inspectors, at $1,500 each; seventy-eight" and insert "one hundred and ten;" in line 16, after the word "each," to strike out "twenty-five inspectors, at $1,300 each;" in line 18, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "thirty-five;" and in line 21, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-eight thousand one hundred" and insert "five hundred and fifty-four thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

Auditors, two, at not exceeding $3,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 10, after the word "private," to strike out "secretary" and insert "secretaries;" and in line 12, after the word "registry," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twenty-six;" so as to make the clause read:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $900,000, and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts not exceeding, in the aggregate, $1,250,000, under the provisions of the law, for a period not exceeding ten years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 9, after the words "cities of," to strike out "Cincinnati, Kansas City, and Pittsburg" and insert "Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburg, Pa., and San Francisco, Cal.;" so as to make the proviso read:

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the three lines on page 17 which are proposed to be stricken out by the committee, and which had escaped my attention. On page 17, beginning in line 3, the part I refer to is as follows:

And with the right of termination at the discretion of the Postmaster-General of any such contract at the end of any year of the contract term after four years, on one year's notice.

I will read the entire sentence, beginning in line 21, on page 16:

For the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes or other similar devices, $900,000, and the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to enter into contracts not exceeding, in the aggregate, one million—

The words "one hundred and sixty-one thousand two hundred and sixty-five dollars and eighty-four cents" are stricken out and the words "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars" are inserted. Then it continues:

under the provisions of the law, for a period not exceeding ten years, and with the right of termination at the discretion of the Postmaster-General of any such contract at the end of any year of the contract term after four years, on one year's notice.

It appears from the bill as printed that the words "and with the right of termination at the discretion of the Postmaster-General of any such contract at the end of any year of the contract term after four years, on one year's notice" are stricken out.

As the bill originally stood as it came from the other House, if the Postmaster-General made a contract for ten years for pneumatic tubes, he had a right to cancel such a contract on giving a year's notice.

Mr. GALLINGER. After four years.

Mr. CLAY. Yes; after four years. That provision of the House bill has been stricken out in this connection. It was a wise provision. The words to which I have referred were stricken out probably when I was not attending the committee meeting, although I was there most of the time. I should be glad to have the chairman of the committee explain how that amendment came to be proposed.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the lines to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] refers were stricken from the bill after some discussion in committee. I do not recall whether the Senator from Georgia was present while the committee was discussing that particular branch of the paragraph, although he was one of the most faithful members of the committee in general attendance during the discussion of the bill.

The principle involved is that these people are entitled to a ten years' contract from the Government for this service. It has been found extremely difficult to get capital to invest in the construction of pneumatic tubes unless there is assurance of some duration of the contract; and I understand the work has been very much delayed and embarrassed in several cities—in New York, I believe, among others—by reason of the difficulty of getting the very large and considerable amount of money necessary to construct these works invested by the corporation doing it.

My recollection is that the Department itself recommends the striking out of those words. I have the letter of the Department somewhere, though I can not lay my hand upon it at this moment. Anyway, the purpose of the amendment is to give the people who invest in this pneumatic-tube service contracts for ten years, with the assurance that the Government will not abandon the service and render their investment useless and valueless, but that they will have some justification for going into the very considerable expenditures involved in this work, by giving them a ten years' contract.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to make an inquiry in regard to these contracts.

Mr. CLAY. If the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] will permit me, I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] that my understanding is that we now have pneumatic-tube service in operation in Boston, Chicago, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, and New York, and that those contracts were made with the existing law in force, which authorizes the Postmaster-General to make contracts with those people for ten years for the purpose of putting in and operating these tubes. Those contracts provided that the Postmaster-General, after a service of four years, should have the right to terminate them if he so desired. In other words, all the contracts which have been heretofore made have been made with the distinct understanding that existing law gave the Postmaster-General the right to terminate them after they had been in operation for four years if he deemed it proper to do so.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. This provision authorizes the granting of contracts for the transmission of mail by pneumatic tubes in the cities where pneumatic tubes have heretofore been put in operation, and the sum appropriated is $1,250,000. Can the Senator tell me how much of that sum is intended, or whether the whole of that sum is intended, for contracts with respect to the cities in which these tubes have already been put? If so, what is the Senator's idea as to the effectiveness of the proviso excepting the cities of Baltimore, Cincinnati, etc.?

Mr. PENROSE. I can not tell the Senator exactly how much of this item would go to any particular locality. All I know is that the amount was agreed on after conference with the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads in the House of Representatives and with the Department, and the committee was informed that it was satisfactory and amply sufficient to carry out all the recommendations of the Department for the cities mentioned in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. It must be obvious to the Senator that the whole of this sum will have to be expended upon contracts for the transmission of the mail in pneumatic tubes in the cities where those tubes are now in existence. Therefore it does not seem to me that any part of that sum, or any other sum, so far as I can see, is available for the extension of pneumatic tubes in the other cities that are named.

Mr. PENROSE. As I understand, the money will not be required immediately. This bill simply authorizes the contract, and this amount is all that the Department thinks it will require during the current fiscal year for which this appropriation is made.

Mr. FORAKER. Then the Department is of the opinion that part of this sum of $1,250,000 will be available for putting in pneumatic tubes in Baltimore, Cincinnati, etc.?

Mr. PENROSE. They think this is all the money they can spend, assuming that they will go ahead as fast as they can secure service in the cities mentioned in the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know what the amount is estimated to be that would be required for putting in pneumatic tubes in these additional cities.

Mr. PENROSE. The amount was very carefully considered. It is the result of the recommendation of the Department, after conference with the House committee, and is considered sufficient for the interests represented by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER].

As to the point raised by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], I do not think it of any importance whether or not those words remain in the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I was going to say to the Senator that he will remember that the Second Assistant Postmaster-General did state to the committee that he hoped to see the time come, and he believed the time would come, when the Government could construct these tubes and carry this character of mail cheaper than the Government is able to do at present prices. I hope the Senator, in view of what has been said, will simply let this amendment go over until to-morrow, so that I can look further into it.

Mr. PENROSE. I am perfectly willing to let the amendment go over or to let it go out of the bill—either one.

Mr. CLAY. Well, let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. MARTIN (to Mr. CLAY). Let it go out of the bill.

Mr. CLAY. Very well; let it go out of the bill, then.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Then the amendment of the committee on page 17, striking out lines 3, 4, and 5, which has been agreed to, will be regarded as disagreed to in the absence of objection. The Chair hears no objection, and it is disagreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. As to the other amendment, I have no doubt as to what the Senator from Pennsylvania has said, but I should like an opportunity to investigate it.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will ask that that amendment go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment reported by the committee striking out the words in lines 9 and 10, on page 17, and inserting certain other words which have been read, will go over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 17, line 22, before the word "for," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "building," and insert "buildings;" and in line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "nine," and insert "fourteen;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of buildings for a mail-bag repair shop and lock repair shop, and for fuel, electric power, light, gas, watchmen, charwomen, oil, and repair of machinery for said shops, 14,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 18, to insert:

For rent of buildings to be erected for the use of the division of supplies and the mail-bag and mail-lock repair shops, $17,500, and the Postmaster-General may enter into a lease for buildings to be erected for the use of the division of supplies and the mail-bag and mail-lock repair shops for a term not exceeding ten years at an annual rental not to exceed $35,000, to be paid quarterly.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That on account of the earthquake calamity in California on April 18, 1906, authority is hereby given to the Postmaster-General to use the average daily weight of mails for a period not less than thirty successive working days ascertained during the period from February 20 to April 17, 1906, in adjusting the compensation, according to law, on all railroad routes in the fourth section for the transportation of mails during the quadrennial term beginning July 1, 1906, notwithstanding the provision of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, requiring that the average daily weight shall be ascertained by the weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days not less than ninety.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 23, to strike out:

For pay of freight on postal cards, stamped envelopes, stamped paper, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, $250,000. And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and wherever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, stamped paper, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service in the respective weighing divisions of the country immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and thereafter such postal cards, stamped envelopes, stamped paper, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service shall be transmitted by freight.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For pay of freight or expressage on postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, $250,000. And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, in the respective weighing divisions of the country immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and such postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, shall be, whenever practicable, transmitted by either freight or express.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I wish to inquire if that amendment is open to amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is open to amendment.

Mr. STONE. I desire to offer an amendment, and then I will ask that it may go over.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri desires to offer an amendment to the amendment, and then to have it go over.

Mr. STONE. I desire to add, after the word "quarterly," in line 8, on page 18, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to be addressed to the amendment that is before the Senate. The amendment to which the amendment is now proposed has been agreed to, but, in the absence of objection, the amendment will be regarded as open to amendment. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. At the top of page 18 of the committee amendment——

Mr. STONE. I made a mistake in the place where the amendment should come in. I wish it to follow the word "express," in line 2, on page 20.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 2, after the word "express" in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster-General shall include periodical publications issued in magazine form by alumni associations of any university as second-class matter, and the same shall be admitted to the mails as such, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter and no more.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I shall have to object to that amendment, among other reasons, for the reason that, upon the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, the committee has added at the end of the bill a provision for a joint committee of both branches of Congress to investigate the whole question of second-class mail matter and to report next winter. This is only one of a score of questions raised under that classification of mail matter. I think it would be improper to single out these publications to be provided for in the bill. I would suggest that the Senator wait and allow the question to come up before the Commission this summer.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I understood the Senator desired simply to complete the reading of the bill this evening. I wish to say something to the Senate upon this amendment, and I suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that the amendment go over.

Mr. PENROSE. I was going to suggest to the Chair that perhaps this amendment is not in order now anyway. Only committee amendments are being considered. The Senator from Missouri can offer his amendment when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I wish to offer it as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. It would properly come in, I think, when the bill is reported to the Senate——

Mr. STONE. I supposed it could come in here.

Mr. PENROSE. Or in Committee of the Whole itself after the committee amendments have been disposed of. What I ask now is that the Senate complete the consideration of the committee amendments. The Senator will then be at liberty to offer his amendment, and speak thereon if he desires.

Mr. STONE. I prefer to offer it as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator has offered his amendment, and it will be considered at the proper time. It can not be considered now.

Mr. STONE. What do I understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to propose?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would call the attention of Senators to the fact that the proposed amendment is in the form of a proviso to the committee amendment, and is in order as an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand that the Senator from Missouri now desires to address the Senate upon his amendment?

Mr. STONE. I should prefer to let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not want to rush this bill unduly; but, of course, I want to dispose of it as early as I can.

Mr. STONE. Let this amendment be passed over.

Mr. PENROSE. All right. I ask that the consideration of this amendment go over until to-morrow, and that the Senate proceed with the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 21, line 7, to increase the appropriation for railway post-office car service from $5,875,000 to $6,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 19, before the word "assistant," to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-one;" in line 21, before the words "chief clerks," to strike out "one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "one hundred and thirty-five;" in line 23, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two hundred and fifty-nine" and insert "two hundred and seventy;" on page 22, line 1, before the word "clerks," to strike out "one thousand two hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand two hundred and ninety-three;" in line 3, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five hundred and twenty-eight," and insert "five hundred and thirty-seven;" in line 5, before the word "clerks," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four;" in line 8, before the word "clerks," to strike out "one thousand seven hundred and fifty" and insert "one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine;" in line 10, before the word "clerks," to strike out "five thousand four hundred" and insert "five thousand four hundred and fifty;" in line 13, before the word "clerks," to strike out "two thousand one hundred and seventy" and insert "two thousand one hundred and seventy-one;" and in line 17, before the word "dollars," to insert "three hundred and twenty-two thousand two hundred;" so as to read:

Railway Mail Service: One general superintendent, at $4,000; 1 assistant general superintendent, at $3,500; 1 chief clerk, office of general superintendent, at $2,000; 1 assistant chief clerk, office of general superintendent, at $1,800; 11 division superintendents, at $3,000 each; 11 assistant division superintendents, at $1,800 each; 5 assistant superintendents, at $1,800 each; 21 assistant superintendents, at $1,600 each; 135 chief clerks, at $1,600 each; 270 clerks, class 6, at not exceeding $1,500 each; 1,293 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,400 each; 537 clerks, class 5, at not exceeding $1,300 each; 1,854 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,200 each; 1,879 clerks, class 4, at not exceeding $1,100 each; 5,450 clerks, class 3, at not exceeding $1,000 each; 2,171 clerks, class 2, at not exceeding $900 each; 905 clerks, class 1, at not exceeding $800 each; in all, $15,322,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 13, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" and in line 16, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-seven" and insert "thirty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

Per diem allowance of assistant superintendents, $30,000; and for their necessary official expenses not covered by their per diem allowance, not exceeding $2,500; in all, $32,500: Provided, That assistant superintendents may receive a per diem allowance in lieu of actual and necessary traveling expenses at the rate of $4 per day while actually traveling on business of the Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, line 22, to reduce the appropriation for inland transportation of mail by electric and cable cars from $940,000 to $793,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, line 21, after the word "shall," to strike out "deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service" and insert "consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

Mr. MALLORY. I desire to inquire why that change in phraseology is proposed to be made?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. MALLORY. I should like to inquire why this amendment is reported by the committee?

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment was offered on the earnest representations of a member of the committee living along the route of the road, who thought it ought to be in, and the committee agreed to it. Heretofore the Postmaster-General has expended the whole amount regardless of the necessity for the service. He has taken it for granted that Congress thought the service was necessary and that the amount should be expended. This amendment speaks for itself.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has that provision ever before been in a Post-Office appropriation bill?

Mr. PENROSE. Never.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is entirely new.

Mr. PENROSE. It is entirely new. Of course the subsidy has been in for many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. The subsidy for this service?

Mr. HOPKINS. For over twenty years.

Mr. PENROSE. The Southern mail appropriation has been in for many years.

Mr. GALLINGER. But it is in a different form this year?

Mr. PENROSE. There is different phraseology applying to the expenditure of it.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY (to Mr. MALLORY). Did you have the floor?

Mr. MALLORY. I thought so, but it seems I had not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. MONEY. I desire to say a few words on this amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, this amendment has been in the Post-Office appropriation bill for a great many years. I was the author of it a great many years ago; I suppose twenty-five or more, possibly twenty-eight. I was chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices in the House, and the Postmaster-General——

Mr. PENROSE. To set the matter right, the Senator from Mississippi, in speaking of "this amendment" refers more, I take it, to the appropriation.

Mr. MONEY. I am speaking to the subject, not to this particular amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator does not refer to the amendment of the committee, as I understand.

Mr. MONEY. No; I am talking of the general subject of extra money being expended for mail service on that route.

Mr. PENROSE. That is contained in the bill as it came from the House.

Mr. MONEY. I will ask the Secretary to read the amendment, that I may understand exactly what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 21, after the word "shall," strike out "deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service" and insert:

Consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

So as to make the clause read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I was not aware of the nature of the amendment. I supposed the question to be the general one. But I should like to say a few words on the amendment.

In the first place, it is pretty well known to the gentlemen who have made up this bill that the Postmaster-General has refused to recommend this appropriation for quite a number of years. He has failed to recommend it, and he has also said very positively that he did not want it, but he has expended it because he considered an appropriation as a direction or instruction from Congress to him so to expend it. I for one should not like to see this proviso put in, because, contrary to the opinion of the Postmaster-General, I believe it is very highly necessary to facilitate and expedite the mails from here to New Orleans, and it continues in that expedition very far to the west. It is a service that has been enjoyed for a number of years, and as I happen to live directly on one of the railroads, the Louisville and Nashville, that carries part of this mail, I know that the train that carries the mail carries nothing else, and it goes thundering by at tremendous speed.

I do not think the railroads get too much for the service. When the service was first established, it was intended to have a fast mail from Boston to Habana, and the contract was given, I think, to the Atlantic Coast Line, or the Seaboard Air Line, I forget which. That road carried the mail to Tampa, but under the law giving only inland and ocean postage to the steamships for their service, it was impossible to get the mails carried from Tampa to Habana.

I had placed in a bill a paragraph that brought Habana within the postal delivery of the United States, which permitted the Postmaster-General to make a contract for a rate of compensation that was greater than the inland and sea postage. By that arrangement he made a contract which put the Mascotte and the Olivette into the trade, which fully justified the wisdom of the measure by very largely increased mail and travel facilities.

The roads that enjoyed this expedition subsidy or bonus threw up the contract after several years of service, on the ground that they could not meet the schedule of the Postmaster-General without loss. When they threw it up it was transferred to the Southern and the Louisville and Nashville to New Orleans. In other words, instead of going to Tampa the mail was carried to New Orleans. It has been very much of a benefit to the domestic postal service. About that time I had a table prepared by quite a distinguished statistician to show the number of cities and the population and the business tributary to each of those lines, and I was preparing to make a proposition to have it transferred to this other line, when the Seaboard or the Atlantic Coast Line, I forget which, threw up the contract.

The cities along this route and the people served by it would be very unwilling to have this service cut off at the pleasure or judgment or discretion of the Postmaster-General. The hostility of that public functionary to this appropriation is well known. I do not mean the present incumbent, but I mean the Postmaster-General. For several years he has been against it. But he has constantly been overruled by Congress, and the people have continued to enjoy the extra facilities it afforded. They want those facilities continued, and, in my opinion, they should have them. To put this proviso in the bill means, I believe, to expunge from the bill the appropriation. Therefore I hope that the proviso will not stand.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Department is against this appropriation. As I have already stated, it has been in the bill for many years. The appropriation for the special facilities from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans and the appropriation in the following paragraph of $25,000 for similar facilities from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., which has likewise remained in the bill for many years, are the last remaining traces of a system of appropriation for certain special facilities which have from time to time and gradually been abandoned by the Government.

Mr. GALLINGER. Subsidies, so to speak.

Mr. PENROSE. Subsidies in their nature. And in some cases they have been voluntarily surrendered. The reason for not specifically recommending it is stated by the Postmaster-General:

It appears to be a discrimination in favor of a road or of a section of the country. Personally, I am not in favor of anything in the nature of a special privilege to a road or to a section.

At the same time, the Department does not say to the committee or to Congress that these extra facilities are not secured by this appropriation. The committee, ever since I have been connected with it, has felt convinced that these additional facility appropriations did give a service of a very important and valuable character to a vast stretch of country lying south of Washington, which, perhaps, notwithstanding the theoretical objection to this last remaining subsidy in our postal system, would not be obtained by the inhabitants of that great section.

I for one believe that the appropriation might fairly remain in the bill for some years longer, until that section of the country, now growing and increasing so rapidly in population and prosperity, catches up to the rest of the country, when, perhaps, this subsidy will no longer be asked for even by the railroads.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the language which it is proposed to strike out is, if I am not mistaken, the language which has been used in this appropriation for many years past. It will be observed that in the succeeding paragraph the same language that is stricken out in this paragraph is employed with reference to the appropriation for the service from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000. The language there is the same as the language that it is proposed to strike out in this paragraph.

I have understood—I do not know whether correctly or not—that the Postmaster-General has expressed the opinion that the special mail facilities between Washington, Atlanta, and New Orleans is not necessary. I do not assert that to be the fact, but I have understood that he has expressed that opinion. I happen to live in close proximity to that line, and I have every day very positive evidence of the benefit which these special mail facilities confer, at least upon certain sections of the country.

At my home I can get by 9 or half past 9 o'clock on Tuesday morning the New York Herald of the previous morning, a thing which, until these special mail facilities were established, was an impossibility. If the mail facilities are taken away, it will make a difference in the arrival of the mail in my home of seven or eight hours. The reason for it, of course, is obvious to anyone who has given the matter any attention. The railroads can not afford to run fast mail trains over a route so long and so sparsely settled as is the route between Washington and New Orleans. If they could dispatch five or six fast trains a day carrying passengers and mail, there would not be any necessity for this item. If conditions with us were such as they are in New England and other thickly settled portions of the country, there would be no occasion for it. But this service is a great benefit to a large area of country, not only along the route, but on each side of it for from a hundred to a hundred and fifty miles, and the sudden taking of it off, I think, would be very injurious to the interests of the country affected.

Whether this language is, in effect, an inhibition on the Postmaster-General, I will not undertake to say, but if it is a fact that the Postmaster-General has expressed the opinion that it is not necessary to have these special mail facilities, I am inclined to think the language which has been inserted by the committee will debar him from making any contract or allowing these special-facilities appropriations to be expended.

Mr. MONEY. He has not recommended it for years.

Mr. MALLORY. I know he has not; but the language is:

Unless the Postmaster-General shall consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

We fix the sum at $142,000, and then say it shall be determined by the judgment of the Postmaster-General. I hope it is not the intention of the committee to destroy this facility. I am only taking up the time of the Senate in alluding to it, because I am very apprehensive that the substitution of this language for the language which has been employed heretofore for many years regarding these facilities will result in stopping the fast mail.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the proviso under discussion was placed in the bill at my instance. I had given considerable investigation to this subject, and at my request the Postmaster-General came before the committee and was exhaustively examined with reference to it. As the result of those investigations and the testimony of the Postmaster-General, this state of facts was disclosed: For a long time—that is, for quite a number of years—the Postmaster-General has not recommended this appropriation. I believe Postmaster-General Wanamaker was the first Postmaster-General to refuse to recommend it.

Mr. MALLORY. That was when it was under the Atlantic Coast Line.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is when it was under the Atlantic Coast Line. But the service was very much the same as it is now.

In refusing to recommend it he discussed the subject, and reached the conclusion that it was not necessary; on the contrary, that it was really an embarrassment to securing the best mail service for that section. It was also disclosed that the proviso in the present law, for which the amendment now under discussion is to be substituted, has been in the law as a part of this particular provision or appropriation for a great number of years, but that neither the present Postmaster-General nor any other Postmaster-General has ever given the slightest consideration or effect to that proviso. I have here the testimony both of General Shallenberger and of Mr. Cortelyou, the Postmaster-General, in which they say that they have not regarded this proviso as it appears in the present law; that they have held that the action of Congress in making the appropriation and then attaching this proviso—that so much of it should be expended as in the judgment of the Postmaster-General was in the interest of the postal service—was in the nature of an instruction to the Postmaster-General to expend the money. In other words, they regarded the appropriation as mandatory; they have regarded the appropriation as controlling the proviso, and they have never given any effect whatever to the proviso.

When the Postmaster-General was asked why he did not recommend this appropriation, he said he did not recommend it because he did not think it was wise to make a distinction in favor of the postal service facilities of one section over those of another section. He was then asked the direct question if in his judgment this appropriation was needed for the purpose of securing proper mail expedition for the section of country interested; and he answered that he had never investigated that question, and that he had no opinion with reference to it. When he was asked why he had not investigated it, in view of the fact that here was a proviso which said to him he should spend no part of this money except as might, in his judgment, be necessary, he said he had not investigated it because he did not consider that proviso as binding upon him.

I do not desire to discuss the matter, but my object and purpose in changing the form of this proviso was to make it a mandatory proviso, because the Postmaster-General has said he regarded it simply as a directory proviso. The Postmaster-General said he did not know whether the appropriation was necessary or not, but he said, while he had never given any effect to the old proviso, if the proviso which is now in the bill was adopted, he would regard it as a direction to him by Congress to make an investigation into this matter, and that he would make an investigation, and if he found, as a result of that investigation, that this appropriation was needed, that an extra train was necessary, he would hire the extra train and pay whatever the service might be worth out of the appropriation.

I do not think the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] is at all correct when he says the Postmaster-General expressed an emphatic opinion.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not say that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I withdraw the word "emphatic."

Mr. MALLORY. I said I understood he had stated it. I did not assert it as a fact.

Mr. SIMMONS. I beg pardon of the Senator if he understood me to say that he asserted it as a fact. However, he is mistaken in his information. The Postmaster-General did not express an opinion about that matter one way or the other. He said he had no opinion about it, and that he had no opinion about it because he had never regarded the old proviso of binding force and never made any investigation. But he said if the proviso now proposed was adopted, he would deem it his duty to make an investigation, and he would make an investigation, and he would make a finding of facts, and if he found that this extra service was needed, he would use the money for the purpose of engaging such additional service as might be necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MALLORY. I hope the Senator from Pennsylvania will permit this matter to go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PENROSE. If that is the wish of the Senator from Florida, I will not ask the Senate to proceed further with the consideration of the bill to-night. The hour is getting late, and I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator permit me for one moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania withdraw his motion?

Mr. PENROSE. I do.

Mr. TILLMAN. I ask that the amendment beginning in line 10 and ending in line 23, on page 18, be considered open, for the purpose of offering an amendment to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be regarded as open to amendment.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 29, 1906, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate May 28, 1906.

COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 28, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Journal be approved.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. OSENBURG.

Mr. CUSHMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, I move the change of reference of the bill (S. 5352) for the relief of William H. Osenburg, to the Committee on Naval Affairs from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to move the reference of the bill (S. 4585) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Counts, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Also, the bill (S. 3697) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Petherbridge, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions to the Committee on Pensions.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF SENATE BILLS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I want a reprint of two Senate bills—Senate 4805 and Senate 4806—with the committee amendments. I asked this same thing a few days ago, but did not think at the time of the committee amendments, therefore the reprint was valueless; and I ask to get a reprint of these bills with the amendments of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks a reprint of the following Senate bills, of which the Clerk will report the titles:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4805) to prohibit aliens from taking or gathering sponge in the waters of the United States.

A bill (S. 4806) to regulate the landing, delivery, cure, and sale of sponge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Objection is made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to reprint these bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio that his request can only be granted by unanimous consent. The Chair would also state to the gentleman that if he desires it the bills can be referred to the Committee on Printing, and, as the Chair is at present advised, their report will be privileged. What disposition does the gentleman desire to make of the bills?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I had better make the motion that the bills be reprinted. There will be no objection to that, as I understand. I move that the two bills, with the committee amendments, be printed.

The SPEAKER. That takes unanimous consent at this stage. The gentleman can arrive at what he desires in the matter by referring the bills to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Very well; they may be referred.

PENSIONABLE STATUS FOR MISSOURI MILITIA.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 11503 be reprinted, for the reason that the supply has been exhausted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11503) to extend the provisions of the pension act of June 27, 1890, to the Enrolled Missouri Militia and other militia organizations of the State of Missouri that cooperated with the military or naval forces of the United States in suppressing the war of the rebellion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent for a reprint of this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think we better treat all alike. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. RHODES. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RHODES. If "the gentleman from Missouri" asks unanimous consent to reprint a bill, and the gentleman from Ohio should object, then what course is open to "the gentleman from Missouri?"

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw my objection. I do not desire to play baby because somebody else plays baby.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DENATURED ALCOHOL.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 17453, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17453) for the withdrawal from bond, tax free, of domestic alcohol when rendered unfit for beverage or liquid medicinal uses by mixture with suitable denaturing materials, with Senate amendments, which were read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to ask the gentleman if the provisions of this act with reference to forfeiting to the Government all personal property, and also all real estate upon which the operations are carried on illegally, are the same as those now in existence in cases of violation of the internal-revenue law, or if they are new provisions? For instance, it is provided that the person who violates this act shall forfeit to the Government all personal property, and in addition thereto all real estate upon which the illegal acts are committed.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand that a similar provision is contained in the law against "moonshiners," to use a popular term, people who violate the act with regard to distilling. I think the provision is drawn after that one. I have not read it carefully, but my recollection is that it is the same.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman will understand that one of these illegal manufacturers of this kind of alcohol might be occupying rented or leased premises, and it would be very difficult for the Government to forfeit the property upon which the operations were carried on, unless it was the property of the man who violated the law.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, that is a question of law, whether we could forfeit any more than what the person engaged in the illegal distilling owned in the premises.

Mr. BARTLETT. My recollection of the law against illicit distilling is that in order to forfeit real estate it must be the property of the person violating the law, or the violation must be done with the knowledge or consent of the owner.

Mr. PAYNE. That would seem to follow with reference to this provision.

Mr. BARTLETT. It does not say so.

Mr. PAYNE. You could not forfeit it unless he owned it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand you could not, but the bill provides that you can.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no. I think the gentleman will find the language exactly the same. I am not familiar with the construction of the law in this case, because we do not have any illicit distilleries anywhere near my district. [Laughter.] But I understand the language is exactly the same. I do not know what the courts have held.

I want to say just a word, Mr. Speaker. The House will remember that the House bill provided that this act should go into effect three months after its passage. The Senate has amended that and made it the 1st of January next. Possibly the postponement is for an unnecessarily long time, but we are content to accept that amendment. The other amendments of the Senate, except the one just referred to by the gentleman from Georgia, are, I think, harmless in either direction. Some of them are a little crudely drawn and show evidence of haste, but they do not seem to affect the bill as it passed the House. I think the bill is substantially the House bill, and I hope the House will concur in the amendments.

The question being taken, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

FORTIFICATION OF PURE SWEET WINES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15206) to amend existing laws relating to the fortification of pure sweet wines, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not think the House understands the nature of the Senate amendments. I am sure I do not. I wish the gentleman from California would explain them so that we may understand them.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Under the present law there may be added to the must of wine beet or cane sugar. These amendments permit the addition also of pure anhydrous sugar, which is desired by eastern wine makers. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that I have consulted with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], and he is entirely satisfied with the amendments. They were placed in the bill in the Senate by Senator STONE, of Missouri, and the effect will be to allow another class of sugar to be added to the must of wine to sweeten it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As well as cane sugar?

Mr. NEEDHAM. Yes.

The question being taken, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

THE CENSUS OFFICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 12064) to amend section 7 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the permanent Census Office," approved March 6, 1902, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments. The bill is amendatory of section 7 of the act to make the Census Office a permanent office, and it adds to the requirements contained in the original law the duty of collecting certain statistics of crime, statistics of savings institutions, and statistics of insurance. The bill provides that the Official Register shall be published by the Director of the Census instead of by the Secretary of the Interior. The bill passed the House and was amended verbally in the Senate in two or three instances, and the only material amendment made was striking out the provision requiring statistics of insurance. That is the only material amendment made in the House bill. The House bill provided for investigations for statistical purposes of life, marine, and fire insurance, casualty insurance, and all kinds of insurance. The Senate struck that out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. The Senate did not insert any new items?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. No new items. It changed the details in relation to the Official Register. The bill repealed the law authorizing the publication of the Official Register by the Secretary of the Interior, and the Senate struck that out and provided that the information which the law now requires to be sent to the Secretary of the Interior shall be transmitted to the Director of the Census. There is no material change in the bill except the elimination of statistics of insurance.

The question was taken, and the motion to concur in the Senate amendments was agreed to.

SUBDIVISION OF CERTAIN LANDS IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17127) to provide for the subdivision and sale of certain lands in the State of Washington.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF FOR THE STATE OF RHODE ISLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5539) for the relief of the State of Rhode Island, with Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to have the gentleman from Rhode Island give some explanation of the bill and the Senate amendments.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill came back from the Senate it contained amendments modifying the provisions which the House had enacted. It is a bill to reimburse the State of Rhode Island for certain moneys expended during the Spanish war. It passed the House, went to the Senate, and that body modified the House provisions. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] has the papers in his possession, but he seems to be out of the Chamber at this moment. I know that everything in the bill is exactly as it went from the House except some modifications, differing from the Iowa bill, which had previously passed, and which the House bill followed in the case of the Rhode Island claims, which makes the liability of the Government less than it was when it went from the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can the gentleman give some idea of the Senate modifications?

Mr. CAPRON. I had them in my possession, and handed the papers to the chairman of the Claims Committee. He not expecting that the bill would come up at this time on District day, I presume, is the reason the gentleman from Kansas is out at this moment. I know it is a matter in which all parties are agreed. The amendment is this: Line 6, strike out all after the word "Spain," down to and including line 15, and insert "under the provisions of the acts of Congress approved July 8, 1898, March 3, 1899, April 27, 1904," making it entirely conformable to existing law which has been enacted in reference to all the other States, and in which, when the bill was before it, I said was in all respects like similar bills of other States except that the State of Rhode Island had not at that time formally presented its claim that the balance due it be paid as it had to the other States. This makes the law entirely conform to that passed to reimburse the other States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then do I understand there are outstanding claims of the State of Rhode Island against the Federal Government and of the Federal Government against the State of Rhode Island?

Mr. CAPRON. No; except in the case the gentleman first stated—that is, claims of the State of Rhode Island against the United States, which this seeks to adjust.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why does the Senate put in this modification? If my recollection of the law referred to in the Senate amendment is correct, it is a law which requires a State coming to the Federal Government in order to receive an appropriation based upon a claim by the State against the Federal Government to have adjusted all claims of the Federal Government against the State.

Mr. CAPRON. Exactly that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there be no claim by the Federal Government against the State of Rhode Island, why the necessity of that amendment?

Mr. CAPRON. Because there is a claim of the State of Rhode Island remaining unsettled against the Federal Government, such as have been settled with the other States under the acts severally referred to in the Senate amendment, which modifies the bill as it went from the House to the Senate recently.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senate amendment decrease the possible liability of the Federal Government?

Mr. CAPRON. It decreases the possible liability; yes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

METROPOLITAN POLICE, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 16484) to amend section 1 of an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, with Senate amendments thereto.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I think we are pursuing a course here which is rather hurried. The House does not know what we are doing. How many Senate amendments are there?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are four, all relating to one subject. The Senate has amended the bill that we sent over from the House reorganizing the police force by striking out our provision for three police surgeons, at $1,800 a year, making it four, at $600 a year. That is the effect, and the whole effect, of the Senate amendments.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had three, at $1,800?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Three, at $1,800 each, and the Senate made it four, at $600 each.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A reduction of $1,200?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes. The Senate made a cut of $1,200 each. Our provision was this: That the three surgeons give their whole time to the fire department and the police department, at a salary of $1,800 per year. The Senate amended the provision, creating four, giving them $600 each, and permitting them to practice their professions in the regular way, answering the call of the city when their services were needed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman take a vote upon that amendment and then we will have an explanation of the other.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, the other amendments all relate to this one subject.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So that the other amendments are practically the same—they are the same subject-matter?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In that event they can be voted on together.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the House bill made an appropriation for three, at $1,800 each.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; that is right.

Mr. KEIFER. Not $1,800 for the three?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; $1,800 each.

Mr. KEIFER. That would be $5,400.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. The Senate amendment is four, at $600, which makes $2,400, which would be a reduction of $3,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The gentleman's mathematics are correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH FRENCH.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 17072) granting an increase of pension to Joseph French, with a Senate amendment thereto.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New Hampshire explain to us the nature of the Senate amendment?

Mr. SULLOWAY. The facts are these. Certain evidence went to the Senate committee that was not before the House committee, and on that evidence the gentleman is clearly entitled to his $72. We reported it at $50 on the evidence that was before us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a case with different evidence before the two Houses?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Additional evidence before the Senate committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the gentleman thinks that in analogy with the law the gentleman is entitled to the increase?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I have no doubt about that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring with the Senate amendments.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

WILSON H. M'CUNE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15869) granting an increase of pension to Wilson H. McCune, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

MALCOLM RAY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 15787) granting an increase of pension to Malcolm Ray, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Senate amendment be concurred in.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, why was this change made?

Mr. SULLOWAY. Well, because the Senate thought we did not allow quite enough, and I presume they may be right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But under the rules you pursue by analogy with the general law, could $30 have been possible in this case?

Mr. SULLOWAY. This gentleman is substantially a total wreck and $30 is the total amount. We made it, it seems by the report, at twenty-four.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

SARAH L. GHRIST.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 13022) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Ghrist, with a Senate amendment.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have an explanation concerning that increase.

Mr. SULLOWAY. My impression is that this is a case where we reported from $8 to $12, and the Senate on account of the necessities and physical condition of the lady doubled the $8 and made it sixteen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do you think that the $16 ought to be appropriated?

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to ask the gentleman if this is the widow of a Mexican war veteran?

Mr. SULLOWAY. No, indeed; it would not come to our committee if it were.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand those widows are not entitled and can not receive under special act or otherwise more than $12.

Mr. SULLOWAY. I do not know; another committee has charge of those matters.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the reason of the inquiry. I thought perhaps it was.

The question was taken; and the amendment was concurred in.

WILLIAM LANDAHN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following bill (H. R. 12135) granting an increase of pension to William Landahn, with Senate amendments.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were concurred in.

COMBINATION BETWEEN THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, THE CONTINENTAL TOBACCO COMPANY, AND THE IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY, ETC.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. STANLEY. I wish to call up the following privileged report, and have the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman offers the privileged resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolution No. 432.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to report to the House of Representatives, for its information, all facts within the knowledge of the Department of Commerce and Labor which show or tend to show that there exists at this time, or heretofore within the last twelve months has existed, a combination or arrangement between the American Tobacco Company, the Continental Tobacco Company, and the Imperial Tobacco Company, or any two of said companies, in violation of the act passed July 2, 1890, and entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," or acts amendatory thereof.

And all facts which show or tend to show that the American Tobacco Company, the Continental Tobacco Company, or the Imperial Tobacco Company, or any one or more of said companies, in combination or singly, have, contrary to the laws of the United States in such cases made and provided, interfered with or injured, or attempted to interfere with, injure, or destroy the business of competing manufacturers of tobacco by the infringement of trade-marks or patents, or by surreptitiously adulterating or securing the adulteration of the brands or output of competing companies engaged in the manufacture and sale of tobacco.

And all other facts within the knowledge of the Department of Commerce and Labor which show or tend to show the impending, interference with, or destruction of competition on the part of independent companies engaged in the manufacture or sale of tobacco by the American Tobacco Company, the Imperial Tobacco Company, or the Continental Tobacco Company, or any one of them, by illicit and illegal methods and devices.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. I understand it is not the gentleman's purpose at this time to press the consideration of the resolution. Does he desire to make a statement in connection with it, or concerning it?

Mr. STANLEY. I simply wish, Mr. Speaker, to call up this resolution and to make a statement. I have reason to believe that it would not be wise perhaps at this time to take this matter out of the hands of those who have it in charge, but I do think it is absolutely necessary that the attention both of this House and of the country should be called to the importance of this investigation and to the violations of law of which these tobacco companies are at present guilty.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement made by the gentleman from Kentucky, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed in order to make a statement to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY]? The Chair hears none.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, the American Tobacco Company was incorporated under the laws of New Jersey January 31, 1890. Its first purpose was to own, control, or destroy all other manufacturers of cigarettes in the United States. For this purpose W. Duke & Sons formed a combination with Allen & Ginter, of Richmond, Va.; Kinney Tobacco Company, of New York and Virginia; W. S. Kimball & Co., of Rochester, N. Y., and Oxford, N. C., and Goodwin & Co., of New York. It is stated that the capital stock of this great concern was $44,990,000, and that Duke's competitors received $20,000,000 in cash for their good will under the sale.

The nature and extent of this gigantic concern, even in its infancy, is manifest from their own statement filed in the New York Stock Exchange in September, 1890:

AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY.

[Application to the New York Stock Exchange.]

(Signed) THE FARMERS LOAN AND TRUST COMPANY,
By W. D. SEARLES, Vice-President.

All the remaining cigarette interests on this continent were soon absorbed according to the statement of the American Tobacco Company's treasurer. The cigarette interests in Canada were absorbed at a cost of $1,000,000.

The appetite grew with what it fed on. The treasurer's report for December, 1895, shows that this hungry cormorant was already becoming expert in the art of "benevolently assimilating" its competitors.

The business and assets of Hall's Between the Acts Cigarette Company, of New York, H. Ellis & Co., of Baltimore, Md., H. W. Meyer Tobacco Manufacturing Company, of New York, Consolidated Cigarette Company, of New York, and James B. Butler Tobacco Company, of St. Louis, Mo., were all forced to quit business or enter the combine. The amount paid for these companies is reported at $1,340,000 in cash and $450,000 in scrip.

They were also mastering the art of inducing (?) competitors to sell much more reasonably.

ADVENT OF THE STANDARD OIL.

In 1898 an important new interest was now taken into the management of this trust and it was reported that Mr. Oliver H. Payne (of the Standard Oil Company) had acquired large amounts of the stock, and also that Grant B. Schley and John G. Moore and others had become interested in the trust.

The advent of the Standard Oil Company marks an era in the dark history of this organization.

Similar results might be expected if some arch fiend should assume the command of a company of familiar imps.

The American Tobacco Company was an apt scholar in this art of plunder by means of larcenies to which the statute has so far failed to fix a particular penitentiary sentence.

The remorseless rapacity, the unholy ambition to control or crush competition the world over, contempt for public opinion, and satanic defiance of all the laws of God and man, which had characterized the Standard Oil Company were from this time on to signalize the course of this monster monopoly.

In traveling to his home in Virginia, James B. Duke pointed from his car window and, seeing one of the tanks of the Standard Oil Company, declared—

I shall do for the tobacco business of this country what Rockefeller has done for Standard Oil.

Ignoble as was his ideal, base and cruel as have been his methods, it must be confessed with a sigh he has made good his promise, and as a ruthless and successful invader of property rights and human happiness he is in every way a worthy rival of his beau ideal, John D. Rockefeller.

CAPTURE OF PLUG INTERESTS—CONTINENTAL TOBACCO COMPANY FOUNDED FOR THAT PURPOSE.

Immediately after this union with the Standard Oil Company, there was in May, 1898, an additional issue of common stock to the extent of $3,100,000, and it was widely stated that this stock was issued for the purpose "of acquiring new properties."

The new properties to be acquired were the plug industries of America. Prior to this bold raid of the American Tobacco Company upon the manufacturers of plug tobacco the American Tobacco Company's output amounted to about thirty millions of pounds. The output of the great firm of Liggett & Meyer alone amounted to 27,000,000 pounds, and the ten leading manufacturers of plug tobacco had an annual output of nearly 100,000,000 pounds.

Yet this then comparatively small concern engaged in the making of cigarettes, boldly attempted to capture or destroy every competitor in the manufacture of plug tobacco between the two oceans.

The American Tobacco Company secured control of the following firms:

P. J. Sory Tobacco Company, Middleton, Ohio; P. Lorillard & Co., Jersey City, N. J.; John Finzer & Bros., Louisville, Ky.; P. H. Mayo & Bro., Richmond, Va.; Daniel Scotten & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Harry Weisenger Tobacco Company, Louisville, Ky., and Drummond & Co., St. Louis Mo.

Eight years after the American Tobacco Company had organized with a capital stock of $25,000,000 another organization is perfected as an integral part of it, and the Continental Tobacco Company is incorporated with a capital stock of $70,000,000. This new concern was to engage solely in the manufacture of plug tobacco.

This new and deadly branch of this commercial upas, this ugly oliroc, was soon destined to overshadow the business and to darken the hopes of more than a million men, and under its polluting shade all rival enterprise, all honest and honorable endeavor was to wither and decay.

Organization.—Organized December 9, 1898, under laws of New Jersey. Authorized capital: preferred noncumulative 7 per cent stock, $37,500,000; common stock, $37,500,000. Par value of shares, $100 each. No personal liability. Amount outstanding: preferred, $31,145,000; common, $31,146,500. Registrar, Chase National Bank, New York. Transfer agent, Manhattan Trust Company.

Owns the properties, rights, trade-marks, trade names, and assets of every kind heretofore owned by the following concerns: John Finzer & Bro., Louisville, Ky.; P. H. Mayo & Co. (Incorporated), Richmond, Va.; Daniel Scotten & Co., Detroit, Mich.; P. J. Sorg & Co., Middletown, Ohio; Drummond Tobacco Company, St. Louis, Mo.; Brown Tobacco Company, St. Louis, Mo.; J. Wright Company, Richmond, Va.; Wright Brothers Tobacco Company, St. Charles, Mo. Also owns the common stock, amounting to $3,000,000 par value, of the P. Lorillard Company, Jersey City, N. J., and the plug-tobacco business and assets pertaining thereto of the American Tobacco Company.

Leggett & Myers were at this time perhaps the largest and most successful manufacturers of plug tobacco on the globe. Their plant occupied an area 271 by 2,400 feet. President Wetmore declared that its earnings were nearly one million annually, on output of 27,000,000 pounds, and the plant, good will, etc., were valued at $15,000,000.

This great industry refused to be seduced, bought, or bullied and accepted the gauge of battle. They were the manufacturers of that popular brand of chewing tobacco known as "Star," and sold all over the United States.

The American Tobacco Company entered the field with a rival brand known as "Battle Ax." In this daring device was embodied the rude and imperious spirit of those who adopted it.

It was not competition; it was war to the death. At the close of the nineteenth century these mercenary marauders adopted methods which would have been scorned by those barbarous bands who first wielded a "battle ax" in medieval slaughter. With this savage weapon, which combined the weight of a mace and the cleaving edge of a saber, they determined to cut and batter to destruction both Leggett & Meyers and every other enterprise which dared to impede or oppose their omniverous and law-defying lust for pelf and power.

"Battle Ax" was sold for cost—then for less than the actual cost of the leaf and the tax—according to Duke's sworn statement $4,000,000 of money were thrown to the winds in this titanic conflict between this aspiring combine and the great firm which refused to surrender its right to conduct its own business with independence and integrity.

Neither the good name nor the excellence of its product, established for a generation, nor millions of capital, could avail against this fierce and determined onslaught of this terrible battle ax. The great firm of Leggett & Meyers went to the wall and was swallowed into the insatiate maw of this all-devouring trust.

With the fall of this great firm the doom of every manufacturer of plug tobacco in the United States was sealed. Stuffed with its costly booty, we find on April 21, 1899, the stock was increased to $100,000,000 by the addition of $12,500,000 preferred stock and $12,500,000 common stock. There is outstanding at present $48,844,600 (par value) of preferred stock and $48,846,100 (par value) common stock.

Rice & Vaughn, of Louisville, Ky., were captured September, 1900.

SNUFF.

The American Tobacco Company now determined to take possession of the manufacture and sale of snuff.

At this time about 15,000,000 pounds of tobacco were annually manufactured into snuff, and there was invested in this business over $17,000,000.

Ivy Owen & Co., of Lynchburg; Gail & Ax, of Baltimore; W. E. Garrett & Sons, Philadelphia; Stewart, Ralph & Co., Philadelphia; Held & Co., New Jersey; Lorillard & Co., New Jersey; Burton & Condy and Blackwell & Co., of Nashville; Atlantic Snuff Company, Philadelphia; Geo. W. Helm Company, Henriette, N. J.; Southern Snuff Company, Memphis, Tenn., were soon forced to surrender, and from the ruins of these great companies the American Tobacco Company developed another large tentacle, and this new arm of the octopus was known as the American Snuff Company, with a capital stock of $23,001,700.

ROLLS FOR AFRICAN TRADE.

Cheap leaf and lugs were made into a long twist by taking a small hand of tobacco in this way [illustrating], just three or four leaves bound together and roughly formed in the shape of a cigar and packed between cotton-seed oil or linseed oil in a cask, the oil being used to keep one of these strings from sticking to the other. It was the cheapest tobacco known to the markets. This tobacco was sold in Mexico, in Central America, and on the coasts of Africa. It was manufactured by Hernshein Brothers, New Orleans; W. S. Matthews & Sons, and Dortch & Co., Louisville, Ky. They, too, met the common fate of all. This trade is entirely gone; the American Company today controls it absolutely.

CIGAR BUSINESS.

But one interest remained. The cigar business escaped destruction until 1901, when the American Cigar Company was organized and absolutely controlled by the American and Continental companies, with a capital stock of $10,000,000. The amazing power of assimilation possessed by this voracious concern is illustrated by the fact that the $10,000,000 anaconda succeeded in swallowing without effort the Havana Commercial Company, a consolidation of a number of manufacturers of cigars and cigarettes, including the great firm of F. Garcia Brothers & Co. The Havana Commercial Company had a capacity of over 100,000,000 cigars annually and was capitalized at $20,000,000.

The American Cigar Company soon had the following costly commercial scalps dangling from its belt: The Hummel-Voght Company, Louisville, Ky.; the Wellman-Duree Tobacco Company, St. Louis, Mo.; the Cheroot factory of P. Whittock, Richmond, Va. The Havana American Cigar Company, which is a consolidation of ten large cigar factories, was next induced to accept $4,000,000 in 4 per cent bonds, which were guaranteed by the American and Continental companies. Roth, Bruner & Feist, of Cincinnati, Ohio, were, in the year following, forced to strike their colors.

When the Great Cubanas Company and the Henry Clay and Bock & Co. were "hors de combat," the last battle had been fought, and the American Tobacco Company, its allies and secret emissaries were in absolute control of the great industry in all its forms.

DOMINION OF THE WORLD.

And now this monster monopoly did girt about its loins for its last supreme effort the absolute mastery of this great industry wherever it flourished on the globe. For that purpose it determined to bind together in a more compact and deadly union all its allied companies and accomplices, and to defy at once the majesty of the law at home and the hostile millions of the Old World beyond the seas.

I make no charge not abundantly and absolutely sustained by their own records.

In April, 1901, the shareholders of both the American and continental companies approved amendments to their certificates of incorporation "permitting the directors of each, by a two-thirds vote, to guarantee the principal or interest, or both, of securities issued by allied companies."

CONSOLIDATED COMPANY.

A new security-holding corporation, entitled the Consolidated Tobacco Company, was incorporated under New Jersey laws June 5, 1901, with an authorized capital of $30,000,000.

The entire capital was immediately paid in cash, and the interests dominant in the control of the American and Continental companies acquired all of the stock. No shares were offered to the public.

On the 15th of June it was announced that "the leading consideration of the consolidation of the Consolidated Tobacco Company is the importance of concentrating the control of the American and Continental companies so as to insure their harmonious operation."

To facilitate the exchange of securities a syndicate was formed, which was managed by Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and Thomas F. Ryan, which agreed to provide $25,000,000 in cash.

A mortgage of the Consolidated Company was filed in August, 1901, in favor of the Martin Trust Company, and was limited to $158,000,000.

This mortgage was a lien upon the present and future income, earning, and profits of the American and Continental companies. Upon the culmination of this commercial conspiracy, these two companies boldly attempted to capture the markets of the British Isles. They moved on the Old World. At that time in England the principal handlers and buyers of tobacco were composed of seventeen different firms. You will remember that in order to ship tobacco into Great Britain it must pay an initial tax of 72 cents. Now, in order to handle this product, which paid an import duty of 72 cents a pound alone before landing it in your warehouse, required an enormous amount of money. These seventeen purchasers and importers of tobacco had a capital stock of $75,000,000; and yet when it was known that James B. Duke & Co., commonly called the "American Tobacco Company," had invaded the territory of Great Britain, that announcement was followed first by a panic and then by rage. They carried it to the extent of a propaganda. Hostility to this American invasion was almost preached in the pulpit.

The common people took it up; no shop, no retailer who was known to handle the American Tobacco Company's products could command the trade of his friends. Their product was boycotted in every city, in every crossroad, in every hamlet. Undismayed by the tremendous and stubborn opposition of the British Empire, they captured the great firm of Ogden & Co., perhaps the wealthiest of all importers of tobacco in the world. The Imperial Company, to hold the ground that it had gained, actually offered to divide among the dealers not handling the American Tobacco Company's products the sum of $500,000 in six months.

They agreed to divide among these same dealers one-fifth of the entire profits of a business of a capital stock of $75,000,000. The American Company, not to be outdone, offered to dealers handling their goods within the confines of Great Britain the staggering sum of $1,000,000 a year for four successive years, and all the profits of the American Tobacco Company in Great Britain for the same period. That brought the Imperial Company to their knees, and then they more than surrendered. They betrayed the interests of the people who had trusted them. They were conquered and then prostituted by this company. Under the terms of the agreement between the American Company and the Imperial Company, the Imperial Company of Great Britain, now itself a trust, was to have absolute control of the markets in Great Britain. The American Company was to have absolute control of the markets of the world. Here are the terms of an abject surrender and shameless betrayal of the people's interests:

As a matter of fact, the treaty of peace was as follows: The Imperial purchased Ogden's at Mr. Duke's own valuation and gave the American a large, though not a controlling, interest in their company. It was agreed that the Imperial should have the trade of Great Britain and Ireland itself. It was likewise arranged that the American company, in which, of course, the British had no interest, should remain in undisputed possession of the United States, Cuba, and the Philippines. To deal with the outside trade the British-American Tobacco Company was formed, with both British and American directors, but with the Americans in control. In other words, the Imperial surrendered the entire foreign market to the control of the Americans and gave them an interest in its own business as the price of the peace.

THE REGIES.

We are doubly barred from the ports of Europe. In 1902 we exported to Italy 37,536,942 pounds of American tobacco; to France, 31,557,215 pounds; to Spain, 28,792,693 pounds. In 1902 to the United Kingdom, 98,727,979 pounds, and in 1901 to Austria, 273,937 pounds.

Notwithstanding this enormous demand, not one ounce of this tobacco was landed or received in any of the five European countries named, except Great Britain, by any private individual.

In all the countries named, save Great Britain alone, the government has an absolute monopoly of this product, and the importation of tobacco in any form, by any person or company not duly authorized by the Government, is positively forbidden, and these restrictions are enforced with tireless and merciless exactness by the powerful beneficiaries of this business.

In each of these countries the governments, through their agents, known as "Regie contractors," buy for their respective governments such tobacco as in their opinion will satisfy the market therein. This tobacco is the property of the government to which it is consigned, is manufactured and sold by the duly authorized agents and officials of these various governments, and all the profits derived therefrom go as revenue directly into the coffers of the state.

The enormous profits derived from the government monopolies in this product are clearly illustrated from the following table, giving the number of pounds exported from the United States and the revenues derived. The import duty of Great Britain amounts practically to a government monopoly, and for that reason I have placed this in the category of governmental monopolies:

Country.	Exported from the United States.	Revenue from tobacco monopoly.
	Pounds.
Italy, 1903	37,536,942	$40,905,256
France, 1903	31,557,215	82,635,652
Spain, 1903	28,792,693	25,809,890
United Kingdom, 1902	98,728,979	60,335,085
Austria, 1901	273,937	44,675,450
Total	196,888,766	253,965,933

An examination of the foregoing table demonstrates that tobacco under these oppressive trade restrictions pays into the treasuries of five European countries annually the sum of $253,965,933.

The producer of tobacco finding competition destroyed at home, debarred from Italy, France, Spain, the United Kingdom, and Austria, and the coast of South Africa had but one market remaining—Germany. About 6,000,000 pounds of this product were annually shipped to Bremen, and from that point were distributed to Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, Morocco, and other countries. I insert the following table, taken from Special Consular Reports, showing the sale of tobacco distributed from Bremen in the year 1899:

American tobacco sold from Bremen to—

SWEDEN.

In 1899, 2,182,000 pounds. Value, $992,949. (Special Consular Reports 1900, p. 94.)

NORWAY.

In 1898, from Germany (Bremen), 2,554,300 pounds. (Special Consular Reports, p. 98.)

SWITZERLAND.

In 1899, 403,679 pounds. Value, $46,135. (Special Consular Reports 1900, p. 99.)

MOROCCO.

In 1899, 110,000 pounds. (Special Consular Reports 1900, p. 118.)

Morocco	pounds	110,000
Switzerland	do	403,679
Norway	do	2,554,300
Sweden	do	2,182,000
		5,249,979

The tobacco trust found that those producers and handlers of tobacco whom they had marked for destruction were finding a sale for their product which it, for sinister reasons, often refused to accept, by shipping it to Germany and distributing it from that point to the countries which I have named. The tobacco trust immediately shipped millions of pounds of tobacco into Bremen, ordered the sale of it for less than cost, as little as they paid for it. When advised by their factors in Germany that this tobacco could be sold for much more than the price demanded, they were peremptorily ordered to sell as per their instructions. Independent tobacco handlers whose all had been invested in these shipments of tobacco found that it was impossible to sell a pound of it at anything approaching its original cost; they were driven to bankruptcy and ruin, and to-day the trust absolutely controls this market.

With the destruction of the Bremen market the combine was the complete and absolute master of the world.

Now, the American Tobacco Company, the Continental Tobacco Company, and the Imperial Tobacco Company called into its councils the official buyers of France, Italy, The Netherlands, Spain, and Portugal, and they said to them: "We have it within our power to say that no two men shall ever bid upon the same tobacco plant anywhere in the world." They said to the buyer from Spain: "Where have you been buying tobacco?" "Why, in Robertson County, Tenn." They said to the buyer from Italy: "Where have you been buying your tobacco?" "In Graves County, Ky." "How many acres of tobacco can your Government consume in a year?" So many hundred acres. "We will give you dominion over that, and no other one of us will go into that territory." And so these men, these imperial agents, these buyers for Kings, and still more powerful than Kings and princes—the Imperial and the American tobacco companies—looked out from their lofty height and parceled out your country, sir, and mine, to be henceforth the home alone for vassals and for slaves.

Mr. Speaker, there has occupied the attention of the American people for the last 90 days, inquiry after inquiry of one kind or another into the violation of the law by various trusts and combinations. I want to say, not in the way of philippic, not as a loose, unfounded denunciation, but quietly, calmly, and deliberately, and to support what I say by absolutely uncontrovertible proof and by documentary evidence, that neither the Standard Oil Company, nor the Pennsylvania Railroad, nor any other combination of men outside of the penitentiary, have ever as openly and flagrantly violated the law and the rights of American citizens as has the American Tobacco Company in the last two years. I wish to say more than that, that it is the most perfectly organized, the most powerfully equipped, of all the trusts and combinations that to-day weigh upon the shoulders of the American people.

There are independent refineries to-day that manage to live, notwithstanding the efforts of the Standard Oil Company to destroy independent competition everywhere. There are independent makers of steel rails and wire nails, there are men who are conducting a business independently and lawfully in defiance of every other trust in the United States, but the time is here when, from the plant in the ground to the finished product, no man can engage in this business without doing fealty in money and in manhood to James B. Duke, the president of the American Tobacco Company.

Mr. MUDD. Will the gentleman object to an interruption?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. MUDD. I would like, if the gentleman sees no objecttion to it, for him to take the House in his confidence and indicate why he does not press his resolution. I, for one, would like to vote for it.

Mr. STANLEY. I will say frankly after I introduced this resolution the gentlemen who had this matter in charge took me into their confidence, and I was assured by Mr. Garfield that the Department was not ready to report at this time. I was assured by those in charge that they are hot on their trail. More than that, under the decision of Judge Humphreys in the case against the beef trust, if they were forced to answer under an investigation conducted by this House, instead of an investigation conducted by the Department, the Department is afraid that some scoundrel will get an immunity bath, and I would not dip him in there even to save my political head.

I am here to drive them to punishment if I can, and it is because that I believe it is better to wait for a time on the Department that I do not now push this resolution. It is because I fear the result of Judge Humphrey's decision. I do not criticise that judge. I shall bow to the majesty of the law and the wisdom of the court, but I will say in that connection that I do devoutly pray that the good Lord in his wisdom, and the Presidents in their discretion, will not inflict us with any more like him. A brief résumé of the history of this company is absolutely astounding. In 1890 Duke & Sons were engaged in the manufacture of cigarettes. They determined to organize a corporation that should control the cigarette industry in the United States. That was the extent of its purpose and operation. The American Tobacco Company was originally incorporated with a capitalization of $25,000,000.

In a little while this company, with a capitalization of $25,000,000, had formed out of its loins the Continental Tobacco Company, which I have shown is an integral part of the American Tobacco Company, with a capitalization of $100,000,000. This little $25,000,000 corporation, in order to control the snuff companies, formed the American Snuff Company, which I have proved by their own records is an integral part of the American Tobacco Company, with a capitalization of $25,100,000. In order to control the making and manufacturing of cigars, this $25,000,000 corporation formed another corporation—the American Cigar Company—with a capitalization of $10,000,000.

To-day the American Tobacco Company and its allies have a capitalization of $500,000,000. In other words, since 1890, when these people began a business that for two hundred years has paid only a fair profit to men who honestly conducted it, without inventing any patents, without discovering any gold mine, who have injured every brand of tobacco they have ever touched, whether cigar, cigarette, or plug, yet they have actually made, according to their own statement filed with the New York Stock Exchange, 100 per cent on their investment every ninety days since first beginning this wholesale robbery of the American people.

Now to my resolution. I want a searching inquiry, which will and can not fail to discover a combination in restraint of trade between the American, Imperial, and Continental Tobacco companies. I will say to the Department of Justice—and I have turned over a bushel basket of papers to them—that if they will go to Henderson, Ky.; if they will go to Owensboro, Ky., or to Nashville, Tenn., or to Clarksville, Tenn., they can lay their hands upon the men who are instructed to buy within a certain fixed and stated limit, and to buy for the Imperial Company, and to buy for the American Company. If they will go to Henderson they can lay their hands upon one man who represented in one office all three of these companies. If they will inquire to-day, they will find that where the grand juries were about to take that matter up they have turned over the county of Daviess to the American Tobacco Company, they have turned over the county of Henderson to the Continental Tobacco Company, and they have divided this country into sections composed of various districts, and that to-day they have absolutely throttled competition.

I want the Department of Justice to get Mr. Ferrego, who is occasionally in New York, an official buyer for the Italian Government, before this committee. I desire that they bring the buyers for France, for Spain, and for Austria before them, and I want them to unveil, as they could and will, I hope, the most cruel, most nefarious, most far-reaching conspiracy to rob and plunder that ever brought the blush of shame to American manhood or the specter of want to American toil. A foul compact, in which James B. Duke and his cohorts and emissaries went into a deliberate agreement with the buyers of Great Britain and with the buyers of France, Italy, and Spain, by which they agreed that those Governments may parcel out Kentucky, and Tennessee, and your State (I will state to my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HILL]), and they might buy within certain restricted territories at their own price, and that the American Tobacco Company would stand like an armed bandit and prevent honest competition anywhere in defiance of its hated fiat; and they have done it.

You may have some idea what this means when I tell you that there are no quotations on tobacco at all. You can see from the paper what wheat will bring, or what corn will bring, or what cotton will bring, but no man ever did read in the paper a quotation on the stock exchange of what tobacco would bring. It is sold at auction like household plunder. It is put upon the brakes and its price is fixed then and there by open competition between buyers, and having destroyed competition they have the power to take, without reward, without price, without giving its value, the product of all the tobacco growers in Kentucky, Tennessee, and everywhere else in the United States.

Mr. KELIHER. Were the prices of tobacco quoted prior to this organization?

Mr. STANLEY. Never. This tobacco is placed on the brakes, in hogsheads, and the buyers from 100 or 200 different factories, the buyers from France, Germany, Italy, and Spain would meet around that hogshead and bid on it, and a hogshead of tobacco would bring just what they would make it bring by active competition, and no man, until his tobacco was put on the brakes, could tell what it would bring.

Mr. KELIHER. What I wish to know is whether prior to the formation of this gigantic trust which he speaks of the prices of tobacco were quoted in the market like wheat.

Mr. STANLEY. No, and we did not care, because we had active competition.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I have not the slightest doubt that the same combination has been very successful in preventing the passage of the Philippine tariff bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And they are preventing the repeal of the 6 cents tax on leaf tobacco in the United States Senate now.

Mr. STANLEY. I have the proof of that in cold type.

Now, I charge on the floor of this House that there exists to-day in defiance and in violation of law, State and national, a combination in restraint of trade between these great companies whose purpose is not only to restrict but to exterminate all competition, to reduce to bankruptcy and ruin the independent dealer, and to reduce to penury, to the level of a vassal and a slave, the unfortunate wretch who finds it necessary to cultivate this once expensive and coveted product of the soil, and I propose to lay before this House competent and undisputed proof of my assertions.

It is true that the president of these great companies denies that any such combination exists. He was asked:

Q. What are the relations between these two companies?

Here is his sworn statement:

A. There are no relations other than the American owns quite a large amount of stock in the Continental Company. (Statement of J. B. Duke before Industrial Commission, May 9, 1901, vol. 13, p. 317.)

That is his sworn statement before the Industrial Commission. Again:

Q. Is the American Cigar Company a new company?—A. Yes.—Q. Is it organized or controlled by either of your companies?—A. The Continental Company owns 35 per cent, the American Company owns 35 per cent, and 35 per cent by individuals.

Now, I will read the statement of Mr. H. G. Lee, treasurer of the American Tobacco Company, in which he swears that they are practically one company, and that they have their offices in the same building, and almost the same desk.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9, 1901.

TESTIMONY OF MR. H. D. LEE, TREASURER AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

Q. Do you know whether the Continental Tobacco Company has issued a circular letter of the general nature of this copy which was presented here a few moments ago?—A. My impression is they issued a circular about that date. Whether that is a true copy or not, I do not know.

Q. The business of the American Tobacco Company and the Continental Tobacco Company are carried on in the same building?—A. Yes.

Q. And the relations of the officials of the two companies are close?—A. Well, reasonably so; neighborly, at least.

(Rep. Ind. Com. vol. 13, p. 340.)

I want to file here a bill of exceptions, taken in the superior court of Massachusetts, in the case of the Commonwealth against Abe Strauss, in which case the American and Continental Tobacco companies were being tried and fined for an illicit combination between the two, and where witness after witness, employees of this company, came on the stand and swore that they were one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. When was that?

Mr. STANLEY. This is the case of Abe Strauss, decided the other day in Massachusetts, where he was fined for the very devilment that this man Duke swore he did not know anything about.

Mr. KELIHER. Was not that in a Massachusetts court, and under a Massachusetts law?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes. Thank God for one good act Massachusetts did, even if she never does another. [Laughter.]

In this very trial to which I have referred one Charles R. Seaward was called as a witness for the defendant, and here is his idea of the relation existing between the American and Continental companies:

Q. (By Mr. French) Your name?—A. Charles R. Seaward.
Q. You live here?—A. Wellesley Hill.
Q. What is your occupation?—A. Salesman.
Q. In January or February of last year, what concern were you salesman for?—A. I was with L. D. Mayhew.
Q. In whose employ were you?—A. Mr. Mayhew's employ.
Q. Anybody's else?—A. Well, I was selling the product of the American Tobacco Company, or Continental Tobacco Company.

Here is another significant bit of evidence from the mouth of the same witness:

Q. What were your duties in January and February of last year?—A. Salesman.
Q. Calling on the trade?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. For what purpose?—A. To sell them tobacco.
Q. Sell whose goods?—A. American Tobacco Company's goods.
Q. Any other company?—A. Continental Tobacco Company.

(See testimony of Charles R. Seward, defendant's bill of exceptions. Commonwealth v. Abe Strauss, pp. 19 and 20.

Mr. Chairman, I have further asked that this House be informed as to whether or not the American Tobacco Company, the Continental Tobacco Company, or the Imperial Tobacco Company, or any one or more of said companies in combination or singly have contrary to the law of the United States in such cases made and provided, interfered with or injured, or have attempted to interfere with or injure or destroy the business of competing manufacturers of tobacco, by infringement of trademarks or patents, or by surreptitiously adulterating or securing the adulteration of the brands or output of competing companies.

I am prepared here and now to answer that query put to the Department and to the President. I have before me proof which has convinced more than one court of their deep guilt.

I charge that these companies have driven from the market honest competitors by the score by means of a despicable and secret method of commercial assassination known as a boycott.

When the tobacco trust secured control of ninety-five per cent of the plants engaged in the manufacture of tobacco, it purchased more than the materials and the plant—they demanded the good will, and enforced that demand, in other words, they bought "the brands," and well it knew the value of the brand.

Before the accursed advent of this trust, these brands of tobacco were all established after years of honest labor, the result of skill and experience on the part of the manufacturers, and at an infinite expense in advertising.

Mr. Hugh Campbell, of Richmond, Va., who is now making a noble fight for his life against this greedy combine, in his testimony before the Industrial Commission, speaking of the value of a brand of tobacco, says:

VALUE OF REPUTATION POSSESSED BY POPULAR BRANDS OF TOBACCO.

Q. You have spoken of the fact that these contracts were made with reference to brands. Are the brands themselves in the tobacco business of large value? Does the brand get an established reputation and help the sale materially?—A. It does, unquestionably. When a brand becomes known and the consumer becomes acquainted with it, he calls upon his dealer for it, and the dealer is very anxious to get it. The better the consumer knows the brand, if he likes it, the more he wants it, and the more valuable it becomes, because the more readily it is sold.

Q. So you consider the brand itself a valuable asset?—A. Unquestionably. (Rept. Ind. Com., vol. 13, p. 307.)

James B. Duke not only corroborates this statement, but he gives the reasons why. I quote his own words before the Industrial Commission:

You find it necessary, in order to meet competition in certain localities, to cut prices temporarily to push a brand?—A. No; because really each brand stands upon its own bottom. It is not sold as tobacco; it is sold as a brand. The consumer goes into the market and asks for a 10-cent piece of Star. He does not ask for tobacco, and, of course, it is not necessary for us to meet the competition. Some other fellow may go and sell the same class of tobacco for 10 cents a pound less, and the consumer would not be induced to change, because he knows no difference, and he does not care so much about the price. He wants what he has been in the habit of getting. (Rept. Ind. Com., Vol. 13, p. 319.)

And for once Duke is correct. People do not buy tobacco as they do calico or wheat; they do not call for 10 cents worth of tobacco or 5 cents worth of cigarettes, they call for "Battle Ax" or "Star," or a "Cremo" cigar or "Sweet Caporal" cigarettes. A man always buys tobacco by the brand. If he can not get his brand, it is a matter of taste—he will go somewhere else.

A man will spend his money for tobacco when he will not for bread or anything else in the world. He will feed his nerves and starve his vitals, but it is always some favorite plug, some particular cigar, that he must have, and usually without especial regard to the price.

Now, this trust is to-day the absolute and sole owner of more than 90 per cent of all the established brands of smoking and plug tobacco. Says Mr. Duke:

Q. About how many brands of cigarettes do you have?—A. That would be entirely a guess; 100, probably.

Q. And can you give an estimate as to the number of brands of plug tobacco that the Continental has?—A. I should think we would have 50 or 75 probably. That is all, I guess. I could not be positive about that. (Rept. Ind. Com., Vol. 13, p. 318.)

It is absolutely necessary to the very life of the jobber and retailer that he should have these well known and long-established brands in stock. If for any reason the dealer fails to secure the brands of the trust, while his competitor is offering them for sale, his business is destroyed.

Says Mr. Campbell, in discussing this matter before the Industrial Commission:

THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE CONTINENTAL TOBACCO COMPANY AND ITS JOBBERS.

Q. Your information is directly from jobbers who have themselves made these contracts?—A. Who have themselves agreed to these propositions. In many cases jobbers who have refused to handle our goods and who are still refusing to handle them, have told me that they would be glad to handle them, but they couldn't; they dared not. I went into Fall River last October and found from our salesmen there that the three jobbers who were handling our goods there at that time were about to throw them out. I went around to see them. They all told me they had to do it; they could not live without Continental goods, and that, although they were doing very well with ours, still they would have to put them out, because our goods and independent goods were only a small proportion of the business they did, and they were afraid to do anything else. (Report Ind. Com., vol. 13, p. 311.)

Now, I charge that this lawless combine is to-day holding the sword of Damocles over the head of every dealer in smoking and plug tobacco in the United States. And unless these helpless victims of criminal and heartless rapacity are not immediately protected by the law the last struggling independent wholesaler and retailer alike will be driven from the field.

The jobber—that is, the middleman who buys from the manufacturer in wholesale lots and distributes to the retail dealer—must sell his purchase for at least 2 per cent more than the cost price in order to make a living profit.

Now, I charge that the tobacco trust, in selling to jobbers, has made it a condition precedent that these persons who handle their goods shall not offer for sale the product of any independent dealer. In this way it has determined to both crush all present competition and to prevent forever the introduction of any new brands.

The subservience of the jobber has been secured in two ways:

First. By offering special inducements and secret rebates to those dealers who handle trust goods exclusively.

Second. By peremptorily forbidding the jobber to offer for sale tobacco of any kind not manufactured or controlled by the combine.

I am well aware that the president of the American and Continental companies has solemnly sworn that he would never—no, never—think of doing such a thing, or of permitting it to be done. I again quote his testimony before the Industrial Commission:

Q. And do you give special advantages if they handle only your brands?—A. No.

Q. Has that at any time been the policy of the American Tobacco Company?—A. No.

Q. Has the American Tobacco Company had any lawsuits in New Jersey or elsewhere concerning that practice?—A. Yes; the other companies claimed that we were excluding them; but people would not buy their goods because they made a good profit on ours at that time.

Q. And complaints were made that you were giving special discounts in order to secure business?—A. That is their claim. It was not the fact, though.

Q. Do you recall the point of the New Jersey decisions?—A. No; I do not. We won the case. I do not know what the real decision was. I suppose you could get a copy of it.

Q. Did I understand you to say that at the present time in New England you had no contracts of that kind?—A. Yes.

Q. That covers oral contracts as well as written?—A. Yes.

Q. No understanding of that kind at all?—A. No.

Q. Have any of your agents or any officers that you know of offered special terms for using your goods exclusively?—A. No; not with our authority.

Q. Do you think it has been done by any of your agents?—A. I do not think so; no. We state on the bottom of all our price lists and circulars that no agent has any right to change any conditions on our price lists and circulars.

Q. And you have uniformly, in New England, lived up to those conditions printed in your price lists and circulars?—A. So far as I know; yes.

Q. Can you furnish the commission a copy of your price lists and circulars?—A. I suppose that could be done. They are issued every month.

Q. Can you furnish those for the last 2 or 3 months, giving the general terms?—A. I guess so. I have no objections unless some one has who has general charge of it. They are open to the public; they are issued to everybody. There is nothing secret about them. (Rept. Ind. Com., vol. 13. p. 321.)

On the same day Mr. Hugh Campbell, before the same commission, contradicted point blank every statement of Mr. Duke, and more, he gives in detail a secret and execrable condition forced upon the jobber, upon pain of certain ruin, a compact whose purpose and effect was to destroy the business and confiscate the property of competitors everywhere. This infamous secret, oft and earnestly denied boycott, is unlike highway robbery only as a sneak thief differs from a bandit. Here is what Mr. Campbell has to say of this effort to drive him and his company out of New England:

RESTRICTIONS PLACED UPON THE TOBACCO TRADE BY THE CONTINENTAL TOBACCO COMPANY.

Q. You spoke of doing business in New England and throughout the United States so far as you are allowed. What do you mean by "so far as you are allowed?"—A. I mean that a year ago the Continental Tobacco Company, manufacturing, owning, and controlling the brands of between 80 and 90 per cent of the tobacco sold in New England, went to the jobbers, through whom only it is possible to do a profitable and living business, and made this proposition: "Hereafter we will give you an extra discount of 3 per cent, provided you do not handle the brands of certain other companies—new companies just starting, one of which is the United States Tobacco Company." At the same time the jobbers were getting 2 cents a pound on the tobacco sold to the retailers. So that proposition gave to the jobber 2 cents a pound plus 3 per cent. That made quite a difference to us and to other independent companies—made it practically impossible to do business in New England. There are many small retailers who can only buy in very small quantities, and the manufacturer can not deliver to the small retailers. For instance, a newspaper stand carries a few brands of tobacco, and, since the manufacturer can not deliver to him, he must employ the jobber. There are several different brands of different manufacturers which the retailer can buy from the jobber, but, if he were to purchase directly from the manufacturer, he would probably want only one of the manufacturer's brands, and the cost of delivery would be too much. So by this action they shut off the channels through which the manufacturer reached the retailer, and through the retailer the consumer.

Q. They offered this extra 3 per cent discount provided the jobbers would handle no brands but their own?—A. At that time the restriction did not go so far, but simply prohibited their handling the brands manufactured by four new companies, of which ours was one. Later, on the 1st of January this year, that proposition was changed. They found that some jobbers were willing to do business for the 2 cents per pound and lose the 3 per cent. A jobber might be able to make a living, do business, and cover his expenses at a profit of 2 cents a pound. Some few did continue to sell outside goods. On the 1st of January, or about that time, the proposition was changed, and instead of giving 2 cents a pound the manufacturers gave 1 cent a pound, and if the jobbers refused to handle independent goods they got 5½ per cent extra discount. No jobber can do business on 1 cent a pound.

Between May, 1900, and this time here and there throughout New England, a few jobbers have been cut off from getting the trust's brands altogether by reason of their independence. The trust refused to sell them goods, not because there was a question of credit at all, but simply and only because they persisted in handling independent goods. That has had a deterring effect on others, of course. They have been held up as a warning to all who might be inclined to go and do likewise; and to-day, and for the last twelve months, there has been a "reign of terror" in New England. Dealers are afraid to sell, as they would like to do, goods that they have bought and paid for. (Rept. Ind. Com., vol. 13, p. 306.)

It may be said that this is a question of veracity "between two distinguished gentlemen," and so far it is. Fortunately for Mr. Campbell and the country, this very question has been tried before a court of justice, and I will let the records speak for themselves. On the 1st of June, 1904, the grand jury of Plymouth County, Mass., indicted Mr. Abe Strauss, the duly authorized agent of this trust, for making the exact contract described by Mr. Campbell, and of course Mr. Strauss and his master pleaded not guilty. The jury thought otherwise. The trust appeared, and I have here a copy of the bill of exceptions prepared by the defendant.

Here is what the witnesses had to say in discussing this charge which Mr. Duke denied with such a show of righteous indignation:

Frank J. Dutra, a tobacco dealer of Brockton, Mass., being asked about this boycotting of independent dealers, said (read from the record):

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Supreme court. Plymouth, ss. June sitting.

COMMONWEALTH (by indictment) v. ABE STRAUSS.

Q. Give, as nearly as you can remember, the substance of the conversation.—A. He told me they were going to have a new deal in this way, that there would be a 2 per cent—if we would deal in his goods exclusively and throw out the independent goods we should go 2 and 2 and a rebate of 6 per cent later.

Q. You say "2 and 2 and a rebate of 6 per cent;" that makes an entire discount of 10 per cent.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the first 2 per cent for? What discount was that?—A. I don't know. They took that off themselves on the bill. When we paid the bill in ten days we took 2 per cent off that.

Q. The first discount was what is called "trade discount;" that was taken off the bill before it was rendered?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Two per cent off the list price; that is their list price, I suppose, was it?—A. Well, if there was a bill for $100, they would take 2 per cent right off and make the bill $98; if I paid the bill in ten days I took 2 per cent off that.

Q. How many was this—on what condition was the 6 per cent——Mr. BIXBY. What was said?

Q. What was said about 6 per cent?—A. If I would stop handling union goods we would get 6 per cent; if not, all we got was 2 and 2; that is the way I understand it.

Q. What do you mean by "independent tobacco"?—A. Well, it is made by the union factories; goods that are made by the independent or union factories. He saw the tobacco on the floor and asked me where I got it. I told him I bought it and paid for it, and he asked me if it was not understood that I shouldn't buy any more goods that way. I told him that I never made any agreement with him to that effect; I listened to his story before, and I told him that I couldn't pick up that brand around there, as there was no one handled it but me; that he didn't job it at all; I wanted it for retail trade.

Q. Give us briefly what was the burden of his conversation in that connection.—A. I couldn't tell you anything more than when he went away he wanted to know what I was going to do. I told him I would think it over, so he went away, and I think it was the following Monday that I wrote to him and told him I was going to handle independent goods because customers called for them, and if they saw fit to drop me they could do so. I was dropped.

Q. And you would send your check to whom?—A. To the Continental Tobacco Company, 111 Fifth avenue, New York.

Richard J. Casey, a tobacconist of Bridgeport, Mass., being examined to the same purpose, said:

Q. Well, then, I will ask you if this was it: "He said he had a new proposition which would give us 2, 2, and 6 per cent. Two per cent in trade discount, 2 per cent in cash discount, and 6 per cent was for handling their goods exclusively."—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That was the proposition, was it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you say anything to him with reference to it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you accept the proposition?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Up to that time had you been dealing in the plug tobacco of the so-called independent concerns?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. And in consequence of the acceptance of that proposition did you cease to deal in their tobacco?—A. Yes, sir.

In this celebrated trial we see a startling and pathetic picture of the result of this diabolical scheme. I shall let the witnesses speak for themselves.

Mr. Edwin U. Harrington, an independent dealer, swears as follows:

Q. (By Mr. French.) What is your name?—A. Edwin U. Harrington.
Q. Where do you live?—A. Cambridge.
Q. How long have you lived there?—A. Not quite a year.
Q. What is your business?—A. New England agent for Larus & Brother Company, factory at Richmond.
Q. Manufacturers of what?—A. Of plug and smoking tobacco.
Q. Is your company connected with the Continental Tobacco Company?—A. No, sir.
Q. Is it one of the so-called independent manufacturers?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. How long have you personally been in the tobacco business in New England?—A. About twenty-one years; a little over twenty years.
Q. Will you state in what capacity—in connection with what concern?—A. Fifteen years I was salesman for John Findland Brothers; was with them until their absorption by the Continental Tobacco Company.
Q. Was your attention called to the proposition of the Continental Tobacco Company to their customers, that they would give them 2 per cent trade discount, 2 per cent cash, and 6 per cent if they would agree not to deal in goods of other concerns?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What effect did that have on the independent business?—A. Well, practically every jobber stopped purchasing the goods of the independent factories.
Q. In Massachusetts?—A. Practically.
Q. How many jobbers were there in Massachusetts then?—A. About two hundred and ten.
Q. How many of them stopped buying independent goods when that proposition was made?—A. Well, all but two or three.

Here is a note or two from the death song of another victim, a once prosperous merchant, whose epitaph appears in this record:

Q. (By Mr. FRENCH). Your name?—A. Nathan F. Ives.
Q. Where do you live?—A. In North Weymouth.
Q. What is your business?—A. I am manager for the United States Tobacco Company.
Q. Is that one of the so-called independent concerns?—A. It is.
Q. How long have you been in the tobacco business?—A. Over twenty years.
Q. How long have you been familiar with the market for plug tobacco in Massachusetts and in Plymouth County?—A. During the time I have been in the tobacco business.
Q. Twenty years?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Were you familiar with the conditions of that trade prior to January 1, last year?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you know how many jobbers there were in Massachusetts at that time?—A. About 210.
Q. Was your attention called to the proposition which was made by the salesmen of the Continental Tobacco Company in January, 1904, with reference to the sale of tobacco to jobbers?—A. It was.
Q. Plug tobacco, I mean?—A. It was.
Q. Did you observe the effect upon the trade which that proposition had?—A. I did.
Q. What was it?—A. We lost all the jobbers; practically all of them.
Q. That is, the independent companies practically lost all the jobbers?—A. Yes, sir.

A few days ago the Supreme Court of Massachusetts sustained the finding of the lower court, and Mr. Strauss and his master will be compelled to pay the penalty for this ruthless destruction of the business of 200 firms whose only offense was that they dared to transact a legitimate business in a free country without wearing the collar of the trust.

I will here file the affidavits of reputable merchants to the same effect, and more, I have before me the circular letters issued by this piratical monopoly in which they demand their "pound of flesh." These same papers were produced before the Industrial Commission on the very day Mr. Duke denied that such documents were ever issued. Here are the affidavits and circular letters:

AFFIDAVIT OF MR. HARRY M. CHAPMAN, OF NEW BEDFORD, MASS.

I, Harry M. Chapman, of New Bedford, in the county of Bristol and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am a member of the firm of E. T. Chapman & Co., said firm doing a business of wholesalers and jobbers in tobacco in New Bedford, and having been engaged in said business during the last thirty years in said New Bedford. That since the formation of the Continental Tobacco Company of New Jersey, and prior to that time, our firm has dealt extensively in the brands of plug tobacco acquired by said corporation and now owned by it. That 90 per cent of our business in plug tobacco during the years 1898, 1899, and 1900 was in the goods owned and controlled by said Continental Tobacco Company. That in April, 1900, Charles Keene, transportation agent of said Continental Tobacco Company, and one Strauss, the regular salesman for said Continental Tobacco Company for this district, called at our place of business and informed us that thereafter there would be a fixed price at which the wholesalers and tobacco jobbers should sell the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company to the retail trade. The jobbers, however, were to be allowed to purchase these goods at 2 cents a pound less than the fixed price. If, however, we agreed to exclude from our stock, and refused to sell or handle any goods made by any manufacturer other than the Continental Tobacco Company, we were to be allowed a discount of 5 per cent. Our firm asked time to consider this proposition. We subsequently learned that the offer made by these agents to us was somewhat different from the offer made to other wholesalers in our district. Our firm, not being an agent in any way of said Continental Tobacco Company, declined to be dictated to as to what goods we should sell. About three weeks later Mr. L. D. Mayhew, the New England manager of said Continental Tobacco Company, together with said Strauss, again called at our place of business, and, upon observing that we were continuing to carry in stock goods of other manufacturers, informed us that we were thereupon cut off from any more purchases of the goods of said Continental Tobacco Company. That subsequently to this we sent to said Continental Tobacco Company an order for goods, which order was not filled. That later we sent an order by registered mail, and accompanied the order with a letter requesting the reasons why said Continental Tobacco Company had declined or neglected to fill our orders. In response to this letter we received a letter of the Continental Tobacco Company from their headquarters in New York, signed by W. H. McAllister, secretary, in which they informed us, in reply to our letter to them, that they had concluded that it was not to their interest to maintain business relations with us, and that they had decided to cease such relations. We were informed that we might be supplied with their products by application to jobbers in our section, but upon application to said jobbers, we found that said goods were refused to us.

And your deponent says that from his own knowledge the other jobbers and wholesalers of tobacco in this city, who are now purchasing and having for sale the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company, do not now keep and expose for sale the goods of other new tobacco manufacturers discriminated against by said Continental Tobacco Company, although prior to the inauguration of said policy of said Continental Tobacco Company said wholesalers and jobbers did keep and expose for sale said brands.

And your deponent is informed that said Continental Tobacco Company claims that all jobbers and wholesalers may purchase their products, irrespective of whose goods they handle, at a price 1 cent a pound below the price fixed for the retailers, and your deponent says that such a price is a prohibitive price and does not enable the wholesaler or jobber in tobacco to handle said goods at a profit, but would compel a loss to said wholesaler or jobber.

HARRY M. CHAPMAN.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
New Bedford, April 16, 1901.

BRISTOL, ss:

Then personally appeared the above-named Harry M. Chapman, to me personally known, and subscribed and made oath to the above affidavit.
Before me,

AFFIDAVIT OF MR. ALBINI SUMNER HOVEY, OF LYNN, MASS.

I, Albini Sumner Hovey, of Lynn, in the county of Essex and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am engaged in the tobacco business in Lynn, and have been for nine years; that prior to January, 1901, I had been purchasing of the Continental Tobacco Company certain of its plug tobacco goods; that some time in January, 1901, one Edward M. Langley, the representative and salesman of the Continental Tobbaco Company for my city, called upon me at my store and asked me if I was going to fall into line. I replied, "What line?" He said, "The same as the rest of the jobbers and subjobbers." I asked him what that was, and he said, "To sell whatever we say." I said, "who are 'we?'" He replied, "The Continental Tobacco Company. I said, "What do you want me to do?" He said, "Would you throw out Butler's, 'B. and W.,' and 'Sensible' brands of tobacco?" I said, "No, sir; I have too good a sale on them." He called my attention to the fact that "Sensible" tobacco (made by persons other than the Continental Tobacco Company) was displayed on my shelf. I replied that it was my tobacco, which I had paid for; that some people might keep their tobacco under their counters, but I saw no reason why I shouldn't display it. As he went away from the store I said, "Don't do anything to be sorry for;" and he replied that he shouldn't do anything until I heard from him again. Within a few days after that I received a letter from L. D. Mayhew, departmental manager of the Continental Tobacco Company for New England, informing me that I had been cut off as a subjobber by the Continental Tobacco Company. I afterwards called upon Mr. Manning, of the firm of McGreanery Bros. & Manning, the largest distributers of tobacco goods in New England, and of whom I had been purchasing tobacco, and asked him if I had got to pay the advanced price for the Continental Tobacco Company's goods which I purchased of him. He said he was sorry, but he didn't dare to do any different than to charge me that price. This was a price at which I could not sell the goods to retailers at a profit. I had previously been regarded by the Continental Tobacco Company as a jobber, and later as a subjobber. The only reason within my knowledge why I was cut off was because I declined to throw out of my stock certain goods of independent manufacturers.

ALBINI S. HOVEY.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
Boston, April 16, 1901.

SUFFOLK, ss:

Then personally appeared the above-named Albini Sumner Hovey, to me personally known, and made oath and subscribed to the above affidavit.
Before me,
[SEAL.] PAUL R. BLACKMUR, Notary Public.

AFFIDAVIT OF MR. CHARLES H. TILTON, OF BOSTON, MASS.

I, Charles H. Tilton, of Boston, in the county of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, being duly sworn, depose and say that I am a member of the firm of Stephen Tilton & Co., of Boston, established in 1836, which firm is engaged in selling plug tobacco throughout New England to the tobacco jobbers and others, and represents as selling agents three independent manufacturers of plug tobacco, viz, the United States Tobacco Company, Butler & Bosher, and W. J. Yarborough, all of Richmond, Va.

And your deponent says that the Continental Tobacco Company, a corporation established under the laws of New Jersey, was formed in December, 1898, having purchased the factories owning and making substantially all the leading brands of plug tobacco sold and used in the market of New England; that said Continental Tobacco Company now supplies to the plug tobacco trade of New England 85 or 90 per cent of all the plug tobacco sold and consumed within said district.

And your deponent says that prior to April, 1900, there was open and free competition in New England in the sale to all jobbers of plug tobacco; that neither said Continental Tobacco Company nor any other manufacturer discriminated against the purchasers or jobbers of tobacco goods who carried or had for sale the goods of other manufacturers, and that said Continental Tobacco Company sold its goods to said jobbers, who paid for the same at substantially the same rates or prices.

And your deponent says that during the month of April, 1900, certain officers of the Continental Tobacco Company, viz, H. D. Kingsbury, treasurer, and C. C. Dula, third vice-president, empowered to act for said corporation in pursuance of an agreement and understanding entered into with one F. C. Bushnell, president, and representing an association of wholesale grocers known as the New England Grocers' Association, visited the tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers of New England, and notified them that thereafter the jobbers could purchase the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company at a price upon which said tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers could make 2 cents per pound, but that if said jobbers and grocers would agree to exclude from their stock, and refuse to handle, all plug tobacco goods of tobacco manufacturers established and beginning business since the formation of said Continental Tobacco Company, and all new brands of any manufacturer, they would give to said tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers an extra discount of 3 per cent upon all bills of purchases made by said jobbers or grocers of the goods of said Continental Tobacco Company.

And your deponent says that the profit of 2 cents a pound on said tobacco to said tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers was hardly adequate to enable said trade to do business at a profit.

And your deponent says that said agreement entered into between said Bushnell and said Continental Tobacco Company was an agreement to prevent the introduction of new brands of plug tobacco and to exclude certain old brands, and was in effect an agreement to restrain trade and commerce in said tobacco in the market of New England and designed to create a monopoly in the Continental Tobacco Company of the plug tobacco business in New England.

And your deponent says that said arrangement of prices inaugurated by the Continental Tobacco Company went into effect May 1, 1900; that subsequently said Continental Tobacco Company, through its officers and agents, again visited said tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers of New England, and changed the price at which the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company could be purchased, so that said jobbers and grocers could get but 1 cent per pound profit instead of 2 cents as heretofore, but to said tobacco jobbers and wholesale grocers who agreed to exclude from their stock all plug tobacco goods of new factories as well as all new brands of old factories, together with all goods of certain designated old-established factories, an extra discount of 5½ per cent would be given; that the 5½ per cent discount was a large and material discount in the handling of said tobacco; that said 1 cent a pound without the discount was a price at which it was impossible for the tobacco jobber or wholesale grocer to do business at a profit in said goods, and was in effect a refusal to sell to the trade or jobbers the goods of said Continental Tobacco Company, or to sell them only at a prohibitive price; that further, in order to close up all the channels of distribution for the goods of all said independent manufacturers, said agents and officers of said Continental Tobacco Company visited the largest retail dealers of tobacco in New England, and notified them that if they would exclude from their stock the goods of all new tobacco concerns, and further refuse to handle any new brands of the old tobacco concerns, said retailers' names would be placed upon a list known as the "Subjobbers list," which would entitle said retailers to buy from the jobbers at a less price than their competitors by 2 cents a pound, provided, however, that they compiled with the request to exclude the tobacco goods of other designated manufacturers; that said Continental Tobacco Company did not deal or bill any goods directly to said retailers, but notified the jobbers to give to the retailers the discriminating rates on their purchases as aforesaid.

And your deponent says that all these arrangements, agreements, or prices have been put into effect by the agents and officers of said Continental Tobacco Company. And your deponent says that many of his former customers have ceased to purchase the goods of your deponent, and give as a reason that they do not dare to purchase the tobacco goods of your deponent for fear that they will be cut off from the old-established brands and goods controlled by said Continental Tobacco Company, the sale of which goods forms 85 to 90 per cent of their business. And your deponent, from his experience of 32 years in the tobacco business in New England, is of the opinion and believes that this action on the part of the Continental Tobacco Company, if allowed to prevail, will create a monopoly in said Continental Tobacco Company of the plug tobacco business; that the shutting off through all the channels of trade to the consumer of the product of new manufacturers, and also, of the new brands of old manufacturers, will bring about that end; that it is essential to the life of every manufacturer of plug tobacco, whether the business is long established or not, to from time to time bring out new brands, and that if they have not that opportunity, the business is certain to die of dry rot; that the action of the Continental Tobacco Company heretofore set forth and complained of has and will greatly damage the business of your deponent.

CIRCULAR LETTERS ISSUED BY THE CONTINENTAL TOBACCO COMPANY RELATIVE TO ITS TERMS TO JOBBERS.

Q. (By Mr. JENKS.) Have you any direct information regarding any circular letter from the Continental Tobacco Company to the same effect?—A. I have here two circulars.

Q. Was this circular issued by the company, or is this a copy of one so issued?—A. This is a copy of a circular issued by the Continental Tobacco Company.

Q. Have you seen the circular itself?—A. I have seen the original.

Q. And you know this is an exact copy of the original?—A. Yes.

Q. This circular letter was sent to a specific individual or firm?—A. To a dealer in tobacco in Massachusetts. At his request his name is not given. He claimed that he would be cut off from buying their goods if his name were known.

Q. You yourself saw the original on which the name appeared?—A. Yes.

Q. (By Mr. LITCHMAN.) And you know this to be an exact copy of the document he received?—A. I do. (Reading:)

"DEAR SIR: Our offer heretofore made you to pay you 5½ per cent on purchases from us under certain conditions named at the time such offer was made is hereby withdrawn, and in lieu thereof we make you the following proposition:

"If, during the four months beginning May 1, 1901, and ending August 31, 1901 (unless we sooner withdraw this offer, as stated below), your direct purchases from us for distribution to your regular trade aggregate not less than ———, we will pay you 5½ per cent extra on the entire amount of such purchases.

"If your business during that period does not aggregate as much as the sum stipulated above, or if you combine with any person, firm, or company to make joint purchases, you will not be entitled to this 5½ per cent on any of your purchases during said period.

"We reserve the right to discontinue this plan and withdraw this offer at any time, though if we do withdraw it before the expiration of the period named above, we will pay you 5½ per cent extra on the entire amount of your direct purchases from us for distribution to your regular trade between May 1, 1901, and the date of such withdrawal.

"We will withdraw this offer from any customer in Massachusetts who sells or offers to sell our goods, directly or indirectly, in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut at less than jobbers' selling price list, effective in those States.

"No employee of this company has any authority whatever to change or modify, in any respect, or to any extent, this letter, or any other letter, circular, price list, or offer of this company.

"Yours, very truly,

"CONTINENTAL TOBACCO CO.,
"(Signed) C. C. DULA,
"Third Vice-President."

Q. (By Mr. JENKS.) This circular letter does not put in that other condition with reference to selling exclusively the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company?—A. I do not think you will find that in print.

Q. I was going to ask you whether the person from whom you received this letter said that the conditions referred to in it were those conditions? In this circular it says this: "Our offer heretofore made you to pay you 5½ per cent on purchases from us under certain conditions named at the time such offer was made * * *." Did the person to whom this letter was written state that the conditions referred to here were to the effect that they should deal exclusively in the goods of the Continental Tobacco Company?—A. That was his statement, and not only his statement, but the universal statement of all dealers.

Q. (By Mr. LITCHMAN.) Do I understand this circular letter was sent out, and that aside from this there was an oral agreement with the dealers?—A. Yes.

Q. And you find that so far as your investigation goes in every case where you have learned of these instances?—A. In every case. This circular accompanied the other one. (Reading:)

"To our customers in Massachusetts:

"Referring to our circular, under date of August 6, 1900, addressed to our customers in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut, we quote from said circular as follows:

"'We shall decline to fill orders from any customer in the above-named States who sells, or offers to sell, either directly or indirectly, any of the listed brands of tobacco manufactured by this company at less than the prices appearing in the jobbers' selling price list; this price list applies to sales made by you either to jobbers or retailers.'

"We now wish to advise that this circular is hereby abrogated so far as it applies to sales made by our customers to merchants located in the State of Massachusetts, but it will remain effective and continue to apply on sales made by our customers to merchants located in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.

"No employee of this company has any authority whatever to change or modify in any respect, or to any extent, this circular, or any circular, letter, price list, or offer of this company.

"Very truly, yours, "CONTINENTAL TOBACCO CO."

I charge that this trust has not only offered secret rebates and inducements to these dealers handling their goods exclusively, but that they have refused to fill orders at any price to jobbers, or to independent dealers, whose destruction it had decreed, or whose property it coveted, and this charge has been more than established in the celebrated suit of E. Locker & Co. against the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, filed in Brooklyn in September, 1905, for $50,000, caused by the destruction of the once great and prosperous business of this company.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Has the gentleman information as to how many of the cigar factories in Habana are under their control or affiliated with them?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes; practically all of them. All of the Garcias are under their control. The Henry Clay cigar is under their control, and in response to the gentleman's question, to show the power of benevolent assimilation, I have shown that these thieves, after they formed the American Cigar Company, with a capitalization of $10,000,000 absorbed the great work of Garcia & Co. with ten associated companies, which was capitalized at $20,000,000, and swallowed it without making a face. I wish to file here the most pathetic appeal that was ever made to the public by A. Locker & Co. These are the plaintiffs in the celebrated suit of Locker against the American Tobacco Company. It is a circualr letter to the trade in which they swear to the wrongs that were done them, and in which they point out the fact that with their millions and with their well-established reputation it is utterly impossible to secure any of the well-known brands of the American Tobacco Company unless they will cut the throat of every independent dealer.

IMPORTANT TO THE ENTIRE TOBACCO TRADE.

BOROUGH OF BROOKLYN, NEW YORK CITY, 1904.

We have recently begun a suit in the New York supreme court against the American Tobacco Company and the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, representing the tobacco trust.

This suit we have undertaken in order to protect ourselves against what we regard as an unlawful combination in restraint of trade whereby the free pursuit of our lawful business in this State is restricted, and, in view of many references made to our litigation in the public journals, we have decided to make the following statement concerning it to the trade:

In the year 1862, long prior to the organization of the tobacco trust, our predecessor in business, the late Henry Berbert, and his associates founded and built up our tobacco house in this place, where for more than forty years it has continued to do an extensive and prosperous business. By a large investment of capital, by strict integrity, and by unremitting effort this business has earned and established a valuable good will and reputation throughout the Greater New York and elsewhere, and has become generally known throughout the country to be, as it is, the largest tobacco establishment in the United States doing business both at wholesale and retail.

About 1890 the American Tobacco Company was incorporated, and as it gradually absorbed many of the tobacco-manufacturing houses with whom our establishment had previously done business it solicited us to give to it our patronage, and through its representatives constantly urged us to deal with it, and assured our predecessors and ourselves that at all times our orders should receive the promptest attention on the most favorable ruling terms. Relying upon its solicitations, representations, and constant assurances of fair dealing at all times, we continued to have large transactions with the American Tobacco Company and to be active in the introduction of its products to our customers until about the year 1899, when the Metropolitan Tobacco Company was formed. Then the American Tobacco Company, having quietly secured and put out of business all the concerns of which we could buy the merchandise which had thus by its act become indispensable to our business, notified us, in substance, that under arrangements made with the Metropolitan Tobacco Company the tobacco trade in the Greater New York, including ourselves, would thereafter be supplied with its goods only through the Metropolitan Tobacco Company as its representative and distributor, and that thereafter it would not fill any further orders in the Greater New York, except those which came through the Metropolitan Tobacco Company.

The Metropolitan Tobacco Company, and likewise the American Tobacco Company itself, then urgently solicited and urged our business house to continue to it the dealings which for so many years we had had directly with the American Tobacco Company, and with other companies which had meanwhile become absorbed in it. Through its representatives it renewed to us the assurances which we had formerly received from the American Tobacco Company that our orders should at all times receive prompt and favorable attention, and reaffirmed that every possible consideration should always be shown us. Special rewards were offered by the American Tobacco Company to our salesmen for persuading our house to purchase its merchandise and for identifying ourselves with the sale of the various tobacco products—cigarettes, etc.—marketed by it.

After the formation of the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, and the secret combination made between the American Tobacco Company and itself whereby the Metropolitan Tobacco Company became the sole distributing agent for the American Tobacco Company in the Greater New York, still the American Tobacco Company continued frequently to send to us, and to others similarly situated, its agents or salesmen to solicit the continuation of our orders to the Metropolitan Tobacco Company for the goods marketed by the American Tobacco Company, etc. In continued reliance upon the representations, promises, and course of business above outlined our house has in good faith for years largely devoted the facilities of its great establishment to the sale of the products of the American Tobacco Company. To such an extent has this been done that our customers have come to require, to a great degree, the various articles of merchandise dealt in by the American Tobacco Company and now controlled in this vicinity by the Metropolitan Tobacco Company.

Recently, and without any just cause or complaint of our course of business, and in defiance of our previous understanding and course of trade and of every principle of fair dealing, the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, as we believe, by the direction of the American Tobacco Company, has refused to fill any of our orders at any price for any of the merchandise marketed or controlled by the American Tobacco Company. This is the same merchandise with which for years past these two companies have so earnestly solicited us to identify ourselves, and which in reliance upon their assurances has been made important to our business, as shown above. Simultaneously with this refusal to fill our further orders the representatives of these companies have notified us, in substance, that our business was too prosperous, and that unless we would consent to sell out to them upon their own terms and would agree never again to go into the same business they would boycott us and prevent our purchasing anywhere the merchandise necessary for the conduct of our business and would drive us out of business. In partial execution of that threat they have, as above stated, refused to sell us any merchandise on any terms whatever; have, as we are informed, forbidden their customers to sell to us on penalty of ruining them also, and have discriminated against us in the trade. Their representatives have, as we are informed, circulated stories about us which are grossly untrue, have tried to influence our employees, and in a variety of ways appear to be attempting to make good their threats.

These circumstances and others, the public statement of which we are advised for the present to withhold, force us to believe that they are but steps in an unlawful scheme which if continued will presently stifle all competition, either in the wholesale or retail tobacco trade, will destroy every independent tobacco manufacturer and dealer in the country, and will flood the land with inferior products at excessive prices. We are also assured that many others throughout the country have suffered and will suffer like injustice at the hands of this gigantic monopoly.

We have, therefore, for our protection, begun this suit in the New York supreme court against the American Tobacco Company and the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, which, if necessary, we propose to take to the Supreme Court of the United States.

These corporations, although now controlling hundreds of millions of dollars capital and upward of 80 per cent of the entire tobacco output, are but artificial creations of the Government, which owe their very existence and right to do business wholly to franchises and privileges which the State has granted, and over which the Government, by proper procedure, can always exercise a very considerable control and restraint.

We do not believe that where the laws, both State and national, have so vigorously condemned monopolies and combinations in restraint of trade, the effect of which are to control prices to prevent competition, and to ruin legitimate business, even this great trust can in our case escape such a judicial condemnation as will forever afterwards protect us and others similarly situated, provided the case be properly presented to our highest courts.

We are convinced also that this litigation, and others like it, with the publicity, full discussion, and investigation which we ask all interested to give to it, and which the trust will doubtless do all in its power to prevent, may in the present excited condition of public opinion on the general subject eventually lead to such a modification of existing laws, both State and national, as hereafter will save others from the necessity of fighting for their lives, as we are now compelled to do.

We think it is clear that in a short time, unless the courts or the laws give some relief, the independent tobacco manufacturers will find themselves unable to market their product, because there will be no jobbers and no retail dealers left in the country, or in the great business centers like New York, who will handle their merchandise, for the American Tobacco Company and its associates in the tobacco trust will have driven them all out of business, or will control them absolutely.

We do not therefore regard this suit as our suit alone, but we are compelled to look at it as a struggle in which every independent tobacco manufacturer, jobber, or retailer, from the largest to the smallest, has a direct personal interest, and we invite the active cooperation and assistance and suggestions of all, because all are necessarily interested and must necessarily be affected by the result.

We do not forget, and we ask you to remember, that our adversaries have enormous resources of money and influence, and that to insure the complete success we aim at we greatly need the encouragement and the generous help, pecuniary and otherwise, of the whole body of independent manufacturers and dealers throughout the country, for such litigation as this is necessarily difficult and expensive. The valuable help we have already received from strong sources justifies us in believing that as soon as our action has become generally known we shall receive the cordial cooperation and the pecuniary support of the entire trade everywhere. We consider that the prominence given to the question of the trusts in the recent national election makes this a most opportune time to press this suit.

We invite correspondence, information, and suggestions as to the experience of others with the tobacco trust, whether the facts are believed to be available in our present trial or not. Much which seems now irrelevant may later become most important.

We have several other plans in contemplation, and also propose to undertake through the proper official channels a more effective form of investigation into the methods of the trust than has hitherto been attempted. We are resolved to leave no stone unturned and no legitimate avenue for relief untried.

It may not be generally known that besides the various United States statutes against restraint of trade an antitrust law was passed in the year 1901 by the State of Massachusetts, covering substantially many of the points which we raise in this suit. Under this law at last there appears to be in Massachusetts an effective method of fighting the great trusts. In Plymouth, Mass., during the month of October last, the first action brought under this law of 1901 was tried, and the superior court there has indicted and fined the Continental Tobacco Company for violating this law. By this decision every representative of every such corporation using rebates to secure a monopoly and to prevent fair competition becomes in the State of Massachusetts a criminal liable to criminal punishment. In some of the other States, as well as in Canada, effective laws to remedy this wrong have already been passed and others will follow as the people come to realize their rights.

Fortunately, in the State of New York a somewhat similar law was passed in the year 1899, condemning monopolies in the articles of common use. This law, which has been overlooked by many who are deeply interested, is chapter 690 of the Laws of 1899, and provides, among other things, as follows: "Every contract, agreement, arrangement, or combination whereby a monopoly in the manufacture, production, or sale in this State of any article or commodity of common use is, or may be created, established, or maintained, or whereby competition in this State in the supply or price of any such article or commodity is, or may be restrained or prevented, or whereby for the purpose of creating, establishing, or maintaining a monopoly within this State of the manufacture, production, or sale of any such article or commodity, the free pursuit in this State of any lawful business, trade, or occupation is or may be restrained or prevented, is hereby declared to be against public policy, illegal, and void." This law has already been approved by a decision of the New York court of appeals, and we trust that under it, and under the laws and statutes of the United States previously passed to prevent unlawful restraint of trade, we can secure such a decision as will be just and equitable, and will protect ourselves, and all others similarly situated, from future unlawful interference.

The principle involved in this controversy affects not only the Tobacco Trust, but every like combination and monopoly in this country.

For obvious reasons we do not here fully disclose our legal status and the entire basis of our claims for relief before the courts, but all persons interested in the question at issue and desiring further information concerning it, or wishing to cooperate with us in any way, are invited to address our counsel in the suit, Frederick P. Bellamy, esq., whose offices are at 204 Montague street, Borough of Brooklyn, City of New York.

Very truly, yours,

E. LOCKER & CO.,
Successor to H. Berbert.

Wholesale and retail tobacconists, 267–273 Bushwick avenue, Brooklyn, New York City. Telephone, 1398 Williamsburg. (Established, 1862.)

I blush to confess it, that in "this land of liberty," where the right to property is guaranteed and where the pickpocket and petit thief are imprisoned and infamous, that an army of men, sober, honest, and industrious, have been literally driven to bankruptcy and ruin by the operation of this infamous boycott. I am indebted to Mr. Hugh Campbell, of Richmond, for the following "list of the slain." Men who a few years ago were happy, hopeful, and prosperous, whose occupation is gone and whose business is destroyed, their substance devoured by a loathsome and insatiate cormorant, they have been turned adrift "to hang, beg, or starve," for all their soulless despoilers care.

These people were of course permitted to continue in business upon the condition that they would take "the oath of allegiance."

The trust resembles those piratical crews who after robbing their captors give them the hard choice of "walking the plank" or joining the bandits in scouring the seas for other victims. Here is the list of those who have been forced to become either pirates or paupers.

List of jobbers who have either sold or have gone into the New Jersey Tobacco Company or the Tonn Tobacco Company:

Meyer Brothers, Montgomery avenue, Jersey City, N. J.; T. W. Decker, Central avenue, Jersey City, N. J.; J. G. Crawford's Son, Orange street, Newark, N. J.; J. Goehring, Newark, N. J.; J. P. Turbett, Ferry street, Newark, N. J.; P. Turbett, Madison street, Newark, N. J.; Diamond Brothers, Rutgers street, Newark, N. J.; Langstoff's Son, Burnett street, Newark, N. J.; J. R. Miller & Son, Austin street, Newark, N. J.; Patterson Brothers, Plainfield, N. J.; B. Feeney Tobacco Company, Paterson, N. J.; A. Meyer, Paterson, N. J.; Conover & Bernhardt, New Brunswick, N. J.; M. Pach & Son, Red Bank, N. J.; J. Bailey, Red Bank, N. J.; Barringer, Asbury Park, N. J.

Those forming the Delaware Tobacco Company are:

Robt. Kenyon, Wilmington, Del.

Those forming the Washington Tobacco Company are:

Luchs Brothers, Washington, D. C.; C. W. Plugge, Washington, D. C.

Those forming the Neudeker Tobacco Company are:

Fink & Co., Baltimore, Md.; Caulk Brothers, Baltimore, Md.

The following jobbers were included in the original formation of the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, New York, viz.:

The following jobbers have been absorbed by the Metropolitan Tobacco Company since its formation, viz:

Asa Lemlein Company, formerly at Third avenue, New York; L. Nykerk, formerly at Fortieth street, New York; L. Worlfow, formerly at Forsyth street, New York; J. H. Rosen, formerly at One hundred and thirty-eighth street, New York; Butterfass & Valentine, formerly at Manhattan avenue, Brooklyn; Emil Brook, formerly at Melrose avenue, Brooklyn.

Note.—Asa Lemlein & Co. were formerly the largest jobbers in New York and Brooklyn, doing a business of about $500,000 per year. They would not go into the original formation of the Metropolitan Tobacco Company, because they did not care to lose their identity with the trade. They were eventually compelled to go out of business after losing almost all their money. Mr. Asa Lemelin is now the New York representative of the E. H. Gato Cigar Company.

The following jobbers were included in the formation of the Brooklyn Tobacco Company, viz:

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Kentucky may be extended. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STANLEY. And in this connection, Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman proceeds, is it not a fact that when the American combination swallowed the English combination they agreed that the English combination would work over there and the American combination over here—they divided up the whole world in that way?

Mr. STANLEY. Certainly.

I have asked the President and the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to furnish information to this House as to the infringement of trade-marks and patents, and I charge that this trust has counterfeited the brands and trade-marks of independent dealers, and in support of this ugly assertion I offer a letter of Mr. Hugh Campbell, to whom I have previously referred:

THE UNITED STATES TOBACCO CO., TOBACCO MANUFACTURERS,
NEW ENGLAND OFFICE 176–178 MILK ST., BOSTON, MASS.,
Richmond, Va., May 10, 1906.

Hon. A. O. STANLEY, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR:

* * * * * * *

To give you an understanding of the sort of competition to which the trust resorts, I send you to-day samples of our brand "Central Union" cut plug, which has especially aroused the trust's antagonism and against which they have been pushing their brand of "Union Leader." This brand "Union Leader" was bought from Butler & Bosher Company in the form of package No. 1. As soon as they bought it they changed the shape of the package so as to more nearly conform to that of our package. This package is marked No. 2. On that second package Butler & Bosher's name still continued as manufacturers, although it had passed under the control of the trust. Later, this package not proving a success, they changed its place of manufacture to New Jersey, where it was put up by the P. Lorillard Company, and then took their name off altogether and pushed it upon the market, especially through the jobbers who had accepted their proposition of January, 1904.

In May, 1905, we ventured to bring suit against The American Tobacco Company for infringement of trade-mark and unfair competition, and their reply was on June 17 to begin sending out with every 2 pounds of tobacco which they manufactured and sold in the States where we are doing our principal business one 5-cent package of "Union Leader." This of course placed this brand in every retail store in these States, and the small retailer getting it for nothing, of course, to realize upon it had to sell it. I inclose you herewith some of the circulars which they issued at the time, and which I will be obliged by your returning to me after you have finished perusing them. Our suit was brought before the United States circuit court of Massachusetts, and although we seemed to have a very strong case, such as Mr. Moody had before Judge Humphreys in the Beef Trust case, we have lost.

* * * * * * *

Yours, truly,

HUGH CAMPBELL.

Here is a package of tobacco manufactured by the United States Tobacco Company called "Central Union," and which has had an extensive sale all over New England, Virginia, and the Carolinas.

Here is a package, its exact counterpart in color, form, size, and weight, which is called "Union Leader;" this package was made and placed upon the market to destroy the sale of the old and established brand made by Mr. Campbell's company. No man can tell these two packages apart when placed on a shelf ten feet away. In order to force the introduction of this spurious package, the trust actually sent it to jobbers in the territory where "Central Union" had hitherto commanded a ready sale, and by the express command of the American Tobacco Company this tobacco was given away.

I have here the original circular sent out by the American Company, blatantly proclaiming their infamous design, and I offer it to the inspection of this House:

UNION LEADER CUT PLUG FREE WITH ALL LISTED BRANDS OF TOBACCO OF THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY.

For salesmen: Effective on and after this date, we will give to retail dealers one (1) 5 cent foil package of "Union Leader" cut plug free with each two pounds of the listed brands of plug chewing, fine cut, twist, "Old Virginia" cheroots, and all brands of smoking tobacco (including "Union Leader" cut plug) of The American Tobacco Company. One hundred "Old Virginia" cheroots count as two (2) pounds of tobacco.

This offer is both liberal and attractive, and we desire that you push the sale of The American Tobacco Company's tobaccos vigorously while it lasts.

JUNE 17, 1905.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY,
111 Fifth Avenue, New York, June 17, 1905.

UNION LEADER CUT PLUG FREE.

With all our listed brands of tobacco to our customers in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and District of Columbia.

1. On and after this date, until further advised, you are authorized to give to retail dealers in the above-named States one five-cent (5c) foil package of Union Leader cut plug, free, with each two (2) pounds of any of our listed brands of plug chewing, fine cut, twist, Old Virginia Cheroots, and all brands of smoking tobacco, including Union Leader cut plug, that appear on our price list dated April 1, 1905, and also Town Talk plug; 100 Old Virginia Cheroots will count as two (2) pounds of tobacco.

2. We have advised retail dealers, direct from this office, that this offer is in effect, commencing this date, and we would thank you to begin immediately to put the deal in operation.

3. Should you not have in stock sufficient Union Leader cut plug in the 1⅛-ounce foil package to commence operations under this deal at once, we would thank you to place an order immediately for same, and the goods will be promptly shipped. Union Leader so shipped will be billed to you in the regular way and at the regular price.

4. We would request that you report to us at the end of each month, during the life of this offer, on blanks we will furnish you for that purpose, your total shipments and deliveries in pounds, by brands, of our goods covered by this offer and also the quantity of Union Leader given away in connection with same. On receipt of such report we will ship you, gratis, Union Leader in 1⅛-ounce foil, to reimburse you. Note carefully, however, that in no case will we reimburse you with Union Leader to cover sales in excess of the quantity of tobacco we shall have shipped you since May 1, 1905, after deducting such quantity as has already been covered by remittance of 1 cent per pound to the retail dealer under our former offer.

5. No jobber will be permitted to buy from retailers the Union Leader given to said retailers, exchange other goods for it, or in any way divert it from reaching and being sold to consumers by retail dealers.

6. The privileges conveyed by this offer will positively and promptly be withdrawn from any customer who fails to deliver the free Union Leader with shipments or deliveries of our tobaccos as above provided.

7. The giving or offering to give free Union Leader at any point or points outside the above-named States will be a violation of the provisions of this offer, followed by forfeiture of its privileges.

8. Free Union Leader must not be given with sales made to jobbers or direct customers of this company.

9. Heretofore some of our customers have taken the liberty of changing our offer by substituting some other brand in lieu of that set forth in the offer, or reducing the price on the brands covered by the offer in lieu of giving the gratis goods. This will not be permitted under this offer.

10. This offer will be withdrawn from any jobber who violates or evades its provisions or who does not act in good faith with us in carrying out all its provisions in letter and spirit.

11. No representative or employee of this company has authority to change any circular, letter, or price list issued by this company.

Very respectfully,

Now, I know that Mr. Duke has declared that he is very fond of giving tobacco away; he is at times almost as liberal with his counterfeits of an honest man's product as Carnegie is with libraries. He declares that this is an old approved method of establishing "new brands."

I here offer his evidence, in which he confesses, with a native and childlike simplicity, that he sold "Battle Ax," to which I have referred, for less than the cost of the tobacco in it, and actually gave away "American Beauty" cigarettes. Here is his statement made under oath before the Industrial Commission:

REDUCED PRICES AS A MEANS OF INTRODUCING NEW BRANDS.

Q. The statement has been made at different times that the American Tobacco Company and the other large concerns, in order to introduce brands, cut prices very low, substantially down to the amount of the revenue tax. Have you had experience of that kind?—A. Oh, yes; that is only one method of introducing a brand. Instead of spending so much money on advertising in newspapers and bill posters, a cheap price is made, and the dealers are left to do the advertising and work up the market themselves.

Q. Can you give one or two instances of that kind?—A. Take Battle Ax; we made a low price on that and got it into the market that way; but on some others it would not work.

Q. Take the case of Battle Ax; that is an older brand, is it not?—A. Yes; that we got out and pushed as early as 1895.

Q. About what was the difference between the price you made then and the price you made after it became known?—A. Under the 6-cent tax at one time we got the price as low as 13 cents a pound.

Q. That was while it was made by the American Company, and before the Continental was organized?—A. Yes.

Q. And about where has the price gone to now, since the Continental has been organized?—A. Since the change in the tax we have raised the price, I think, up to 30 cents.

Q. That is a plug tobacco?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you give any similar illustration with reference to cigarettes?—A. In 1883, when Duke, Sons & Co. got into business, we cut the price of cigarettes three or four months before the change in the tax; we got the market before the change came, and then afterwards we had it on a profitable basis.

Q. Have you any special brands of that kind that you are introducing now?—A. Yes; we are working one in North Carolina.

Q. What?—A. I forget the name of it.

Q. American Beauty?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you state about what you are selling that for?—A. I forget whether it is $1.50 or $1.60.

Q. Per thousand?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the revenue tax?—A. $1.50.

Q. So you are putting that down in order to get it started in that way?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any specially strong competitors in that locality?—A. No. We are making a test of it there to see whether a price of 20 cigarettes for 5 cents will bring back the business we have lost since the tax was changed to its present rate. You know the tax was raised from 50 cents to $1.50. Before that we had been selling cigarettes to the dealer so he could resell them to the consumer at 20 for 5 cents. But on account of the increased price necessitated by the new tax, the cigarette business has shrunk nearly two-fifths, I should think. When you can sell 20 for 5 cents, it is stronger.

Q. All over the country?—A. Yes; and since the change in the tax we have put out the 20 for 5 cents, and we want to find out whether the cheap price will bring back the consumer to the 20 for 5 again.

Q. How long is it since you started doing that?—A. I do not know. I think we began sometime after the change in the tax.

Q. (By Mr. LITCHMAN.) Do I understand that the cigarette on which the tax is $1.50 is being sold at $1.50?—A. Yes; we frequently give a brand away in order to get it introduced. It is sometimes cheaper to do that way than it is to spend money to go around and sell them. (Rept. Ind. Com., vol. 13, p. 319.)

To a poor layman—a stranger, thank Heaven, to the peculiar methods and morals of a trust—it strikes me as just a little bit peculiar that this particular brand should have been benevolently bestowed upon the public only in that particular territory in which Mr. Campbell had established a sale for a brand of tobacco that the American Company had determined to destroy. An inadvertence, no doubt.

It is both instructing and amusing to note the estimate in which this great "captain of industry" holds his own business methods. It will be remembered that at this time the combine, according to Duke's own statement, only owned about 100 brands of cigaretts and 75 brands of tobacco. About 95 per cent of all the known brands in the world. Now, the same day and before the same Commission to which he confessed that he often gave away tobacco and cigarettes as the best and most approved method of introducing new brands, he has this to say about the wisdom of his own course:

You can not introduce a brand of tobacco in a few years. It takes a long period of years to establish a brand of tobacco. Even the Continental Tobacco Company, with all the experience they have in the business, would not expect to put a brand in the market and establish a demand for it at once. We lost money for ten years on "Duke's Mixture."

Here is another sworn statement. Oh, he is a smooth swearer. [Laughter.]

A great loss to the manufacturer is the attempted introduction of so many new brands. It is of no benefit to the consumer, a disadvantage to the retail dealer, a disadvantage to the jobber and to the manufacturer. There is where the main sacrifice and loss of the manufacturer is—continually getting out new things to try to attract the consumer when the consumer is satisfied with what he has and will not change; spending a lot of money without accomplishing anything, either by way of benefiting themselves or anybody else. (Rept. Ind. Com., vol. 13, pp. 327–328.)

If, according to Mr. Duke, it is folly for a poor manufacturer to give away his one brand for the purpose of introducing it, what consummate folly to give a new and spurious brand away when he was then manufacturing hundreds of old, well-established brands. This tobacco was given away, not to introduce a new brand, but to drive from the market an old one, and that the property of an honest and struggling competitor.

This combine has not only destroyed the business of its competitors or forced them to surrender plants, trade-marks, brands, and good will by the lawless methods I have just described, but it has attempted to force honest men to become their subservient tools, to lie and to masquerade like bondsmen in obedience to the nefarious designs of their shameless master. Yea, more; the president of the American and Continental companies stooped to give his personal supervision to this infamous business. I here offer the statement of Mr. St. Claire Butler as to his own experience with the head of the Continental and American Tobacco companies:

IN RE SECRET CONTROL.

In January, 1903, Mr. A. St. Clair Butler, of Butler & Bosher Company, Richmond, Va., and a friend spent a day at No. 111 Fifth avenue, New York, with Mr. Duke, Mr. Fuller, and one other trust representative. Mr. Duke wanted to buy and offered to buy 51 per centum of the capital stock of the Butler & Bosher Company, whose business for several years previously has been supplying the Navy Department with tobacco, and manufacturing and selling tobacco in the South and New England. Mr. Duke, in offering to buy 51 per centum of the stock, told Mr. Butler that the business was to continue just as it had been managed, and their interest in it to remain a secret. Mr. Butler was to continue an independent manufacturer, continue to use the union label, and continue to associate with independent manufacturers. When Mr. Butler said that this would not be honest, Mr. Duke replied, "Plenty are doing it to-day, and if you do not do it, we will ruin you and drive you out of business." Mr. Butler asked time to consider the proposition, and returning home consulted his lawyer, who, happily, was a lawyer of the old school, as he advised Mr. Butler he would not be able to do what was proposed and be honest. Then Mr. Butler declined to sell. Thereupon the trust started out in its campaign against him. Mr. Butler had worked up quite a trade in New England on a smoking plug under the brand "Butler's Light and Dark," which was much the same as Mayo's "Eglantine" and "Ivy," brands owned by the trust, and which were large sellers, and on these the trust placed a deal, which so cut down Mr. Butler's business that he was greatly demoralized. Later the Navy contract was again awarded to Mr. Butler, and then the trust began bidding up the price of sun-cured tobacco, out of which the contract had to be made, and when Mr. Butler was thoroughly frightened, again offered to buy him. This time, however, they offered to buy his business outright, and finally they did so, continuing him as manager upon a salary.

The foregoing is a copy of the statement made January 20, 1905, to the Hon. James R. Garfield, Commissioner of Corporations. Mr. Butler was continued as manager of the business of Butler & Bosher Company, owned and controlled by the American Tobacco Company, from the time of its purchase, July 1, 1903, until March, 1906. Then the factory was closed, and Mr. Butler thrown out of employment. He, like 98 per cent of the manufacturers who have sold out, being under contract not again to enter into business, is now in the prime of life unable to engage in a business in which his whole life has been spent. Thus his experience as a tobacco manufacturer is lost to the country.

Now, I charge that these stool pigeons are created by this trust for the accomplishment of three infamous purposes. First. To deceive the producer and consumer of tobacco who desires to sell to or purchase from an independent dealer.

Second. For the purpose of deceiving and defrauding the Federal Government.

Third. For the purpose of throttling honest, patriotic, and wholesome legislation for the relief of the tobacco growers in this country.

I make these serious and terrible accusations deliberately and after a careful examination of the incontrovertible proof which I shall produec in their support.

I know full well, Mr. Speaker, that the men or corporations at whose door these heinous wrongs are laid are guilty of dishonesty to their competitors and treason to their country.

The Navy Department, by a wise and well-known regulation, has provided that the same firm or corporation shall not furnish more than one bid to the Navy for the furnishing of tobacco to it. Upon these bids the contracts are annually made. I wish here to call the attention of the House to an extract which appeared June 22, 1905, in that excellent and ably edited journal, Tobacco, published in New York:

THE NAVY TOBACCO CONTRACT.

Independent manufacturers say that the outcome of the recent hearing was not unexpected. What they sought was publicity and moral effect.

The independent tobacco manufacturers of Richmond characterized as high-handed the way in which the trust was allowed to carry things in connection with the so-called hearing, which was given them in Washington, on their protest against the alleged violation of the law in the award of the contract for tobacco for the Navy.

The independents claim that this so-called hearing was not only grudgingly granted them, but that matter had been so cut and dried that it was already settled in advance that no matter how strong a case they might present, the award of the contract to the trust would be permitted to stand.

In discussing the matter to-day a prominent independent manufacturer says:

Just how tight a grip the trust has upon the Navy Department may be judged by the fact that among those present at the so-called hearing was Junius Parker, the chief of the legal department of the trust. To thoroughly appreciate the significance of his presence, it must be remembered that Mr. Parker is not a lawyer in general practice who appears for the trust as he might for any other client. He has his headquarters in the office of the trust, at 111 Fifth avenue, New York, and devotes his entire time and attention to its affairs. As a matter of fact, he is just as much an officer of the trust as James B. Duke, the president, or William H. McAllister, the secretary.

Now, while Mr. Parker took no active part in the proceedings before Assistant Secretary of the Navy Darling, that was entirely unnecessary, because of the attitude of the Navy Department, which seems to have had everything prearranged, so that the award of the contract to the trust should stand in any event. It goes without saying that Mr. Parker did not take the journey from New York to Washington and attend the so-called hearings out of mere idle curiosity, and his presence stamped the proceedings as farcical in the extreme.

As a sample of the attitude assumed by Assistant Secretary Darling when President Hugh Campbell, of the United States Tobacco Company, presented documents in support of what has long been a matter of common knowledge in trade circles, that the P. Lorillard Company and Butler & Bosher are both owned and controlled by the American Tobacco Company, Secretary Darling announced that the Government did not recognize the absorption of the two companies by the American Tobacco Company, and so far as the Department was concerned, they were independent companies.

When President Campbell retorted that the Department of Justice already had on file evidence that the two firms were the property of the trust, which evidence had been collected in course of the investigation of the selling methods of the trust now being conducted with a view to prosecution for conspiracy in restraint of trade, Secretary Darling replied:

The tobacco trust is not known here and is not represented.

It may not be known, but it is certainly represented, replied President Campbell, as he pointed to Mr. Parker.

Now, Butler & Bosher and Lorillard & Co. were both bidders. I have already shown that the former firm had been absorbed by the trust in 1903 by the statement of Mr. St. Claire Butler. I have here the solemn finding of the supreme court of Missouri, where, in the case of the State v. Continental Tobacco Company, this same trust admitted that it owned Drummond & Co., "boots and breeches," and the court, after a careful hearing of the case, so found. I here offer an extract from the decision of the referee which was affirmed by the court:

EXCERPT FROM REFEREE'S DECISION.

(1) The American Tobacco Company was and is a corporation organized and existing under the laws of New Jersey, with authority, among other things, to purchase and operate tobacco factories and warehouses and to cure, manufacture, and sell all kinds of chewing and smoking tobacco. The exact date of its charter has not been proven, but it is shown by the evidence to have been engaged in business as far back as 1899. In 1895 the above-named American Tobacco Company purchased for cash the property, trade-marks, business, and good will of the respondent, the J. G. Butler Tobacco Company, a corporation under the laws of Missouri, and doing business in St. Louis, and since the said sale and purchase the said J. G. Butler Tobacco Company has ceased to exist as a corporate entity under its charter. In September, 1898, the American Tobacco Company made a like purchase for cash of the property, trade-marks, business, and good will of the respondent, the Drummond Tobacco Company, a corporation under the laws of Missouri, and doing business at the city of St. Louis, and the latter likewise ceased to do business as a separate entity under its charter. (State v. Continental Tobacco Company, 75 Southwestern Reporter, p. 742.)

In the manufacture of chewing tobacco, licorice paste is an essential ingredient; it is utterly impossible to conduct this business without this substance, which is a component part of all plug tobacco. This licorice paste is protected by a tariff duty of 6 cents a pound. Before the advent of the trust this paste sold for not to exceed 5 cents per pound. It will be seen that the duty was practically prohibitive.

This combine seeing in the control of the manufacture and sale of this substance an additional weapon for the annihilation of all future competition, proceeded to secure absolute control of all the makers and handlers of licorice in the United States; in this they have succeeded, and to-day the independent manufacturer of tobacco must apply on bended knee to this octopus for every pound of this substance, which is doled out to him upon hard conditions and at ruinous prices. Since this business has passed into the hands of the tobacco trust the price of licorice paste in the United States has increased 100 per cent.

The Federal authorities succeeded in getting an unpenitentiaried thief by the name of Hale on the stand, in an investigation of trust methods conducted in New York last October, when he refused to answer questions which would have established this unlawful combination. His reason for this refusal was that he might degrade and incriminate himself.

The trust immediately secured the services of the most distinguished counsel in America—the Hon. Elihu Root, De Lancy Nicoll, and Junius Parker—and while these illustrious legal lights were solemnly protesting against the "outrage" of forcing this sweet-scented geranium to say anything which might peradventure leave a stain upon the spotless escutcheon of his honor the scoundrel actually stole thousands of dollars from his protectors and champions. That excellent journal Tobacco, in its issue of October 5, 1905, tells the story better than I can:

TRUST MAN TAKEN TO TOMBS—OFFICER FOUND IN CONTEMPT OF COURT FOR REFUSING TO REVEAL TRUST SECRETS INDICTED FOR LARCENY OF LARGE SUMS FROM THE COMBINATION.

Edwin F. Hale, the trusted secretary and treasurer of the McAndrews & Forbes Co., one of the subsidiary branches of the tobacco trust, who was last May found to be in contempt of court for refusing to answer questions put by the Federal grand jury at that time engaged in probing into the affairs of the trust, has been indicted for grand larceny on complaint of Karl Jungbluth, president of the McAndrews & Forbes Co.

Harry Smock, the auditor of the McAndrews & Forbes Co., was jointly indicted with Hale, and both were arrested and taken to the Tombs prison last Thursday afternoon. President Jungbluth said that both Hale and Smock, who had been implicitly trusted, had authority to sign checks jointly for meeting the obligations of the firm, and had also had free access to the contingent fund of the company, which seems to have been of a size to meet unusual exigencies.

It was announced that the prisoners would be taken before Judge Cowing in general sessions court to plead to the indictment on Friday. This was done, and it is now reported that the matter may be settled out of court. The amount it is alleged they had misappropriated was said to reach thousands of dollars.

Secretary Hale, it will be recalled, was summoned before the Federal grand jury last May, and among the questions asked him were the following:

Are you employed by the American Tobacco Company?

Who is the president of the McAndrews & Forbes Co.?

Where is the office of the company?

Is there is any agreement, or understanding, or arrangement between the American Tobacco Company and the McAndrews & Forbes Co. in relation to the trade or business in licorice affecting the business between the several States of the United States?

These questions, which Hale refused to answer on the ground that it might tend to degrade and incriminate him, were considered important, by reason of a report which had gained currency that the tobacco trust had secured a corner on the licorice output of the world, and that independent manufacturers of cigars and tobacco could obtain no licorice or licorice paste unless they bought it through the tobacco trust or some of its subsidiary companies.

The trust brought its heaviest legal batteries to bear to save Hale from imprisonment for contempt, including their regular counsel, Junius Parker, as well as Elihu Root and De Lancy Nicoll, who were specially retained for this case. Hale was assessed a nominal fine and technically committed to the custody of the United States marshal, Henkel, until a writ of habeas corpus could be sued out by the trust counsel; and when he was taken before Judge Wallace, at Albany, and admitted to bail in the sum of $1,000, briefs were submitted and the case taken under advisement.

It is said that since these proceedings Hale has been seen frequently at the race tracks and pool rooms, and during the summer Hale and Auditor Smock visited Saratoga, where they not only frequented the race track, but were more or less conspicuous figures in Canfield's and other big gambling houses. President Jungbluth has been quoted by the daily newspapers as saying that Hale and Smock had confessed to him that they had lost considerable money in gambling. He was further quoted as saying that they had drawn freely upon the contingent fund of the company, and when questioned as to one item of $1,100 which had disappeared, they had replied unhesitatingly that they had drawn the money and "used it for the good of the firm."

It is intimated that they were led to make this free use of the company's funds because Hale relied upon his possession of trust secrets to render him immune from prosecution.

I am sorry I have not that Christian spirit which should prompt me to sympathize with the trust in its loss of many thousands at the hands of this beautiful blackmailer, this highly sensitive thief. There is a kind of retributive justice in the ingratitude of this pitiful creature, schooled by his makers in the art of perjury and fraud. In the language of Queen Marguerite, I could almost exclaim:

> Most righteous, just, and all avenging God!
> How I do thank Thee, that this carnal cur
> Preys upon the issue of his mother's body,
> And makes her poor fellow with others mourn.

If further proof of this lawless combination were necessary, here it is: Here is a copy of the "death warrant," which J. S. Young & Co., of Baltimore, independent tobacco manufacturers, were forced to sign by another "stool pigeon" of the trust before they could secure a pound of licorice paste, so necessary to their business. No man would voluntarily submit to such hard and humilating conditions. This modern Shylock stands to-day at the door of every licorice plant in this union, and in defiance of law and decency enforces his hard conditions. "It is so stipulated in the bond," and you sign or close your doors.

I offer to this House an authentic copy of the iniquitous instrument:

BALTIMORE, MD.

GENTLEMEN: We make you the following proposition for furnishing you licorice paste for your use in the business of manufacturing tobacco:

We are to furnish you, and you are to buy from us during the year beginning August 24, 1904, not less than 180 cases of about 250 pounds each, and we are to furnish you as many more cases as you will need for your actual current manufacturing requirements during the term of said year, not to exceed in the aggregate 360 cases, the same to be of the quality of that heretofore sold you by us at the price of 9¾ cents per pound f. o. b. Baltimore, Md., sixty days net, or cash in ten days less a discount of 1 per cent. The number of cases of licorice paste above mentioned shall all be called for and delivered within the period called for by this contract, and shall be ordered by you in quantities not less that the rate of 15 cases per month, and not exceeding the rate of 30 cases per month, from said August 24, 1904, to August 24, 1905. It is also understood that the price heretofore mentioned shall be subject to an equitable advance if there should be any impost duty imposed on licorice root.

In consideration of our furnishing you with licorice paste as hereinbefore provided, we are to have the option to supply you during the year that begins August 24, 1905, licorice paste under the same maximum and minimum as is provided for the first year of this arrangement, and with all conditions the same, we are to notify you promptly on your written demand made at any time within thirty days after July 1, 1905, whether we elect to furnish you this licorice paste under the option retained by us as hereinbefore provided.

In the event of the interruption of operations at the plant of either party by fire, elements, or unavoidable accidents, this contract not to be void, but deliveries thereon to be suspended for such reasonable time as may be required to resume operations.

This contract shall not be deemed a personal one, but it shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon us and our successors and assigns in the ownership of our plant, and you and your successors and assigns in the ownership of your brands of tobacco.

Please denote your acceptance of this proposition below, and the proposition and its acceptance in duplicate, without a more formal paper, shall be taken to constitute the memorandum of contract between us.

Yours, truly,

(Signed) J. S. YOUNG COMPANY,
By H. E. YOUNG, President.

The foregoing proposition is accepted this 24th day of August, 1904.

The trust is not satisfied with the rascals within the organization—God knows it ought to be.

It has its pestiferous vermin buzzing in the lobbies of every State legislature in this Union, ready to bully the weak and to buy the venial, to prevent the passage of just and righteous laws, and to secure by any indirection greater license to prey upon the merchant and plunder the planter.

I do not know whether it is a fellow-feeling or instinct, but this trust has the finest "nose" for a scoundrel of any organization in America.

I have here an article which appears in to-day's Washington Post, which aptly illustrates their peculiar methods of manipulating deliberative bodies. In this case the trust was endeavoring to secure a "price list" of the Indiana legislature:

WABASH, IND., May 26. Arthur L. Hughes, a member of the Wabash bar, to-day made public the fact that he has a large number of letters which are the property of O. A. Baker, who is in hiding to escape an indictment on the charge of attempted bribery in the last legislature in connection with the passage of the anticigarette law. Mr. Hughes agreed to place the letters in the hands of the governor if assured of immunity for Baker. The governor declined this proposition.

Mr. Hughes in discussing these letters to-day said that one letter of the lot was signed by a man named Gibbs, whose office was in New York City, and who, Hughes explained, was connected with the so-called tobacco trust. The contents of this letter referred to the purchase of legislative votes and appraised one member as worth $1,000 and another at $500 and a third at $250.

VALUATION ABOUT RIGHT.

"I know who these men are," said Hughes, "and Gibbs was not far astray in his valuation. I know, too, what members of the legislature were approachable and those who were not, and a lot of them belonged in the first class. Gibbs was succeeded by a man named Cole, who was connected with the so-called tobacco trust, and here is a telegram to Baker in cipher. Translated, it instructs Baker to 'go ahead with the deal' whereby certain votes were to be obtained against the cigarette bill.

"Baker was in communication with the insurance companies during the session of the legislature. He was not employed by the tobacco trust alone, and the work done for the insurance organizations was quite as nefarious as that of the tobacco trust. Baker has the documents to show that to be the truth."

And now, Mr. Speaker, I come to "the most unkindest cut of all;" to the most cruel, the most inexcusable and dastardly stab which this incorporate assassin has ever driven into the back of commerce, or the tired heart of unrequited toil. It will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that twice within the last three years the Committee on Ways and Means, without a dissenting voice, have favorably reported a bill to this House repealing the tax of 6 cents a pound upon tobacco in the natural leaf, and twice has this House unanimously passed that bill. In three years no one of the 386 Members of this body has ever raised his voice except in hearty approval of this most righteous, just, and long-delayed relief, demanded by more than 3,000,000 men, women, and children, oppressed both by the greed of this combine and by unjust, unwise, and indefensible taxation on the part of the Federal Government.

There is not within the sound of my voice, not upon the muster roll of this body at this hour, a single Representative in the Federal Congress who does not favor the repeal of this tax and the passage of this bill, and yet, Mr. Speaker, that bill has twice been doomed to an ignominious death. It has twice been strangled in silence and in the dark. No measure has ever been passed by this House, or offered to its consideration, more necessary or more just. From the hour I entered this body until now I have given to it my most earnest effort and followed it with most ardent hope, until that hope, long delayed, made the heart sick; and now I charge—and I make no accusation without the proof—I charge that this measure has been throttled by a criminal conspiracy that is worse than theft; it is treason. I charge that the foul, false, traitorous emissaries of Rockefeller and of Duke have stood in the corridors of this Capitol waiting for this bill, freighted with the hopes and the prayers of my people, to start on its way to the Senate, and they have clutched it in their cruel hands, reeking with crime, and have strangled it to death.

I charge that the very men who appeared, acting and speaking a falsehood, who claimed to the Committee on Finance, to whom this bill was referred, that they represented independent dealers and appeared actuated by no other motive than the common good, were at that very hour the effigies and the hirelings of the trust. I charge that this incorporate marauder, this daring, law-defying, home-destroying bandit, the American Tobacco Company, masked its Madusa head and spoke in the name and of the weal of the very interests and the very victims it has marked for destruction. I charge that there is not to-day an independent dealer in the United States free from the clanking shackles of this commercial pirate who does not earnestly pray for the passage of that bill.

I have traveled all over Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia; I have met time and again with the representatives of tobacco growers all over this Union, and I am here to declare that there is not a tobacco planter from Connecticut to Florida who is not directly interested in the passage of that bill and who does not give to it his hearty and unqualified assent, and I am here to declare that this monopoly to-day sits sinister and serene with the hellish delight of a triumphant fiend, defying the law, blind, deaf, and callous to public sentiment and to the ruin and misery of 3,000,000 people; and, more than that, it resists, perverts, and annuls the expressed will of the representatives of 80,000,000 of people in this Congress assembled.

I charge that this bill when it had passed the House of Representatives without a dissenting voice had hardly found its place in its duly appointed pigeonhole in the Committee on Finance before it was eloctrocuted by a telegram sent from 111 Fifth avenue, New York—the den of the robber, the home of the trust.

The SPEAKER. The Chair merely desires to admonish the gentleman that under the rules it is hardly proper to discuss anything that has happened in the Senate or even pending in the Senate.

Mr. STANLEY. I am not reflecting upon the Senate at all. I am merely stating the fact that the American Tobacco Company sent this telegram. I am not claiming that the Senate knew this duplicity was practiced on them. I can lay my hand on that telegram. It went to the chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What did they tell him to do?

Mr. STANLEY. They told him to fight that bill, and I have the sworn statement of the man who went before the committee that he was told by the American Tobacco Company to do so as an independent. I wish to file here as a part of this record that statement.

Mr. JAMES. Did the chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate treat this telegram as confidential, coming to him from a trust representative to suppress legislation in favor of the people?

Mr. STANLEY. I have never heard that he has ever mentioned this communication. I got this information from the other end of the line. I have got a copy of it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The telegram was sent, I want to say.

Mr. STANLEY. Yes, it was sent. It was sent by a member of the firm of Martin & Co. It was sent from 111 Fifth avenue, New York, and the man who was forced to do it has the manhood to say that he did not then and does not now believe in the truth of that message. He was bound by a cruel, remorseless master, and forced to this miserable attempt to deceive the Senate and betray his countrymen.

I am ready to give his name to outraged justice when it shall demand it; and more, the man is yet alive to confront and confound the oppressors of my people.

Here is the statement:

Q. What has been and where have been your headquarters; what is or has been your business? How long were you engaged in that business?—A. I was engaged in the tobacco business in Louisville, Ky., for about six years; my father was engaged in same before that at Greenville, Ky.

Q. If disengaged in that business, why, when, and how did it occur?—A. I have been out of the business since January, 1905; was out fourteen months prior to that time. Two-thirds of the stock of the company in which I was interested, H. N. Martin & Co., was controlled by the Continental Tobacco Company, and owing to their manipulations, etc., of the business it was necessary to make changes, buy back the interest, and finally to sell out the business to other parties, to save it from total wreck. It was finally sold to the Blue Grass Tobacco Company, at Lexington, Ky., on or about April 15.

Q. Did you incur any loss? If so, how and why?—A. We incurred great loss, because under the management of the Continental Tobacco Company the assets shrunk to such proportions as to make the capital stock worthless, and we were bound to sell the plant for a certain amount of money to pay off the indebtedness.

Q. Was this the purpose of the Continental Tobacco Company—that is, to crush you out?—A. Apparently it was.

Q. Do you understand how they manipulate such business?—A. It is cheaper for them to come in and buy, as they did in this case, controlling interest in the stock and crush out the plant than it is to go and buy it outright at first. It would have cost them about five to one if they had bought us out, but instead they purchased two-thirds controlling interest and so manipulated it as to destroy the value of the plant, and we bought it back and sold it out to the Blue Grass Company.

Q. While you were in existence—that is, while the Continental concern owned two-thirds of the stock—were you not known to the outer world as an independent tobacco manufacturing concern?—A. Yes, sir; strictly so, using the union label of the International Tobacco Workers' Union.

Q. Was this done with the consent of the Continental Tobacco Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it the policy and plan of the Continental Tobacco Company to establish these psuedo independent companies around through the country, for what they term legitimate competition, but as a matter of fact, it is not competition, is it, but a mere blind?—A. It is not competition, and it is their purpose and plan to establish such companies, or to buy up the controlling stock of already existing companies that have the trade, and merely as a blind, so far as competition is concerned.

Q. They then get control of an existing independent concern, and turn it into a pseudo independent concern, for the purpose of wiping out real competition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other instances of this being done?—A. I don't know of my certain knowledge of such cases, but is generally supposed and is almost a fact that they own a controlling interest in almost every factory in existence.

Q. That is to say, they own these pseudo independent factories; they establish and run them throughout the country?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you at any time taken any position against the repeal of six cents tax on tobacco that was under discussion in the last Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell all that you did, if you will, and how it was done, and by whom.—A. I was instructed to send a telegram to Senator Aldrich, over the signature of H. N. Martin & Co., protesting against the repeal of the 6-cent tax. My instructions came from C. C. Dula, who was then the vice-president of the Continental Tobacco Company.

Q. Where did the instructions come from, what city, and what was the substance?—A. From New York City, and the substance was that the repeal of the law would be unjust, etc.

Q. Did it come from any particular house, do you remember?—A. From 111 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Q. What is that number?—A. It is the number of the headquarters of the American Tobacco Company.

Q. The Continental Company was then and is a member of the American tobacco trust, of which Mr. Dula is an officer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear of other firms being thus instructed in sending these telegrams?—A. I have heard of none having been instructed along that line, but I am under the impression that Noll & Williams Tobacco Co., and perhaps the Monarch Tobacco Company, of Louisville, sent telegrams protesting against the passage of the bill.

Q. To whom did you send the telegrams?—A. I sent telegrams to Senator Aldrich.

Q. Would you have sent these telegrams if you had not been so instructed?—A. No, sir; I would not.

Q. Were these other two firms that you think sent these telegrams psuedo independent concerns?—A. I could not say about that.

Q. What objection did you then have, or now have, to the repeal of the tax? It produces no revenue.—A. I had no objection whatsoever to the repeal of the law.

Q. Did the other member of the firm of Martin & Co. have any objection?—A. No, sir.

Q. You sent it because you were directed to do so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You obeyed orders from 111 Fifth avenue, New York?—A. Promptly.

Q. Have you heard of other tobacco people receiving these instructions?—A. I have never heard of them, because such information is seriously guarded by each concern, and secretly kept, one from the other.

Q. Are you now in the tobacco business?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are entirely disconnected?—A. Entirely so.

Q. Are you in any business at this moment?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you one of the victims of this tobacco trust crushing?—A. I am.

Q. When did you receive these instructions from 111 Fifth avenue, New York?—A. I can not specify the date, but I think it was in the spring of 1904.

Q. What became of all of your papers?—A. All of my papers are now in the hands of the Department of Labor and Commerce.

Q. Including this telegram?—A. Yes, sir.

I have spoken, Mr. Speaker, of the manufacturer driven from his factory—the despoiled factor—and the small dealer forced to slavery or want.

There is yet a sadder scene—victims more numerous and more helpless than all the rest. They have followed this plant into the very earth.

In Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia this plant has for years been carefully nurtured by humble, but hardy, happy sons of toil. Under free and unfettered competition, an acre of ground planted to tobacco would produce from $75 to $200. One man could by hard labor cultivate 3 acres. Not a great return for a year of toil, but they were content.

> Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
> Their sober wishes never learned to stray;
> Along the cool sequestered vale of life
> They kept the even tenor of their way.

It is true this humble soul was the tenant of a cottage or a cabin, but he was happy and respected and content—can Rockefeller or Duke say as much? He had the bare comforts of life; he sat in the eventide and listened to the prattle of his babes, and gave from his brave heart sincere thanks to his God for the love of wife, and child, and friend. Yes, it was only a poor, unknown laborer seated at sunset in the door of his cabin; but how much bigger and better than all the mansions of Mammon is a cabin on the hillside hallowed by self-abnegating love and unsullied honor.

It was upon the backs of each of these poorly paid, contented, and laborious tillers of the soil that this hungry combine laid its heavy hand, and from their sweat and sorrow has in fifteen years wrung a colossal fortune that beggars all the wealth of princes and of kings.

In 1903 the trust priced and took this product with as little regard for justice or mercy as a Moroccan brigand.

Tobacco which had sold for from 6 to 8 cents brought barely 3—the tenant received less than 20 cents a day for his labor.

And then it was, Mr. Speaker, that I saw all over my fertile State a scene sad enough to "make the angels weep." I saw woman—woman in the South—made a beast of burden in the field, driven there not by the tyranny of him who had promised to love, honor, and protect her, not by her own choice, but by abject want. There was not in 1903 in all the world, not in the jungles of India nor on Siberia's frozen plains, in no pest-haunted, penury-cursed hole in the Orient, no Chinese cooley or San Domingo negro, in that fever-infested gehenna of disease and death yonder in Panama, not on God's footstool anywhere, was there a living slave to penury or power so wretched or so poor as the Kentuckian on his native heath. Still blessed by fertile soil, the sunshine, and the dew, but robbed of nature's abundance and God's goodness by the merciless machinations of this trust.

Other States, sir, may boast of the majesty of mountain and plain, of the energy and wealth in factory, mine, and mill, but my people still shall cherish, as the dearest object of their love and pride, that "old Kentucky home." No marble walls or Corinthian columns, no costly tapestries or curtains of damask make it great. It is hospitality's holiest altar. It is love's purest shrine. Not his direst enemy has ever dared to charge that the son of the South has failed in gallant devotion, loving service, and deepest reverence for the honor and the helplessness of woman. The Kentuckian permits not the winds of summer to visit too roughly the face of her whose love has blessed and sanctified his whole existence. She commands, without asking it, his labor, his idolatrous devotion, and, if need be, his life.

And yet, in that fair Southland—I blush to confess it—I have seen a frail girl, God's ministering angel, at the holiest altar ever raised to His worship, a hearthstone, torn from the home where love had crowned her. I have seen her disentwine from about her white neck the ivory arms of her babes, seen her clad in rags, and before the aurora had gilded the dawn I have seen her like a beast of burden bowed in the dirt and dust and toil of the field.

And she was driven there by the wolverine teeth of want. She was there amidst the humiliation and tears of the man she loved, that she might with her frail and tender hands tear the skeleton clutch of famine from the throat of her child.

I charge she was driven there, not by the lash of a tyrant, not by lack of gallantry or love, but by the insatiate lust for gold—the remorseless, pitiless, accursed greed of this combine.

And when my wretched people have petitioned this House for relief these despicable conspirators have still pursued and betrayed them first by larceny, then by a lie.

I rejoice that Justice at last is ready to unsheath her tardy sword; that God's wrath no longer slumbers.

I demand, sir, that the law as it is written be rigidly, quickly, and mercilessly enforced by fine and by imprisonment; that these haughty bandits be brought to the bar of justice; that they be clad in the loathsome garb of guilt, and, if possible, confined in "a felon's cell—the fittest earthly type of hell." I declare that an ordinary convict should feel like an honest man when compared with the conduct of the American Tobacco Company in the last five years. [Loud applause.]

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his motion to discharge the committee?

Mr. STANLEY. I withdraw the motion to discharge the committee.

MASONIC MUTUAL RELIEF ASSOCIATION, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the bill which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up the following bill in order on District day, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 5561) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia,'" approved February 5, 1901.

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso at the end of section 5 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate the Masonic Mutual Relief Association of the District of Columbia,'" approved February 5, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it will read as follows: "Provided, however, That no certificate of membership shall be issued by said corporation for an amount exceeding $5,000."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, upon last District day we were in the throes of discussion on the broad-tire matter. I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin how it happens that we do not go on with that and finish it?

Mr. BABCOCK. That is on the Calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not only on the Calendar, but when the House adjourned we were then considering it.

Mr. BABCOCK. There were some other matters which were of some importance—matters which would not provoke discussion—which we preferred to take up——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. BABCOCK. But if the gentleman desires to take that bill up——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Having been engaged in the discussion of that bill at the time we adjourned on last District day, does it not come up on this District day as unfinished business?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask whether the bill was reported to the House or was in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BABCOCK. It was reported to the House.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill was pending in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BABCOCK. It was reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The SPEAKER. Was the previous question ordered?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the previous question was not ordered, I think, but I am not certain of that, however.

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe the previous question was ordered. The gentleman, I think, himself discussed that motion on the floor as to whether the previous question had been ordered or not.

The SPEAKER. Was the previous question ordered?

Mr. BABCOCK. I am not sure about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not; I think we were discussing it.

The SPEAKER. On page 697 of the Manual is this memorandum: "Unfinished business on a day assigned to it goes over to the next day had by the committee." Now, the Chair is inclined to the opinion that unless the House desires to take up other matters that this would be the first matter. The Chair does not find any precedents. The Clerk informs the Chair, so far as he knows, there are no precedents, but the general theory as to unfinished business is that when it goes over from one day to another that it is the first matter that would be presented for consideration. Of course Congress might consider something else.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but the regular order is unfinished business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to the opinion that, in the absence of action by the House——

Mr. PAYNE. Is that unfinished business unless the previous question is ordered? I do not know whether it appears on the Calendar as unfinished business or not.

The SPEAKER. It occurs to the Chair that the Committee on the District of Columbia has two certain days, Mondays, in the month. It also occurs to the Chair that, in the orderly transaction of business, the bill which had been considered in the Committee of the Whole House would have precedence.

However, the Clerk calls my attention to a ruling upon this subject in the Manual, as follows:

Business unfinished on a District of Columbia day does not come up on the next District day unless called up.

And further, on page 759 of Parliamentary Precedents, is the following:

The Speaker held that, pursuant to Rule XXVI, it was in order for the committee to present such business as they desired, and that the unfinished business did not recur unless presented by the committee.

That was the decision of Mr. Speaker Crisp. In light of this precedent the Chair would hold, while the Chair would have been inclined to hold that the question was open, according to the contention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], as the Chair finds the precedent, and in the absence of further authority, the Chair will follow the ruling of Mr. Speaker Crisp and hold that it rests with the committee to call at this stage the bill referred to by the gentleman from Mississippi, and it is left to the Committee on the District of Columbia to call up such business as it sees proper. It rests not upon general parliamentary usage, but upon the special rule that gives certain Mondays in each month to the committee, as follows:

The second and fourth Mondays of each month are set apart for business presented by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see that under the language of the rule the ruling of Speaker Crisp must be correct.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, there was a good deal of confusion in the Hall at the time the bill was called up, and therefore I would like to have it read again by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BABCOCK]——

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] who reported the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee precisely what change this amendment to the proviso of existing law makes?

Mr. SIMS. It increases the amount they may insure for. They issue certificates of insurance now to $2,000, and this increases it to $5,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Certificates of insurance?

Mr. SIMS. From two to five thousand dollars. If the gentleman desires, I will read the letter explaining the matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think that is unnecessary.

Mr. SIMS. That is all there is in it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 102, noes 3.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am afraid there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes the point that no quorum is present. The Sergeant-at-Arms will close the doors and bring in absentees. The Clerk will call the roll, and as many as favor the passage of the bill will, when their names are called, answer "aye;" as many as are opposed will answer "no," and those present will answer "present."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 229, nays 3, answered "present" 17, not voting 132, as follows:

KILLING OF WILD BIRDS AND OTHER ANIMALS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask consideration of the following bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13193) to prohibit the killing of wild birds and other wild animals in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall at any time or at any place in the District of Columbia kill, or attempt to kill, any game bird or any other wild bird whatever, except the English sparrow, under a penalty of $5 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not more than six months, or both, for each bird killed or for each attempt as aforesaid: Provided, That birds or eggs may be collected for strictly scientific purposes under written permits issued by the superintendent of police of the District of Columbia, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may prescribe, said permits not to exceed twenty-five at any one time, to be in force until the close of the calendar year in which issued, and shall be nontransferable.

SEC. 2. That no person shall at any time or at any place in the District of Columbia trap, catch, kill, injure, pursue, or attempt to trap, catch, kill, injure, or pursue any squirrel or any chipmunk, or shall shoot or hunt with a gun any rabbit or other wild animal without a special written permit so to do from such officer as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, by regulation or order, from time to time charge with that duty, under a penalty of $5 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not more than six months, or both, for each squirrel or chipmunk trapped, caught, killed, injured, or pursued, or for each rabbit or other animal killed as aforesaid: Provided, That any wild animal may be killed when suffering from injury or disease.

SEC. 3. That no person in the District of Columbia shall kill any English sparrow or any wild animal suffering from injury or disease, by means of any gun, air gun, rifle, air rifle, parlor rifle, pistol, revolver, or other firearm, without a special written permit so to do from such official as the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may, by regulation or order, from time to time charge with that duty, under a penalty of $5 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not more than six months, or both, for each sparrow or animal so killed.

SEC. 4. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to make and enforce all such usual and reasonable police regulations, in addition to those already made under the act of January 26, 1887, and the joint resolution approved February 26, 1892, as they may deem necessary for the regulation of firearms, projectiles, explosives, or weapons of any kind in the District of Columbia.

SEC. 5. That no person in the District of Columbia shall at any time hunt, pursue, or needlessly disturb any wild duck, goose, or other waterfowl, on any of the waters of the District of Columbia, with any boat propelled by any means other than oars, under a penalty of $10 or imprisonment in the workhouse for not more than six months, or both, for each offense.

SEC. 6. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to prohibit hunting in the District of Columbia, in the interests of public safety and bird protection and to make the suburbs of Washington practically a refuge for native birds and mammals. Population is increasing so fast and the outlying sections of the city are being built up so rapidly that it is no longer safe to permit indiscriminate hunting, and, in fact, no longer possible to hunt without constantly trespassing on private property. The wild life that still remains should be carefully preserved in order to increase one of the most attractive features of the park system of the national capital. The measure is so drawn as to make ample provision for the destruction of injurious species and to safeguard the interests of persons whose gardens or poultry might suffer from the depredations of rabbits or birds of prey. The only objection which can be urged against it—namely, that it deprives residents of the privilege of hunting—disappears upon careful consideration of existing conditions.

The only game of any importance in the District of Columbia consists of quail or partridges, rail or ortolan, reedbirds, red-winged or marsh blackbirds, a few ducks and snipe, and squirrels and rabbits. Quail are scarce, and through the efforts of the Game and Fish Protective Association and the Audubon Society the few coveys which now remain are regularly fed during severe weather in winter. Under such conditions the prohibition of shooting affords no real hardship. Ducks and snipe are also scarce, and the few birds which occasionally wander into the District are constantly pursued and harassed until they are either killed or driven elsewhere. Section 5 of the bill, prohibiting the pursuit of waterfowl with certain kinds of boats, has been incorporated in the bill for the special purpose of correcting an evil which is largely responsible for the scarcity of ducks on local waters.

Most of the hunting in the District is confined to the marshes of the Eastern Branch, where, on the opening day of the season—September 1—hunters turn out in such numbers to shoot rail, reedbirds, and blackbirds that in the limited area it is almost impossible for them to keep out of range of one another. Accidents occur every year, and the number is certain to increase in the future. So thoroughly are the marshes shot over that in four or five days the birds are either killed or driven away, and during the remainder of the season the shooting amounts to practically nothing. The privilege of shooting on the Eastern Branch has already been practically withdrawn by an amendment to section 5 of Article IX of the Police Regulations, which took effect early in the present year, prohibiting shooting within 500 yards of the Potomac River, the Eastern Branch, Rock Creek, public roads and highways, buildings, parks, and reservations, etc. The present bill, therefore, does not prevent the enjoyment of any existing privilege, but simply strengthens this regulation and makes it applicable to the entire District.

Mr. Speaker, it is a common practice when certain kinds of game become scarce to prohibit shooting for a term of years or indefinitely. In the case of quail, five States—Maine, Michigan, Montana, Wisconsin, and Wyoming—now prohibit killing throughout the year. Five other States where the birds are locally scarce also prohibit killing in certain counties, and in the case of Kansas this prohibition extends to 19 counties, or nearly 20 per cent of the State. California, Kansas, and Nebraska likewise protect certain kinds of squirrels throughout the year. Legislation of this kind has recently been enacted in Virginia and Maryland for two of the counties adjoining the District. In 1904 the board of supervisors of Alexandria County, Va., extended protection to squirrels for six years, and at the last session of the legislature of Maryland an act was passed prohibiting the hunting of quail for two years in Montgomery County, which adjoins the north border of the District.

In Florida, by a special act of legislature, all hunting within one mile of the corporation limits of the town of West Palm Beach is absolutely prohibited, and somewhat similar regulations are in effect at St. Augustine and Tampa. In Massachusetts shooting is prohibited within the city limits of Boston and other cities in the State. Similar regulations are in effect at Providence (R. I.), Philadelphia, and New York. In the case of Philadelphia the city limits are coextensive with the county of Philadelphia, an area of about 130 square miles, or nearly twice that of the District of Columbia. In the case of New York section 721 of the Revised Ordinances of New York City provides substantially as follows:

No person shall fire or discharge any gun, pistol, fowling piece, or other firearms in the city of New York, under the penalty of $10 for each offense.

This restriction on hunting extends to Greater New York with the exception of a number of parks mentioned by name, an area of about 320 square miles, or more than four times that comprised in the District. In the West hunting is prohibited in the national parks and, except under permit, on some of the forest reserves. The area thus protected in the Yellowstone National Park comprises more than 3,000 square miles, or more than three times the area of the State of Rhode Island and nearly fifty times that of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, the District of Columbia is unusually fortunate in the variety of its bird life. Of the 1,200 or more species of birds which occur in the United States and Canada, 291 have thus far been found in the District. In other words, nearly one-fourth of all the birds which occur on the North American continent north of Mexico have been found within a radius of a few miles of the national capital. At least twenty-six species are known to breed within the limits of the city proper, and during the height of migration in the spring many different kinds may be found in the parks and about the suburbs, more than eighty species of native birds having been seen by one observer in a single day. The importance of protecting and, so far as possible, increasing this wealth of bird life is self-evident. It is one of the most attractive features of our parks, but, unlike the trees and flowers, if once destroyed it can not be replaced. It can only be preserved through adequate protection, and in proportion to its cost will afford one of the largest returns of any of the features which are under consideration for the improvement of the national capital. As our residents become better acquainted with the birds they become more insistent for their preservation, and the number of persons who now are interested in preserving or studying the habits of birds is probably greater than the number of those who hunt.

A striking illustration of the results of prohibiting shooting is afforded in the case of West Palm Beach, Fla., already mentioned, where a similar law was passed five years ago. During the winter wild ducks are very abundant, and within the protected zone about the town have become so tame that they come close about the boats and wharves and will almost feed from the hand.

The experiment already made of liberating gray squirrels in the grounds of the Capitol, the Smithsonian Institution, and the Department of Agriculture shows how much public interest is aroused in work of this kind. The National Zoological Park, the Game and Fish Protective Association, and private citizens are actively interested in increasing the number of gray squirrels, and are desirous of introducing and liberating waterfowl, pheasants, and other attractive birds in some of the parks. Under present conditions it is useless to attempt the introduction or increase of birds or game, as without some legislation of the kind contemplated in this bill they are certain to be trapped or shot as soon as the season opens.

THE PROPOSED LEGISLATION GENERALLY FAVORED.

The proposed legislation is favored by the President of the United States, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the Audubon societies of the District of Columbia and of various States, and by a large number of citizens of the District of Columbia. Only one letter in opposition has been received by the committee, and the arguments advanced in that communication were of a general rather than a specific nature. A just criticism of the measure as originally introduced, which asserted that the bill would not allow the killing of predatory birds, has been recognized by the committee, and an amendment is now proposed which allows the shooting or killing of crows, Cooper hawks, sharp-shinned hawks, and great horned owls, when found destroying crops or poultry on various premises.

The committee also deemed it wise to reduce the penalty originally proposed from six months to thirty days. The committee are of the opinion that the enactment of this proposed legislation will result in no real hardship to any citizen of the District of Columbia, while the advantage to be gained in the freedom from accident from indiscriminate discharge of firearms within the territory of the District of Columbia will safeguard human life and property to a large degree, which is now impossible. Instances could be given where prowlers after the few game birds which are to be found within the District of Columbia have inflicted serious injuries upon persons and valuable animals, in which instances redress could not be obtained because of the irresponsible character of those who used the firearms.

For the reasons stated I hope the bill will pass.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, the title was amended by striking out the word "other."

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the consideration of bills on the Calendar reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. BABCOCK, Mr. WILLIAMS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 199, nays 6, answered "present" 12, not voting 164, as follows:

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1243) providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every parent, guardian, or other person in the District of Columbia having charge and control of a child between the ages of 8 and 14 years shall cause such child to be regularly instructed in the elementary branches of knowledge, including reading, writing, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic, and pursuant to this end every such parent, guardian, or other person aforesaid shall cause any child under his charge and control to attend some public, private, or parochial school during the period of each year the public schools in the District are in session, on the customary days and during the customary hours of the school term, or shall provide such child with equivalent daily instruction at home or elsewhere. No child shall be credited with attendance upon a private or parochial school unless the attendance officer hereinafter provided for receives a certificate of attendance signed by the person in charge of such school. A child between the ages aforesaid may be excused from school attendance or instruction upon presentation of satisfactory evidence that he has already been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools, or that he has already acquired these branches of learning, or that his physical or mental condition is such as to render such attendance or instruction for the whole period required, or any part thereof, inexpedient or impracticable.

SEC. 2. That if any person having under his control a child, as described in section 1, shall neglect for three consecutive day sessions or six consecutive half-day sessions, within any period of five months to cause such child to attend school, a written notice shall be sent to him by an attendance officer, hereinafter provided for, informing him that the attendance of the child under his control is required at school within a period of three days. If such child is not excused as provided for in section 1, and is not in school within three days, prosecution shall be begun in the police court by the attendance officer against the parent or other person in control of the child, and upon conviction the parent or other person in control of the child shall be punished for each and every offense by a fine of not more than $50 or by imprisonment not to exceed sixty days.

SEC. 3. That any child between the ages of 8 and 14 who is an habitual truant, who is willfully and habitually absent from school, or who is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral while in attendance upon school shall be committed to a special or ungraded school for instruction. The board of education may set apart school buildings or special rooms in a school building for the establishment of ungraded schools to provide, under a qualified teacher, for the instruction of habitual truants or for pupils who may be incorrigible, vicious, or immoral in conduct while in attendance upon school, and such children may be restricted to such schools for instruction until satisfactory evidence of improvement is presented by the teacher in charge for his restoration to a graded school in the district in which he resides.

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of securing a strict compliance with every provision of this act the board of education of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to appoint a number of persons, not to exceed seven, who shall be designated as attendance officers, and who shall each receive a salary for such services of $600 per annum, and whose duties in the premises shall be prescribed by the said board.

SEC. 5. That no child in the District of Columbia under the age of 14 shall be employed by any person or persons to labor in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, or in any business whatsoever that will prevent such child from attending school during the days and hours of the school term, as determined by the board of education, or its equivalent, in private, parochial, or home instruction, as set forth in section 1, and any person who induces or attempts to induce any child to absent himself unlawfully from school, or employs or harbors while school is in session any child absent unlawfully from school, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $50 or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days.

SEC. 6. That attendance officers shall visit any place or establishment where minor children are employed to ascertain whether the provisions of this law are duly complied with, and shall as often as twice a year demand from all employers of such children a list of children employed, with their names and ages.

SEC. 7. That any parent or other person who makes a false statement concerning the age or school attendance of a child between the ages of 8 and 14 who is under his control, such false statement being made with intent to deceive under this act, shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not to exceed $20.

SEC. 8. That if any parent or guardian shall be unable by reason of poverty to send the child under his control to school as provided for in this act it shall be the duty of the board of education to take such action as in its discretion may best promote the purpose of this act in the particular case.

SEC. 9. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1906.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the italics in the bill are Senate amendments?

Mr. MORRELL. The italics in the bill are the amendments made by the House Committee on the District of Columbia. The bill has passed the Senate, and such portions of it as were changed by the House are stricken out and the words in italics inserted.

Mr. WILLIAMS. These are, then, House committee amendments?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I notice that wherever the figure "8" occurs in the bill in connection with the age of the pupil, the age at which compulsory education is to begin, it has been changed by the House committee to "6." Everybody is in favor of compulsory education in the District of Columbia, but I am not in favor, in my own family or in any other, of forcing a child at the tender age of 6 years to the public schools. I do not think the law ought to make it compulsory on parents to send children at that age to school. My idea is that most children of that age ought to be spending their time in growing, playing, and in physical development, and I hope the committee will strike out the word "six," where it occurs in the bill in that connection, and will substitute for it either what the Senate had in the bill, "8," or put the age at 7, which might do very well as a compromise between the two positions.

Mr. Chairman, we are getting to the point now in some communities where we are taking the blessed little tots of five years of age and sending them to the public schools to be nursed, not under the tender care of their mothers, but to be nursed by public officials on a salary, by school-teachers—strangers to them. I think it is absolute cruelty to children to send them to school at the age of 5 years, except in the case of an exceptionally well-developed child, and I would be bitterly opposed to making it compulsory on parents to send children of the age of 6 years to school.

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the reason the subcommittee on education changed the age to 6 was this: At the present time in the schools 20 per cent of those actually in school to-day are under the age of 8, and it was thought by the committee that if we are providing that all children of school age should go to school, we ought to provide for children below the age of 8; that there were probably the same proportion below the age of 8 not at school as there are now of that age in school.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is my point; those at and below the age of 8 ought to be out of school, or below the age of 7 at any rate. The point I am making is that parents shall not be compelled to send children to school at either the age of 5 or 6. If a parent wishes to send to school his child who is only 5 years old, it is all right. Let him do it; but to say by law that the public arm shall reach into my household and make me send my child to school at 6 years of age, when I think it is too tender, physically or intellectually, to be thrown out of the household, is totally a different thing. The argument that there are children in the public schools who are 6 years of age or over 5 does not argue at all for the justice of the proposition that those who are not in the public schools who are at the age of 6 shall be made to go there.

Mr. MORRELL. The testimony of those who came before the committee was to the effect that a large number of children between the ages of 6 and 8 were practically allowed to run wild in the streets and were not taken care of by the parents, and it was for that reason that the committee inserted the word "six" instead of "eight." However, if the gentleman from Mississippi is disposed to prefer the age of 7 to the age of 6, I think the committee will be disposed to accept an amendment of that kind making the age 7.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think 8 years is young enough for the age of compulsory education, although perhaps I might send one of my own children at the age of 7. I will move that wherever the word "six" appears in the bill that it be stricken out and the word "eight" be substituted for it.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would not the same thing be accomplished by voting down the committee amendment, as the bill reads "eight" now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. These are committee amendments since the bill was passed by the Senate?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, Mr. Chairman, we can accomplish the same result by voting down the committee amendment, and I will not offer the amendment. I hope, then, the committee amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRELL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I notice that the House Committee on the District of Columbia recommends the striking out of section 8, which provides that a parent or guardian who shall be unable by reason of poverty to send a child under his control to school some provision shall be made by the board of education, so that he may comply with the law. I would like to be informed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] if there is any law that will authorize the board of school directors or commissioners to meet cases of that kind, where the parent or guardian by reason of poverty is unable to dress and equip the child to attend the public schools. Is there any provision made for it?

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to the gentleman I will say that the reason that that section was stricken out was because there was no such provision, no law of any kind in existence by which the board of education could supply those necessities; but, on the other hand, the Associated Charities of the District are prepared to take up any and all cases of that kind. They so stated at the hearings, and not only were they willing to provide for the child, but also to provide for the parents of the child when through compulsory education or through the child not being allowed to labor under the child-labor law the parents were deprived of sources of revenue.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I believe that the law should not only authorize but require the school commissioners to make provision to meet those cases. There may occasionally be a widow who is so poor that she is unable to supply her child with proper clothing to go to the public schools, and yet she is subject to the penalties provided in this bill if her child does not attend school.

Mr. MORRELL. In view of the offer made by the Associated Charities and also in view of the fact that there was no fund at the disposal of the board of education for any such purpose, the committee thought it was unwise to allow that section to remain in the bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the committee to the following language in the bill in line 3, wherein it recites "that every parent, guardian, or other person in the District of Columbia," etc. It occurs to me that the word "residing" should be inserted there so as to include those who reside in the District of Columbia. As it is now this law applies to those who may be here for only twenty-four hours or for a week.

Mr. MORRELL. If the gentleman considers that that would make the bill more plain, the committee will accept the amendment if he will make it.

Mr. BARTLETT. Does not the gentleman agree with me?

Mr. MORRELL. I agree with the gentleman. I will offer that amendment then that the word "residing" be inserted there before the word "in."

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments will be in order when the bill is read under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. On page 2 of the bill it provides that if the superintendent of schools is made to believe that the child is going to some other school or that the physical or mental condition of the child is such as to render attendance or instruction impracticable he is excused. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks that the opinion of the superintendent of the schools—I do not care a straw who he is—as to the mental or physical condition of the child ought to be substituted for the opinion of the parent of the child?

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, I would say that I think the superintendent of schools, upon evidence furnished to him by the parent, in the shape of either a doctor's certificate or a statement signed by the parent, would have then before him ample evidence upon which to base a judgment in any particular case. The reason for inserting the superintendent of schools was that there had to be some authority named in the bill whose opinion would be final, as far as cases were concerned.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the bill has not yet been read by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. No. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] has the floor.

Mr. MORRELL. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to ask a question?

Mr. SIMS. I desire to make a few remarks on an amendment that I expect to offer, so that when it is offered I would not have to take up the time of the committee in explaining it.

Mr. MORRELL. I think the amendment which the gentleman has in mind has already been proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], in regard to the age limit.

The CHAIRMAN. There have been no amendments as yet offered.

Mr. SIMS. In the committee I opposed the amendment changing from 8 years to 6, and gave notice that I would make this amendment at this time. I only wanted to explain my reasons for that, so that I would not be cut off by the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. SIMS. I want to be recognized in my own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor now. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish him to yield. I thought he was through. I want the floor in my own right.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. As the gentleman has not yielded the floor, I would like to ask him a question myself. It seems from what I gather from the debate that the proposed law is rather stringent and more or less compulsory. Will the gentleman tell the committee whether or not Pennsylvania has any such law or any other State; and if so, what has been the effect of it; how has it operated?

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to the gentleman from Tennessee, there are only thirteen States to-day in the Union that have not a compulsory education law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many?

Mr. MORRELL. Thirteen that have not compulsory education. In fact, to-day by the later reports the only States that have no compulsory education laws are Alabama, Alaska, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and Mississippi. Those are the only States, together with the District of Columbia, that have not compulsory education laws. All the other States have.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I know the State of Tennessee has no such law, or if it has it is very recent.

Mr. MORRELL. Tennessee has a partial compulsory law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Our people do not have to be made to go to school. The children of Tennessee go to school when they get a chance, and we have good schools, too; but what I want to get at——

Mr. MORRELL. I may say to the gentleman from Tennessee that in his State there are three counties which have elected for compulsory education. What the names of those counties are I have forgotten, but in the gentleman's own State, where these matters are controlled by an election by counties, there are three counties in the State of Tennessee that have elected for compulsory education. That is the reason I did not include it among the States that did not have compulsory education.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to inquire of the gentleman how his committee determined it would require seven attendance officers?

Mr. MORRELL. The committee have an amendment which we propose to offer in connection with that section, and to save time I will send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The board of education of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to appoint two truant officers at a salary of $600 per annum each, who, together with the inspectors provided for in the bill to regulate the employment of child labor and the probation officers provided for in the bill establishing a juvenile court, shall, under direction of the board of education, carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it the intention of the committee to offer that amendment?

Mr. MORRELL. That is the intention of the committee, in view of the criticisms which were made by the members of the Appropriations Committee in regard to the officers carried in these bills and the extra appropriation made necessary thereby; and it was the thought of the committee that two attendance officers, together with the officers provided in the juvenile-court bill and the officers provided in the child-labor bill, would be sufficient to carry out the provisions of this bill. Therefore this bill only carries with it an appropriation of twelve hundred dollars per annum.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell the committee why it is that in the District of Columbia, that is not a manufacturing city, that has no cotton fields nor cornfields nor anything or that kind, no conditions to force or to attract children to stay from school, why is it in this city of affluence and ease you have to have this drastic provision of law and men deputized to gather up the children and drag them off to school? Now, why do you have to have such a drastic law as that in this city?

Mr. MORRELL. It is rather difficult to explain why children do not care to go to school, and it is also difficult sometimes to explain why parents will not force children to go to school; but the fact none the less remains that there are some six thousand and over children to-day in the District of Columbia who do not attend school, and with a compulsory-education law the committee was of the opinion that those children could be forced to attend school rather than to be roaming around the streets, and to enforce the law it was necessary to have some officers to carry out the provisions of the law.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do they have similar officers in States where they have compulsory education?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes, sir; they have similar officers where compulsory-education laws exist.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, how does the law operate in this respect; how does it work?

Mr. MORRELL. It works well in every State where it has been tried. I have abundant letters here to that effect from States where it has been an experiment.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I wish you would read one from Tennessee, if you have it.

Mr. MORRELL. I have not one from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is mistaken about Tennessee having a compulsory-education law. The gentleman may think that possibly it would benefit my State, but I want to say, sir, that we do not have to be compelled to do right in Tennessee, or to go to school, or anything of that sort.

Mr. MORRELL. I am quite sure of that, and that Tennessee always does right of itself. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the bill read by sections, and I move that general debate be now closed.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the committee, I want a few minutes in general debate to explain an amendment that I have offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill. As it came from the Senate it provided that it should be applicable only to children after reaching the period of 8 years, but the House committee amended it, over my humble protest, so as to make it 6 instead of 8 years. I notified the committee at the time that I should, in the House, offer an amendment restoring it to 8 years, as it passed the Senate. And I am seriously in earnest in the advocacy of said amendment.

The object of a compulsory-education law in part is to prevent parents from placing their children out for wages and to prevent them from being employed in remunerative effort instead of attending school. Now, a child only 6 years or 7 years old is too young to labor at remunerative employment. There would be no temptation on the part of parents who are mean enough to do such a thing, to hire their children out at the age of 6 and 7 and keep them away from school, from the fact that they are too young to be employed. Now, then, there is a further fact that at the age of 6 or 7 many children are too poorly developed physically and mentally and too weak to be forced to attend school under legal requirements, and you would find hundreds, if not thousands, of parents that would be subjected to the fine and would pay it rather than to have a 6-year-old child torn from parental care and placed under the charge of truant officers. I do not remember, but there may be a few, though very few, States in the Union where the limit is as low as 6 years, but there are not a great many where the limit is as low as 6 years, and there are not a great many where the limit is 7.

But, as was mentioned in an argument a few moments ago, there are few factories here; there are few opportunities where you could employ children at remunerative labor who are so young as 6 and 7 years old. And I think it would be downright cruelty and tyranny to take from the parental control a little 6-year-old or 7-year-old girl and put her into school and fine the parents and imprison them if they did not so part with her. It is true they may be excused upon the report of the superintendent and with his consent, but I am opposed in this free land of ours to make it necessary for any man or woman to say whether my child, 7 years old, shall be dragged off and put to school or not. I have a little girl 7 years old that on account of diminutive development is too small to send to school, and I would pay almost any kind of a fine or submit to almost any kind of imprisonment before she should go, and yet the officer who would have the right to excuse me might differ with me regarding it. And inasmuch as the object and purpose of the bill is largely to prevent the employment of children from 14 years old to such a scale down as they can be employed at remunerative labor, I ask the House to vote with me in restoring the age to 8 years, as it was provided in the bill when it passed the Senate and came to the House.

Now, I know that on District days it is very hard to get the attention of the House. Members usually either think the legislation coming from the committee is so bad that it only needs to be killed or so unimportant as to not require attention. I appeal to you in behalf of the little children 6 or 7 years old in the District of Columbia, as well as their parents, to vote with me when the motion is made to restore the age to 8 years in the bill. I shall not use further time, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I move that further debate cease, and that the bill be now taken up under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will proceed to read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BROOKS of Colorado having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 12987) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed Mr. ELKINS, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. TILLMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That every parent, guardian, or other person in the District of Columbia having charge and control of a child between the ages of 8 and 14 years shall cause such child to be regularly instructed in the elementary branches of knowledge, including reading, writing, English grammar, geography, and arithmetic, and pursuant to this end every such parent, guardian, or other person aforesaid shall cause any child under his charge and control to attend some public, private, or parochial school during the period of each year the public schools in the District are in session, on the customary days and during the customary hours of the school term, or shall provide such child with equivalent daily instruction at home or elsewhere. No child shall be credited with attendance upon a private or parochial school unless the attendance officer hereinafter provided for receives a certificate of attendance signed by the person in charge of such school. A child between the ages aforesaid may be excused from school attendance or instruction upon presentation of satisfactory evidence that he has already been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools, or that he has already acquired these branches of learning, or that his physical or mental condition is such as to render such attendance or instruction for the whole period required, or any part thereof, inexpedient or impracticable.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "eight" and insert "six."

Page 1, line 10, strike out "his" and insert "the;" also insert after the word "control" the words "of such person."

Page 1, lines 14 and 15, strike out the comma after the word "term," in line 14; also strike out all commencing with the word "or," in line 14, down to and including the word "elsewhere," in line 15.

Page 2, line 6, insert after the word "evidence" the words "to the superintendent of schools;" also strike out the word "he" and insert the words "such child is being or;" also strike out the word "already."

Page 2, line 8, strike out he word "he" and insert the words "such child;" also strike out the word "already."

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "his" and insert the word "the;" also insert after the word "condition" the words "of such child."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph has not yet been finished.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a matter of order. I have been informed that the Clerk is not reading the original bill, but is reading the bill with the committee amendments that are proposed to be offered later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has already read the bill and is now reading the first section, with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 10 and 11, strike out the words "for the whole period required, or any part thereof."

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "his."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, on page 1, line 3, I desire to offer an amendment; insert after the word "person" the word "residing;" so that the line shall read:

That every parent, guardian, or other person residing in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be considered as pending. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

Mr. SIMS. There are several committee amendments on the page that I agree to except one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have a separate vote on the amendments.

Mr. SIMS. On line 5, where it strikes out the word "eight" and inserts the word "six," I want to vote on that separately.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want each committee amendment to be voted on separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the word "eight" and insert "six."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Upon that amendment I have already spoken to the House. This amendment I hope will be voted down.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself to that amendment for one moment. I am thoroughly in sympathy with this bill, and I think there is no member of the committee or proponent of the measure more heartily in sympathy with its purpose than I am. I am just as earnest that the committee amendment shall not prevail—that is to say, I hope that the bill may pass just in the shape it left the Senate so far as the limit of age is concerned. I think the committee in their rather pardonable desire to remove the stigma which has hitherto rested upon this city because of the fact that thus far we have had no such legislation, have gone further than prudence and the best educational standards would indicate. Legislation of this sort is the result of the combined effort and experience of educators all over this country, and I think that this committee might well follow that experience. It is a significant fact, therefore that in all the thirty-six States and Territories of this Union that have legislation of this kind there is only one that has the compulsory age as low as that in this bill. That is Wyoming; and even there there is no penalty attaching until you reach the age of 7. I thoroughly believe that if this bill passes with this amendment in this form very much of beneficial results sought to be accomplished by this legislation will be defeated, the whole object will be thwarted, and the measure will be made inoperative, impracticable, and difficult of enforcement. I believe the committee in their report have failed to distinguish between legal or permissive age and compulsory age, when in one place they say that in a great number of States the legal age is 6 years. That is true enough; but it is not at all the legal age in the sense that it is used here as synonymous. It is only the age at which the child may avail himself of the privilege of the public school, and not the time when the child shall attend some school and attend under compulsory provisions.

Now, I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the class of children sought to be helped by this provision are the children of the negligent and unintelligent poor, and this limit is believed to take care of that class; but there is another class just as large and just as much entitled to consideration at the hands of the committee as are these, and that is the large class of children of a very different sort of parents, who attend the public schools and, for one reason or another, are obliged to avail themselves of these privileges, and it is for these I am pleading now. They certainly should not be required to attend school at the age of 6 years.

Now, the committee in their report state that when we would raise the limit of compulsory attendance to 8 years we are taking away one-fourth of the educational privileges of the child. That is entirely a mistake from my point of view.

Speaking generally, the first two years of school life, from 6 to 8, are of very little value from an educational point of view, when you consider, as this committee seem to have done, principally the amount of actual knowledge acquired. It is not true, therefore, that taking off those two years takes away a quarter of the child's educational advantages. Those years, on the other hand, from a physical and moral point of view, and from the point of view of character building, are priceless. The child at that time has many physical limitations which incapacitate him often for regular and continued school work. His mind is like a plastic piece of wax. It will take any impression and retain it, and there are a thousand reasons why a great many children at that time of life ought not to be required to attend the public schools, or any other schools, for that matter, particularly if there is to be injected into the public schools at that period the element so graphically set forth in the appendix to the committee's report.

It ought to be left entirely to the good judgment and sound common sense of the parents. It is absolutely no answer to say that the parent is not obliged to send his children to the public schools, but that a private or parochial school may be substituted. This modification does not reach that most worthy class for whom I am speaking, and they are the ones who, in my judgment, should receive the greatest consideration—those who, as I have said before, are obliged to send their children to the public schools. It would be somewhat different if this were a country town or a smaller and different community; but what the committee must consider are the conditions as they exist here. In my judgment, it would be a terrible hardship and a crime against childhood to require every child, indiscriminately, at the age of 6, to attend the public schools unless the parent is able to send him to some private or parochial school. It is not that I am against the public schools. I believe in them. I am heartily in favor of them. I think they supply an element in the child's training which can be gotten in no other way, and an element, too, of very great value; but that is not saying that every child, regardless of conditions, should attend the public schools unless it can attend a private school. In the interest of the bill, therefore, and in the interest of the purposes sought to be advanced by the bill, I hope that it will be left as the Senate left it—not at 7 years; do not let us compromise on this, but put it where it belongs and let it stay at 8 years.

Mr. SIMS. If the amendment changing "eight" to "six" is voted down, that restores the text of the bill at 8 years?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Then I hope the committee amendment will be voted down.

The question being taken, the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he will agree that wherever the same committee amendment occurs, changing "six" to "eight," that amendment may be considered as disagreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. I agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that wherever the same amendment occurs, it may be considered as disagreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the request of the gentleman will be granted.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 1, in line 10, strike out "his" and insert "the;" also insert, after the word "control," the words "of such persons."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out "or shall provide such child with equivalent daily instructions at home or elsewhere."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, as I understand this amendment, it proposes to strike out the provision that the child may be taught at home or sent to school elsewhere. The Senate bill provides that the child shall be sent to school in the District of Columbia, or shall be provided with equivalent instruction at home or elsewhere. Now, this committee have reported in favor of striking out the words "or shall provide such child with equivalent daily instruction at home or elsewhere," which means elsewhere than in the schools of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRELL. If the gentleman will look a little further down in that paragraph he will see that that is already provided for in lines 8 and 9. Beginning at the top of the paragraph, in line 6, it says:

A child between the ages aforesaid may be excused from school attendance or instruction upon presentation of satisfactory evidence to the superintendent of schools that such child is being or has been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools, or that such child has acquired these branches of learning.

It was for that reason that the committee thought those provisions were unnecessary.

Mr. OLMSTED. I should like to ask my colleague what he means by the phrase "a like period" in the words he has just read?

Mr. MORRELL. That refers to the duration of the term of the public schools—the public school term.

Mr. BARTLETT. But it occurs to me that this bill would compel the sending of a child to school in the District of Columbia if you took out the words "at home or elsewhere."

Mr. MORRELL. That was not the intention of the bill or those who framed it.

Mr. BARTLETT. It seems to me that the language is not clear.

Mr. MORRELL. It would be very easy for the careless parent of a child to make some excuse and say that the child had been instructed. Now it brings the responsibility up to the superintendent of schools. That was the reason why that provision in lines 1 and 2 was stricken out.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This language that it is proposed to strike out is intended to cover the cases of children who are instructed by private tutors, is it not?

Mr. MORRELL. It is already covered by the provision farther on in the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This language is intended to cover such cases?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under the language to which the gentleman calls attention, later in the paragraph, the evidence must be that the child "is instructed a similar period of time in the branches taught in the public schools."

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Now, it may be that a child being instructed by private tutors would have a course of study outlined that would differ from the curriculum of the public schools, and under the language of the bill evidence of that instruction would not be sufficient to excuse the child from attendance on the public schools.

Mr. MORRELL. I think that would be within the province of the superintendent of schools to determine, as to the character of the education which the child was receiving.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If that be the intention, I think it is proper. The language of the bill is, "has been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools." If it be intended to confine this instruction to the curriculum of the public schools, it would prevent those cases where it is desired to have private instruction instead of instruction in schools unless the instruction is in the identical studies of the public schools.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. The language is "a child between the ages aforesaid may be excused from school attendance or instruction on presentation of satisfactory evidence that such child is being or has been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools." Now, assuming that the parent of a child 9 years old brings a certificate to the superintendent proving that between the ages of 6 and 8 the child was instructed for two years, is not thereafter such child excused from the operation of the compulsory education law? I know that such was not intended, but that is the way it works out.

Mr. MORRELL. I do not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. BENNET of New York. This bill reads that—

Between the ages aforesaid the child may be excused from school attendance or instruction upon presentation of satisfactory evidence to the superintendent of schools that such child is being or has been instructed a like period of time in the branches taught in the public schools.

Mr. MORRELL. Read on:

Or that such child has acquired those branches of learning.

The bill does not say that it must acquire those branches of learning within the specified time, but it provides farther on that the child must have acquired those branches of learning.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That is exactly my criticism; the language is indefinite. It either means that the child who has been for a few months in school and acquired some knowledge can be excused, or, if it does not mean that, it means that he has fully acquired those branches, and it can mean nothing in between. There is absolutely no way provided under this language for getting the child excused from school attendance.

Mr. MORRELL. Not at all; it simply provides that the child should be instructed during certain periods of time mentioned in the bill, if the child has not previous to that time acquired the branches of learning specified.

Mr. BENNET of New York. That would be all right if the bill said it, but it does not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "evidence," insert "to the superintendent of schools."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out the word "he" and insert the words "such child is being or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out the word "already."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 11, strike out the words "he" and "already," and in place of the word "he" insert the words "such child."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

Page 2, line 12, after the word "that," strike out the word "is" and insert the word "the."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

On page 2, line 12, after the word "condition," insert the words "of such child."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

In line 13, after the word "instruction," strike out the words "for the whole period required or any part thereof."

The amendment was considered and agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] has an amendment already pending, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "person," insert the word "residing."

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard in opposition to that amendment.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, the attention of the committee was called to the fact that it would be necessary to insert the word "residing," inasmuch as otherwise it would simply cover everybody in the District and not those only who were residing in the District. For that reason the committee suggested the word "residing" be inserted after the word "person."

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is to exempt persons who come here to spend the winter only.

Mr. BENNET of New York. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has used the wrong word. He should have used the word "domiciled" instead of "residing." All the army of Government clerks do not take up a residence, but they become domiciled here; they retain their residence in the State or Territory from which they come. And it also seems to me that the amendment suggested is in the wrong place. What the gentleman would provide, I think, is for control over the child in the District, and not particularly over the parent, and I think the amendment ought to come in on line 4, after the word "child." I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the word "residing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "domiciled."

Mr. PALMER. That would cover a Member of Congress, then.

Mr. MORRELL. If the gentleman thinks that the word "domiciled" would cover the situation better than the word "residing"——

Mr. PALMER. I do not think it covers it better than the word "residing." If you put in the word "domiciled," that will cover a Member of Congress.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, if this law is of any effect, we ought to be perfectly willing to take its effect on ourselves as well as to impose it on others in this District. If we do not send our 8-year-old children to school, we ought to be subjected to punishment, if it is our judgment that children 8 years of age ought to be sent to school. Of course the word "domiciled" covers everyone domiciled in the District. The word "residing" omits too many, and if we want to make this law effective, so as to cover the moderately well to do as well as the poor, we ought to put in a word that will do it, because in the peculiar conditions existing here the word "residing" omits too many, and I think the amendment to the amendment ought to prevail.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, what is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, after the word "person," amend by inserting the word "residing."

Amend the amendment by substituting the word "domiciled" for the word "residing."

Mr. BENNET of New York. I am perfectly willing that this amendment to the amendment should cover myself. I have two children attending the public schools, and I think if I do not send my children over 8 years of age to school I ought to be punished just as much as some man in some part of the District to whom it is a monetary hardship to send his children to school. I am willing to take pot luck with the rest.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting in line 9, page 2, after the word "been," the words "within said year;" so that it shall read: "Such child is being or has been within said year instructed," etc.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That if any person having under his control a child, as described in section 1, shall neglect for three consecutive day sessions or six consecutive half-day sessions, within any period of five months to cause such child to attend school, a written notice shall be sent to him by an attendance officer, hereinafter provided for, informing him that the attendance of the child under his control is required at school within a period of three days. If such child is not excused as provided for in section 1, and is not in school within three days, prosecution shall be begun in the police court by the attendance officer against the parent or other person in control of the child, and upon conviction the parent or other person in control of the child shall be punished for each and every offense by a fine of not more than $50 or by imprisonment not to exceed sixty days.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 16, strike out the word "his;" and in line 20 strike out the word "him" and insert the words "such person;" in line 22 strike out the word "his" and insert the word "the;" and after the word "control," in line 22, insert the words "of such person."

Page 3, line 4, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "twenty;" and strike out all after the word "dollars" in line 5.

The CHAIRMAN. Is a separate vote demanded on any of these committee amendments in this paragraph? If not, the vote will be taken in gross. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 1, strike out, after the word "by," the words "the attending officer" and insert in lieu thereof the words "an officer empowered under this act."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "consecutive;" and in line 18 strike out the word "consecutive."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is simply this, that if the staying away from school should be cause for notice and for penalty in case the absence of the child is not explained, it ought to apply where the absence occurs whether it is consecutive or otherwise. Under the wording of this bill, if a child is kept away from school every other day during an entire month, no notice is sent and no action taken. The absence has to be consecutive.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I think the committee will accept that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That word occurs twice in the same connection.

Mr. SHERLEY. The amendment also related to both words, and was so stated to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That any child between the ages of 8 and 14 who is an habitual truant, who is willfully and habitually absent from school, or who is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral while in attendance upon school, shall be committed to a special or ungraded school for instruction. The board of education may set apart school buildings or special rooms in a school building for the establishment of ungraded schools to provide, under a qualified teacher, for the instruction of habitual truants or for pupils who may be incorrigible, vicious, or immoral in conduct while in attendance upon school, and such children may be restricted to such schools for instruction until satisfactory evidence of improvement is presented by the teacher in charge for his restoration to a graded school in the district in which he resides.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of this committee or somebody else who knows, if anybody does, who is to determine, in lines 8 and 9, when a child is incorrigible or vicious or immoral while in attendance upon school?

Mr. MORRELL. I presume at first that information would come from the teacher in charge of the school, and then from the school principal up to the supervising principal, who reports such cases. The object of this section, Mr. Chairman, was to provide separate classes and separate schools when children were found to be destroying the discipline of the school or the discipline of the class. It is very hard to maintain a school or a class at a high standard if children who are habitually incorrigible are allowed to remain in the class. It was the thought of the superintendent of schools, and the committee agreed, that these children should be, if possible, segregated into classes by themselves, or, if necessary, into a school building by themselves.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Well, I would like to know, as a matter of curiosity, who it was who suggested the third section and the peculiar verbiage of it. It must have been some old maid or some old bachelor, who never had any children and did not know anything about it.

Mr. MORRELL. I do not know the exact home relations of the gentlemen who framed this bill. The bill, I understand, was drawn by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, together with the superintendent of schools, and was submitted to and passed the other end of the Capitol, where I am quite sure there are some gentlemen who have home relations and have some children at home, and the verbiage here seems to have met with their approval, or, at least, there was no comment on it.

Mr. SIMS. I suggest that if some Senator drew this bill the House is relieved.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if the Senate did draw this bill, section 3 must have been drawn by some Senator who is so old that he not only has forgotten he was ever a boy himself or has forgotten that anybody else has any boys. I want to express my opinion about some words in here. You take it altogether and section 3 is a pretty tough section. There is a part of it whose meaning can be determined definitely, and I do not have any objection to that part.

That any child between the ages of 6 and 14—

Of course we are going to make it 8—

who is an habitual truant—

Now, that is a fact which can be ascertained, and I do not object to that—

who is willfully and habitually absent from school—

That is another fact which can be ascertained.

or who is incorrigible.

Incorrigible about what? Incorrigible means incurable. Who is to determine whether the boy or girl is incorrigible?

You get some doctrinaire hold of it or some faddist and any boy in the country who has energy enough in him ever to become a good and useful citizen of the Republic would be pronounced incorrigible by them. Macaulay said that "Sir Robert Walpole was avaricious of power," and so is everybody else that I have ever clapped my eyes on in this world, schoolteacher as well as anybody else. But to return to section 3. "Vicious," of course, is a word whose meaning can be more easily ascertained, but who is going to pronounce whether a child is "vicious" or "immoral?"

While in attendance upon school, shall be committed to a special or ungraded school for instruction.

Who is going to run that school?

The board of education may set apart school buildings or special rooms in a school building for the establishment of ungraded schools, to provide, under a qualified teacher, for the instruction of habitual truants or for pupils who may be incorrigible, vicious, or immoral in conduct while in attendance upon school.

Why, Mr. Chairman, every legislator in every State in the Union who has at heart the love of the human race has been trying for twenty-five years to get away from the idea of herding all sorts and all degrees of criminals in the same institution, because you take those who are criminal only to a small extent and put them in a criminal school of instruction with those who are seasoned in crime and the persons who are very little criminal in the beginning come out finished criminals. Now, we do not want to go to the extreme in this bill of doing more harm than we do good.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] allow me to ask him what he would do with an incorrigible student, one that is immoral or vicious—keep him in the regular school to demoralize the other students, or have a special school for the education and instruction of that class of boys, or turn him out altogether?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I would not turn him out.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What would the gentleman do? What provision would he make?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If we could not do anything else with him, I would send him to a reform school, or I would segregate him and give him his punishment that way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. This bill provides for segregation.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want you to tell me now, while you are asking me a question—I am not very much of a Yankee, but I will be enough of a Yankee to do that—what do you mean by a boy being incorrigible, as stated in this section 3?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A boy that is incapable of correction. I think the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] misunderstands the word "incorrigible." It is found in nearly all of the statutes of the country and used in the same sense that it is used here, namely, incapable of correction.

Mr. OLMSTED. If the gentleman from Missouri will permit me, in order that he may not be compelled to go to school under the bill, I want to read him from the dictionary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who made the dictionary?

Mr. OLMSTED. It is the International Dictionary.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I can make a dictionary as well as that fellow can. [Laughter.]

Mr. OLMSTED. One of the definitions here is:

Incorrigible. Depraved beyond the possibility of reform; irreclaimable; as an incorrigible criminal or drunkard.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That does not differ from mine. The gentleman from Indiana refuses to answer, so I want to ask you who is going to pronounce when this boy is incorrigible, under this section 3?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am in entire sympathy with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] on this section. I do not approve of it at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And I want to say about dictionaries, in general, Mr. Chairman, that I or any other intelligent man in this country has just as much right to make a dictionary as these scholars up in the northeast corner of this Republic. [Laughter.] And I have never been able to understand yet why the northeasterners possess the exclusive right to make a dictionary for the rest of the United States. [Laughter.] If you do not take the word "incorrigible" out, I am going to move to strike out the whole section.

Mr. MORRELL. In answer to the gentleman from Missouri I would like to say that every school system almost in this country has separate classes and separate schools for children of this kind. It has been the experience of educators that to allow children who do not seem to be susceptible to the good influences that are put around them to remain in classes and schools, and, as it were, vitiate the other children in the schools and classes, is very bad practice. The plan to segregate children of this kind has been tried in New York; in fact, they have two schools there where children such as are described, or such as has been attempted to be described, in this bill, are placed when they are found, after the reports of the teachers and principals of the schools, to be such that they can not be handled, and are not susceptible of discipline, are not even willing to make an effort to learn, and that the association with such children has a bad influence on the other children in the school.

Now, let me ask the gentleman this—and I understand he has children of his own going to school here—would he like his children to be forced to associate with a boy or girl, as the case might be, whom the teachers and principals had tried in every possible way, but without success, to make conform to the discipline and regulations in that school? Would he like his children to be forced to come under the influence of that kind of child or children?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. No; I would not. Now, let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MORRELL. It was just simply on that account, particularly in view of this compulsory-education law, which forces all sorts and kinds of children to the schools who would not otherwise be there, those whose very nature would keep away from school, that it was thought by the committee that there should be a separate class of schools or separate classes, for not only those children, if they proved to be incorrigible or not susceptible of education, but also children who are already in the schools and had not responded to education and discipline.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Did we not pass a statute here not long ago establishing a reform school?

Mr. MORRELL. That was a juvenile court.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is not there a reform school in the District of Columbia?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes; there is a reform school.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What is the reason, then, these children you are talking about in section 3 ought not to be sent to the reform school?

Mr. MORRELL. Because they have to be convicted of some specific crime in order to be sent to a reform school.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Oh, that is not the case.

Mr. MORRELL. And further than that, in line with the gentleman's argument in regard to the criminal practice, it was not thought advisable to vitiate them further by sending them to reform schools unless they were absolutely so bad that school discipline could not bring them into some kind of shape.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to strike out section 3.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to make the same motion.

Mr. STANLEY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw that motion temporarily.

Mr. STANLEY. I move to strike out the last word. I think the answer to the argument that has been made in favor of the provision of this section should be in the nature of a reductio ad absurdum. This bill provides that if a child between 6 and 14 years is habitually absent from school, and so on, and provides in other words, that if the teacher finds this 6-year-old child is habitually criminal, incorrigible, and vicious, that this 6-year-old child can be taken and segregated and placed in a separate room among other 6-year-old children equally as bad, or 8-year-old children. There is your doctrine of total depravity from the time you are born, with a vengeance. Any kind of a teacher that can not control any 6-year-old child ought to be segregated instead of the child. The idea of placing it upon the records of your schools, of affixing such a stigma as that placed upon a child—for it is a stigma—to take a little tot of that age to a kind of penitentiary, or placing that stamp upon it to stay there all through its life because some hysterical old maid can not control it, is an abomination.

I have taught school, and know something of the practical side of this business, and I never yet saw a 6 or 8 year old child so incorrigible as even to find it necessary to strike it, and I have taught hundreds of them. If it be determined that in the District of Columbia you have got a number of children under the age of 10 who have to be confined in a petty penitentiary, then you should have a feeble-minded institute for the benefit of the teachers who can not control children without resorting to such barbarous methods. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the objection made by the gentleman from Missouri will be withdrawn if the committee will agree to strike out the word "incorrigible."

The CHAIRMAN. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. MORRELL. I think the gentleman from Missouri moved to strike out the whole section.

The CHAIRMAN. He withdrew that motion.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to submit an amendment.

Mr. SIMS. I have been recognized, and I would like to discuss it before I am amended off the floor.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the amendment pending?

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, we will be confronted with the difficulty growing out of the very fact of compulsory education that you compel by penal statute all children from 8 to 14 years to attend school, threatening the parents with fine and imprisonment if they do not send their children, and they must go without reference to their morals and behavior. We are forcing an element into the schools, if such exists, that would practically destroy the schools. If it is a private school, the teachers and authorities have charge of it and can dismiss or expel such a student.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Have the superintendents of the schools no machinery for enforcing order, including reasonable punishment?

Mr. SIMS. This bill is all I am discussing; I do not know what is done outside of what appears in this bill. But this bill is a penal statute, forcing children between 8 and 14 years to attend school, and the teachers and authorities in charge of the schools can not refuse to take them, unless based upon some ground authorized by law. Whether it is properly described in this section or not, I do not know. I am not wedded to the section. But there must be authority somewhere, it seems to me, to separate and segregate a boy of 13 or 14 years, or a girl, whose conduct in school is such that he or she is not worthy of association with the pupils; and if the teacher has no power to expel them, we must provide some means by which proper discipline can be maintained.

Whether this is a proper method or not I do not know. I was not on the subcommittee that considered the bill. But they are not private schools or ordinary public schools when we make it penal not to attend them. The teachers must accept pupils; and if for one reason or another it is ascertained by the teacher in charge of these boys or girls that they can not be kept in school, we must provide a means by which such children can be removed from school, whether they are put in a separate room, as here provided, or a separate reform school. There must be some provision in this bill by which discipline can be maintained when such an emergency arises as is intended to be covered by this statute.

Now, I admit that it is pretty hard to say that a teacher can send a child out of the public schools provided by law without any trial, or anything of that kind, or can segregate them and send them to a reform school; but something will have to be done when you make it penal. There must be some legal way by which the teacher or the authorities in charge of the school may determine whether or not they may be kept in that school, sent home, or sent elsewhere. If this section is stricken out, there ought to be something put in that will meet the objects and purposes for which the section was introduced.

Mr. MORRELL. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will not press his amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I withdraw the amendment to strike out the whole section.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, on page 3, lines 8 and 9, the words "who is incorrigible, vicious, and immoral while in attendance on the school;" and strike out, in lines 14 and 15, the words "or for pupils who may be incorrigible, vicious, and immoral while in attendance on schools."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the adoption of this amendment would be to permit the school authorities to segregate the children who are inclined to be habitual truants. The language that it is proposed to strike out, "incorrigible, vicious, and immoral children," certainly is sufficiently broad to include the same children who should be brought before the juvenile court for proper disposition. In the District of Columbia there are two reform schools maintained by the Government, one for boys and the other for girls. It would be very difficult even for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to define what children should be considered incorrigible and vicious and then fix a definition that would cover children supposed to be immoral while in attendance on the schools. I suggest that children who would come within that designation should not be associated in the schools of the District with other children, but would probably belong in the reform school.

The difficulty with this bill arises from the fact that the committee has attempted to incorporate into the bill, to provide for compulsory education, a provision that will in effect create a new reform school in the District of Columbia; and not merely one reform school, but probably a class in a number of schools throughout the District which in effect will be reform schools. There is no machinery provided in this bill, as the gentleman from Missouri has pointed out, to ascertain what children shall be considered incorrigible or vicious or immoral. If it be the purpose to segregate, besides habitual truants, children who can not be controlled by the ordinary methods and discipline of school, that should be stated. But this language evidently is intended to cover children who are thought to be or at least are subjects for the reform school, and the present machinery of the law which has been provided in the shape of the juvenile court should be permitted to take cognizance of the offenses and practices of which these children would be guilty.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from New York if he would be satisfied to substitute for the words "or who is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral" the words "or who can not be controlled by the ordinary school discipline?"

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not quite hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that, in my judgment, this section is substantially as it ought to be. The designation of certain pupils as "incorrigible, vicious, or immoral" does not bring them within the class subject to be committed to the reform school. Reform schools are for incorrigible criminals. I happen to know something about the operation of a compulsory educational law in the State of Indiana. In the city in which I live, where a student becomes incorrigible, when his presence in the school is demoralizing and vicious, we have no remedy except to expel him—turn him out on the street. He can not be committed to the reform school because he is not necessarily a criminal; he is not perhaps persistently bad, but he may be simply full of mischief, determined to have his own way about things, not subject to discipline, and his influence upon the school and upon other students may be bad. Now, in our State there is no way except to expel him from school altogether.

This bill, I understand, provides a special school for that class of students—not criminal students, but incorrigible students, and "incorrigible" means those that can not be corrected by the ordinary methods of school discipline. If they are criminals they may be sent to the reform school.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman believe that any child that is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral falls within the designation of criminal to the extent of being sent to the reform school?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not necessarily, because the reform school statutes generally require criminal misconduct, some act which if committed by an adult would be punishable by the criminal laws of the country. That is the case in our State. Now, there is one amendment that I would make to the section, and that is, I would change the age limit for this section and make it from 10 to 14 years instead of 8 to 14 years. I do not believe that any pupil below the age of 10 years can be classed as incorrigible. I do not believe he can be beyond corrective influences. So I would simply change the age limit from 10 to 14 instead of from 8 to 14, and allow the section to stand as it is otherwise. The board of education would have to provide some method of determining what pupils ought not to be educated with the ordinary pupils in the public schools, those who should be segregated not as criminals, but as mischievous boys, to be educated by themselves; and when by a course of good conduct they have earned the right, they may go back into their grades along with the others. It does not necessarily reflect on a schoolboy to say that he is in the habit of perpetrating pranks in school, that he rebels against the school discipline and the authority of his instructor. The ordinary schoolboy throughout the country looks upon that kind of conduct as evidence of strength and manhood. A pupil may be incorrigible along that line to the extent that his example will be bad, that his influence will be hurtful, and he ought to be under the control of a muscular teacher, who is able to handle him physically as well as mentally.

Mr. GRAHAM. Along the line of what the gentleman has indicated, I would state that, in my city of Allegheny, we have what is called a "truant school," and the truant officers go out to the homes of boys who will not attend school and bring them to the truant school. It is not considered a reform school, but a truant school.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is substantially what this is.

Mr. GRAHAM. It works very well in my city.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to move to strike out the word "eight" and insert the word "ten," in line 6.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment now pending.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], as follows:

In line 8, strike out, after the word "who," the words "is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral" and substitute the words "can not be controlled by the regular school discipline."

And the same in lines 14 and 15.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania meets with the approval of the committee, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered, so that the gentleman's amendment can be voted on instead.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment offered by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8, after the word "who," strike out the words "is incorrigible, vicious, or immoral" and insert the words "can not be controlled by the regular school discipline." In line 14, after the word "who," strike out the words "may be incorrigible, vicious, or immoral" and insert the words "can not be controlled by the regular school discipline."

Mr. PALMER. Do you not also want to strike out the words "in conduct," in line 15?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes; those should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 15 strike out the words "in conduct."

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I want to move to strike out the entire section. I want to know whether that is in order now, or whether after the section has been perfected it will be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not before the section has been completed.

Mr. SIMS. I wish to say a few words about the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL]. That amendment makes this section entirely unobjectionable, and something of the kind is absolutely necessary to this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question. Wouldn't it improve this section if the age limit for the purposes of this section were made from 10 to 14 instead of from 8 to 14 years?

Mr. SIMS. Under the idea that there will be no 9-year-old child to whom it would apply?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Yes; set apart in the segregated schools. Would it not, in the opinion of the gentleman, improve the section to fix the age limit at from 10 to 14 years?

Mr. SIMS. If there are children of 8 and 9 years of age that would be, as herein described, not subject to discipline, I do not see why they should not be segregated as well as those from 10 to 12 and 14 years of age.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Is it conceivable that there can be a child under 10 years of age who can not be controlled by the ordinary disciplinary methods in the public schools?

Mr. SIMS. I should think the gentleman is right about that, that there would not be; but if so, it would be a very rare case. Occasionally, however, we do see a kind of overgrown boy of 9 years of age who can create a great deal of disturbance if he undertakes to do so. I do not think that is vital enough to make this amendment, but I can not speak for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL]. I would not myself object to making it apply from 10 to 14 years, but something of this kind is necessary in this bill, and as amended by the gentleman from Pennsylvania I think the section is very necessary to the bill, and hope that when amended and perfected it will not be stricken out.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on the amendment just offered.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee the methods of correction that are employed in the public schools of Washington?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know, for I have not investigated that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to move an amendment to the paragraph. In line 6 I move to strike out the word "eight" and insert in lieu thereof the word "ten."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely trust that amendment will not pass. We can not make fish of some of the children and flesh of the others. A rule of this kind ought to apply to all that come within the operation of the law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Allow me to suggest that I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania understands the force of this proposed amendment. The law requires all children between the ages of 8 and 14 to attend school, and makes provisions for segregating certain incorrigible children and educating them in special schools because of their lack of obedience to the school discipline. I do not believe a student below the age of 10 years ought to be segregated and put in one of those special schools, and for this purpose I think the minimum age of 10 years ought to be fixed in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of improving the grammar a little, I suggest that something should be done to the phrase "such children may be restricted to such schools for instruction until satisfactory evidence for improvement is presented by the teacher in charge for his restoration to a graded school." The grammar may be corrected. It commences in the plural and concludes in the singular. The easiest way, I think, of correcting it is to strike out the word "his," in line 18. I offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment suggested will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting after the word "committed," in line 9, the words "by the board of education."

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 17 and 18, after the word "is," in line 17, strike out the words "presented by the teacher in charge for restoration to a graded school in the district in which he lives" and insert in lieu thereof the words "furnished the board of education by the teacher in charge, whereupon such child may be restored to a graded school in the district where he resides."

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, the point of that amendment is this: There is no machinery provided in this section by which a child can be restored to a graded school. Somebody ought to have the authority to restore the child and somebody ought to have the right to furnish the testimony.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will ask the gentleman if he does not believe that it should be the superintendent of schools instead of the board of education. The board of education does not meet very often, and the superintendent of schools is the executive head.

Mr. PALMER. The board of education is the authority which is to provide and set apart a school building or special rooms, and the board of education is the one that is to pass upon the question whether the child is an habitual truant, and therefore the board of education ought to be the one to restore the child to a graded school in case restoration is found to be proper.

Mr. MORRELL. I call for a vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PALMER. You accept that?

Mr. MORRELL. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have received a telegram which I would like to have the Clerk read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin submits a telegram, which will be read in his time.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORT MONROE, VA., May 28, 1906.

Hon. JOSEPH W. BABCOCK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We hope the compulsory education bill passed to-day without fail.

WM. H. BALDWIN.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Who is he?

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not know. I never heard of him before.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 3, page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3 strike out section 3.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take but a moment of the time of the committee in discussing this amendment. To my mind it is absurd to think that there are going to be many cases arising of children between the ages of 8 years and 14 who can not be managed by the ordinary discipline of the school, and those cases that do arise will be cases that properly belong to a reform school. The gentleman from Indiana may be correct as to the conditions in the State of Indiana in reform schools. He is incorrect as to the condition touching admission into reform schools in most of the other States of the country. In my own city the rule is that a parent can, upon presentation to our police court, which has certain powers as a juvenile court, and a showing that a child is incorrigible, have it sent to a reform school, and as I understand it we have in the District now reform schools for just such purposes. You are undertaking here to make a system that is going to work to the detriment of your entire school system. Instead of putting upon the teacher the burden of preserving order by her or his conduct and management of the school by inspiring pupils with respect and obedience, you are permitting them an easy road out of their difficulties by simply having any child who happens to prove temporarily unruly brought up before the board of control and having it sent to this special school for incorrigibles.

In my humble judgment the moment you consider the fact that the ages of children to whom the compulsory education bill applies are 8 to 14 you have answered all the arguments raised here. If you had to deal with boys 15, 16, 17, and 18 and compel them to go to school there might be something in it, but the cases in which children under 14 years of age are going to be beyond the control of ordinary school discipline are going to be rare, and, as I have said, such as ought to be taken care of by reform schools. I therefore hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Chairman, I trust I may not reflect upon the gentleman from Kentucky in his experience in the raising of children if I say that there is a period of time when a child is not vicious and when a child is not criminal, but when a child needs careful training, perhaps more so than any other time in his life, and that time is certainly between the ages of 7 and 14, and that is the time when a child needs frequently, by reason of his nervous condition, the special care which can be obtained by a school of this kind such as we have in my State.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRANGER. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman think a nervous child will be helped by being put in a schoolroom with only other nervous children or children who are guilty of wrongdoing?

Mr. GRANGER. No; I do not know that he would be helped by that, but I think he would be infinitely helped by being segregated and given into the hands of teachers who are peculiarly fitted to deal with nervous children. It is now many years since that system has existed in Rhode Island, and in our own State the result has justified it. I trust that the gentleman's amendment will be voted down.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, just one word on this. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. I can not see anything more awful than to take a lot of little chaps between the ages of 6 and 14, and, just because they happen to be a little careless or a little bit refractory, put them all together in a school where there is no grade, no opportunity for advancement, and no opportunity for reward, and to be treated as if they were incorrigible. That section ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to strike out section 3.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That for the purposes of securing a strict compliance with every provision of this act the board of education of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to appoint a number of persons, not to exceed seven, who shall be designated as attendance officers, and who shall each receive a salary for such services of $600 per annum, and whose duties in the premises shall be prescribed by the said board.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer a substitute.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. The board of education of the District of Columbia is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to appoint two truant officers at a salary of $600 per annum each, who, together with the inspectors provided for in the bill to regulate the employment of child labor and the probation officers provided for in the bill establishing a juvenile court, shall, under the direction of the board of education, carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Clerk to read an amendment which I sent to the desk as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL]. I wrote it as an original amendment, and, as he got his in first, I will offer mine as a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, in lines 23, 24, and 25, strike out all after the word "appoint" down to and including the word "and," and insert in lieu thereof the words "one attendance officer;" also strike out the word "each," in line 25.

Mr. MORRELL. I would like to say to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that in reference to the views of the Committee on Appropriations, and in view of the argument that was had here on the floor in connection with the child-labor bill, the committee cut the number of attendance officers authorized by this bill from seven to two, and provided that the officers authorized by the child-labor bill and the officers authorized by the juvenile-court bill shall act in conjunction with the two officers provided in this bill. But we did not feel that the provisions of this bill could be properly carried out with any less than two attendance officers as is provided in the amendment, or rather the substitute, which I sent to the Clerk's desk:

The only difference of opinion between myself and the gentleman from Missouri is that his amendment provides for one while the committee amendment provides for two. I sincerely trust that the gentleman will not insist on his amendment, but will realize that the committee have, in the interest of economy and efficiency, done the best that they thought was possible in providing for but two.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, if you can not get a whole loaf, take a half loaf; therefore I withdraw my amendment, or substitute, provided the committee will vote for the one offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORRELL].

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That no child in the District of Columbia under the age of 14 shall be employed by any person or persons to labor in any factory, workshop, mercantile establishment, or in any business whatsoever that will prevent such child from attending school during the days and hours of the school term, as determined by the board of education, or its equivalent, in private, parochial, or home instruction, as set forth in section 1, and any person who induces or attempts to induce any child to absent himself unlawfully from school, or employs or harbors while school is in session any child absent unlawfully from school, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and be punished by a fine of not more than $50 or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days.

Also the following committee amendments:

Pages 3 and 4, strike out all of section 5 down to and including the word "and," in line 7 on page 4, and insert in lieu thereof the word "That."

Page 4, line 8, insert before the word "absence" the word "be;" also strike out the word "himself."

Page 4, line 12, strike out the word "fifty" and insert the word "twenty;" also strike out the words "or by imprisonment for not more than sixty days."

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, in the print I have here the word "deemed" appears twice right together. I do not know whether it is that way in the bill or not.

Mr. MORRELL. In what line?

Mr. SIMS. It appears at the end of line 13 and the beginning of line 14.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, correction will be made.

Mr. SIMS. One of them ought to be stricken out.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Do I understand the Chair to say amendment or amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment in section 5.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the next committee amendment to section 5.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the third amendment recommended by the committee.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. One other amendment. The question is on agreeing to the last amendment to section 5.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment skipped by the Chair in line 11. "Himself" is stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the next amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. There is an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the committee amendment in line 11 will be considered as agreed to. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The question now is on the last amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The last amendment is to strike out "or by imprisonment of not more than sixty days." The Chair has not yet submitted the amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty."

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment in line 15, striking out "fifty" and inserting "twenty."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment striking out the words "or by imprisonment of not more than sixty days" was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I move to amend by inserting, in line 12, after the word "or," the words "who knowingly." I do not think a man ought to be convicted of crime without he was knowingly harboring or employing these children.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12, after the word "or," insert the words "who knowingly."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That attendance officers shall visit any place or establishment where minor children are employed to ascertain whether the provisions of this law are duly complied with, and shall as often as twice a year demand from all employers of such children a list of children employed, with their names and ages.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 4, line 17, after the word "that," strike out the words "attendance officers" and insert "the officers empowered under this act."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That if any parent or guardian shall be unable by reason of poverty to send the child under his control to school as provided for in this act, it shall be the duty of the board of education to take such action as in its discretion may best promote the purpose of this act in the particular case.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Amend by striking out lines 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 and inserting "that this act shall take effect on July 1, 1906."

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1906.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out section 10.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRELL. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Renumber the sections.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question or two with respect to the bill. I notice beyond the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin, a great pile of bills. Are these all District bills?

Mr. BABCOCK. Does the gentleman refer to these papers?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BABCOCK. These are District bills.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How many bills are there?

Mr. BABCOCK. There are only nineteen after this one.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I simply wanted to get a little information. It seems to me you have more bills from the District of Columbia than from the whole of the United States. Why have they accumulated so?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have accumulated on account of the time wasted in needless discussion over propositions that have been brought before the House.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I have no doubt the gentleman has enjoyed that fun when he talked to himself.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will it be in order to ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered as read the second time and move that it be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the bill may be considered as read a second time and laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We can not do that. We can not give any unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will commence the reading of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask some questions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the bill ought to be read at least once.

Mr. BABCOCK. It has been read once.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the first reading, and then there is general debate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I may save some time. A moment ago I was under the impression that this bill had not been read to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, then, I withdraw the objection I made a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection——

Mr. FITZGERALD. I object. The bill has to be read for amendments, and before the bill is read for amendments I wish to ask some questions about this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to ask why assistant drivers are provided in this bill with salaries at $1,100 a year, and how many assistant drivers is it intended there shall be in this Department?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman from New York, I will state that there are thirty assistant drivers provided for in the bill and thirty less regular firemen provided for. They are taken out of the body of the force. Their salaries have been increased from $900 to $1,100 for the reason that the work of a driver is extra hazardous, and it was thought by the committee that it was only just when a man was called upon to do the extra hazardous work of a driver his salary should be correspondingly increased.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that no number is fixed by this bill.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There are thirty drivers now, and while we have not increased the men in the force, that matter being wholly left to the Committee on Appropriations, of which the gentleman, I believe, is a member, he will recall that there are now thirty drivers provided for in the appropriation bill, and thirty assistants have been drawn from the force by the fire chief and the Commissioners.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call attention to these facts in connection with the bill, if the gentleman will permit me: This bill provides for assistant drivers at a salary of $1,100 a year. It also provides for two classes of privates, one at $1,080 a year and one at $960 a year. The assistant drivers that are to be authorized here, unless I am misinformed, have practically nothing to do as drivers except, perhaps, when some man goes home to lunch or is temporarily disabled, and yet they are creating a new class and an additional compensation, not only above what they receive at present, but above what the ordinary drivers will receive under the increased schedule.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. I want to say that the assistant drivers provided for in this bill are the men who have been the privates driving the hose wagons and all other wagons except the steamers. Now, we make them what they really have been for a number of years. They drive the hose wagons, and the regular drivers are the drivers of the steamers.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Instead of their occupation being extra hazardous, it is much easier than that of the ordinary drivers. The man who drives the hose wagon drives to the fire, helps to lay out the hose, and then takes care of his horses. He does not do the work of fighting the fire.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. If the gentleman will look at the report he will find that the assistant drivers do all the duties of a private at a fire, and in addition look after their horses and drive these hose wagons.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In theory they do the work of privates at a fire, but as a matter of fact they do not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. As a matter of fact they do, and the gentleman is the first person who says they do not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am somewhat familiar with the way a large fire department is conducted, a fire department that has something of a reputation throughout the country, and I know that the man who drives a hose wagon takes care of his horses at the fire, takes care of his wagon, and drives back and forth for additional fuel when it is required for the steamers, and that he does not as a matter of fact do the ordinary work of fire fighting, the same as the ordinary privates do. When that provision in the bill is reached, I simply wish to say to the gentleman that I will ask the committee to disagree to the amendment providing this additional compensation for the assistant drivers.

There is one thing I wish to call attention to. At present the fire department in the District of Columbia has a clerk at $1,000 a year, and there is a private detailed as assistant to the chief. This bill provides for two clerks at least, one a chief clerk, at $1.400 a year, and another clerk, at $1,200 a year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not want to take the time of the committee, but these two clerks, the chief clerk and the assistant clerk, take the place of a general superintendent who, in your city, gets $7,000 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, well, in my city there is a population of 4,000,000 people, with its immense wealth, to be looked after by the fire department.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And in this city there are over 300,000 people, with enormous property, the Government having large property interests here, to be taken care of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, it is as impossible to make a fair comparison between the fire department of Washington and the fire department required in the city of New York as it is to compare the annual budget of the two cities. But I was calling attention to this fact, that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, in their annual estimates this year and in the testimony that they submitted before the Committee on Appropriations, did not ask an additional clerk, but only asked that the clerk they had have an increase of $200 in salary; and yet this bill contains a provision for a chief clerk at $1,400 a year and another clerk at $1,200 a year.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Commissioners did ask for a superintendent, at $4,000, and instead of granting the request the committee gave them these two clerks.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Commissioners asked the gentleman's committee not only to provide a chief of the fire department, but also to provide a superintendent to take care of the administration of the fire department. The gentleman's committee very sensibly, I believe, found that it was unnecessary to have a superintendent; that one of the Commissioners in effect is the superintendent of the department, and so they disallowed this unnecessary additional officer. I see that the Commissioner of the District, the chairman of the Commission, in his statement before the committee, stated that they had a clerk at $1,000 a year, and they asked that his compensation be increased to $1,200, but they asked for no additional clerk; and yet this bill provides a chief clerk at $1,400 and a clerk at $1,200. I desire to call these things to the attention of the committee because I intend to ask the committee to disagree with these two items.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Is that the only objection the gentleman has to the bill? I think we could save time if the gentleman will call attention to the objections he has and let us vote upon them and agree to the remainder of the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Those are the only two things I object to at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that that provision be read, so that we can get a vote upon these amendments at this time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Kansas ought to explain what the bill is and what it does. It seems to increase a large number of salaries, and I do not think it is ordinarily customary for the House to increase a great number of salaries without some explanation. It isn't necessary for the gentleman to look at the clock, because if a number of people who wish to have their salaries increased can get them increased by looking at the clock clocks would be in demand.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will say to my friend from Illinois that I have not supported a bill on the floor of the House upon which I would more gladly make an extended statement than on this bill, but the hour is late, and I can say in a very few words what the general purpose of the bill is. It is to create a permanent fire department and increase the salaries of the men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, it is evident that the consideration of this bill will take half an hour more.

Mr. MANN. It will take all of that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is after 5 o'clock, and I suggest that the committee rise. I am perfectly willing to have the bill acted upon, and thought it would take only five minutes. It has now already taken twenty-four minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Illinois be satisfied if what I have to say on the bill is printed in the RECORD, and I have it on the desk in the morning?

Mr. MANN. Most certainly not. While I am always entertained by reading the speeches of the gentleman from Kansas, I prefer to have the House hear what the gentleman from Kansas has to say as to why these salaries should be raised. I know of no Government employee but would like to have his salary raised. If there be reason for this, the House ought to know not only what the increases are, but why they are made.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The reason for asking for the passage of this bill is that the firemen of the District of Columbia have not had an increase of salary since 1878. They are the lowest paid public servants in the District of Columbia. They are paid lower wages now than policemen are paid. We increased the salary of the policemen three months ago in the House, and we agreed to the Senate amendment to that bill today. The men in the fire department get, on an average, a lower wage than any of the public servants in the District. They have to live near the fire stations; they are on duty twenty-four hours in the day; they are called upon to do most hazardous work; their expenses are high by reason of their high rent, by reason of the clothing they have to provide for themselves, and there is every argument in support of the increase of salaries that are provided for in this bill. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that of the $83,000 increase all but $4,600 goes to the men, the other $4,600 to the higher officers.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that the House is entitled to know what the increases proposed are. There is nothing here to show the House as to what the increases are. I notice that assistant drivers in the bill have their salaries raised to $1,100. It may be perfectly proper for aught I know, although there are hundreds of drivers in this city who would be glad to receive a salary of two-thirds of that.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If the gentleman will suspend, I will tell just what the increases are. The chief engineer is increased from $2,500 to $3,500.

Mr. MANN. That is a thousand dollars increase.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The deputy chief engineer, from $1,500 to $2,500; battalion chiefs, there being three, from $1,200 to $2,000; fire marshal, from $1,600 to $2,000; deputy fire marshal, a new office created, at $1,400 a year; inspectors, two of them, at $1,080 a year; chief clerk, at $1,400; clerk, at $1,200, being an increase of $200; captains, and there are twenty-nine of them, and we create no new ones, are increased from $1,000 to $1,400; lieutenants, and there are thirty of them, are increased from $900 to $1,200; superintendent of machinery is increased from $1,000 to $1,400; assistant superintendent, $1,200; engineers, eighteen in number, are increased from $1,000 to $1,150; assistant engineers, eighteen of them, are increased from $900 to $1,100; marine engineer is increased from $1,000 to $1,500. I will say for the benefit of the committee that we have one marine engineer. Assistant marine engineer, from $900 to $1,100.

Mr. MANN. What is the marine engineer?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He is in charge of the fire boat on the Potomac River and patrols the river front. There are thirty assistant drivers. These men have their salaries increased from $900 to $1,100. Privates in class 2, 196 of them, are increased from $900 to $1,080; watchmen formerly, now class 1, 29 in number, are increased from $720 to $960. The total number of men whose salaries are affected is 367, there being an increase of five men created by this bill. The total increase in the salaries, all told, is $83,490. That is, in brief, what we do in this bill, and I will say if this bill becomes a law, our fire department is still below the pay given to fire departments in cities of similar size throughout the country.

Mr. MANN. Did I understand the gentleman to refer to watchmen?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, Yes. That is what is now the lowest class of fireman.

Mr. MANN. What are the watchmen?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. They have been denominated heretofore as watchmen. We make them class 1 by this bill.

Mr. MANN. What are their duties?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Their duties are very similar to the duties of firemen in class 2. They are the apprentices, if you please. They are those who enter new upon the service.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman a little while ago to say that the chief clerk was to take the place of somebody else when absent.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The Commissioners asked for a general superintendent of the fire department. We have here twenty-nine fire stations and over a million and a quarter of dollars' worth of property. There are large estimates to be made, orders and requisitions made constantly. There is a large correspondence growing out of the relations of the fire department to the business of the District, and we provided these clerks instead of this general superintendent, who was to have charge of the business of the fire department.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say a while ago—I ask whether I was mistaken—that these chief clerks fill the duty of some other officer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The chief clerk will, in the absence of the fire chief, be in charge of the office.

Mr. MANN. What do you call the fire chief? How is he designated here?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The chief engineer.

Mr. MANN. So that a chief clerk is to take the place of a chief engineer?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. He will be in the engineer's office constantly, and look after the business of the fire department, keeping the property and the books of the department.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the gentleman does not really mean that the chief clerk will take the place of the chief engineer in the absence of the chief engineer.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not say he would take charge of fires or anything of that sort; but he is to be in the office and in charge of the office in the absence of the chief engineer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that it is a rather unusual thing to bring before the House at this time in the day a proposition to increase salaries, one from $2,500 to $3,500 and another from $1,500 to $2,500, and other salaries correspondingly. This House would debate for half an hour or more, if it had the opportunity, on an appropriation bill, a proposition to increase the salary of one individual at a thousand dollars per year. It is a very unusual thing to increase a salary $1,000, a salary of these grades, and it is always a matter of suspicion to me when a bill comes before the House urged by a particular department and the head of it to find that the chief officials of that department are the ones who received the highest raises in the salaries. I can very well understand how the chief engineer of the fire department is in favor of this bill, when his salary is increased from $2,500 to $3,500 per year and the assistant engineer from $1,500 to $2,500 per year, almost a doubling of the salary in his case. I think that the committee ought to give the House an opportunity to consider these propositions upon their merits and not bring it before the House at this time in the evening when it is certainly impossible to consider them item by item, or each one on its merits.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, if the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I think this felonious assault has gone far enough. Can not the gentleman move that the committee rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am still hoping to get this bill out. I have been trying to get it considered for more than a month.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I hope that the gentleman will move that the committee rise.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman there have been men in Washington hoping to get their salaries increased ever since I have been in Washington who have not yet received a hearing in the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Let me say this: The men who are more affected by this bill than the gentleman from Illinois or myself or any Member of the House—the residents and taxpayers of the District of Columbia—are heartily in favor of every provision in this bill and of every increase that is provided for here, and have been urging that the bill be given early and favorable consideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I move——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will not the gentleman move that the committee rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, I think now that——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the committee rise. It is evident you will have to go into each one of these increases, and it will take an hour.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That will be in two weeks from now, and I fear Congress will adjourn before we can secure the passage of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Congress will not have adjourned in two weeks; let the gentleman from Kansas make the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would rather the gentleman himself would make the motion. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the bill to preserve birds in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on expenses in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the same privilege will be accorded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DALZELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4464) to classify the officers and members of the fire department of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution; and also had had under consideration the bill (S. 1243) providing for compulsory education in the District of Columbia, and had instructed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended do pass.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17758. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River in the county of Morrison, State of Minnesota;

H. R. 18026. An act permitting the building of a dam across the Mississippi River near the city of Bemidji, Beltrami County, Minn.;

H. R. 19473. An act authorizing the use of the waters in Coosa River at Lock No. 4, in Alabama; and

H. R. 18439. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across Tallahatchie River in Tallahatchie County, Miss.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 584. An act for the relief of David H. Moffat.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, House bill of the following title with Senate amendments was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

H. R. 18537. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907—to the Committee on Agriculture.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill S. 1243 and amendments to its final passage.

The question was taken; and the previous question was ordered.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This bill is now in the attitude where it will go over as unfinished business until to-morrow, and I hope therefore, that the motion to adjourn will be made now. It will not prejudice the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not sure whether it will go over until to-morrow or go over until two weeks from to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The previous question has been ordered, and that sends it over until to-morrow. The Chair ruled upon that two or three days ago.

The SPEAKER. Not on District of Columbia day. There is a peculiar rule as to the District of Columbia that set everybody at sixes and sevens until it was examined on another question; but the House, of course, will choose whatever course it desires to pursue, and when the question arises the Chair will decide it.

Mr. BABCOCK. I would like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] if there is any objection to taking the vote now?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the objection is that we would have to stay here until we called the roll.

Mr. BABCOCK. Then, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the regular order will go on.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) the House divided; and there were—ayes 101, noes 12.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the point of order that there is no quorum present, I suggest that we had better adjourn. I reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. There is nothing to reserve that the Chair can see that the point of order would apply to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The ayes have it, and the bill——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The reservation did not last a great while. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the reservation would have lasted, and I want the Speaker to understand now that I have the right to reserve the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms will close the doors and bring in absentees, the Clerk will call the roll, and those in favor of the passage of the bill will, as their names are called, answer "aye," and those opposed will answer "no," and those present and not voting will answer "present."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am perfectly willing that it should come from there.

The question was taken; and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 164, nays 1, answered "present" 27, not voting 190, as follows:

The following additional pairs were announced:

For the balance of the day:

Mr. MCCARTHY with Mr. RHINOCK.

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama.

On this vote:

Mr. SHERMAN with Mr. RIXEY.

Mr. LITTAUER with Mr. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. BROOKS of Colorado with Mr. TALBOTT.

After an interval,

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It will be necessary that this motion should be seconded by a majority of the Members present.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. Twelve gentlemen have seconded the motion; not in the opinion of the Chair——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not a third.

The SPEAKER. Not a majority, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the Chair counted us merely numerically, merely in numbers, or otherwise?

Mr. MANN. Not in this case.

The SPEAKER. On this motion, under the Constitution——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

The SPEAKER. In numbers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to know whether the House measured us who stood up numerically or otherwise; that is all.

Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules of the House and the warrant of the Speaker, I present at the bar of the House, under arrest, Mr. BUCKMAN and Mr. RUCKER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. OLMSTED). The gentlemen will be noted as present under the rule and discharged from arrest.

Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to vote?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to emphasize the fact that I am present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to vote?

Mr. BUCKMAN. I vote "yea."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to change my vote from "present" to "yea."

The name of Mr. RUCKER was called and he voted "yea."

Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules of the House and the warrant of the Speaker, I present at the bar of the House, under arrest, Messrs. MURPHY and SULLOWAY.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen will be noted present under the rule and discharged from arrest. Does the gentleman from New Hampshire desire to vote?

Mr. SULLOWAY. He does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman from New Hampshire.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SULLOWAY, and he voted "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to vote?

Mr. MURPHY. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MURPHY, and he voted "aye."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER. A parliamentary inquiry, if it is parliamentary. I should like to know why the Sergeant-at-Arms is so diligent in the last few minutes, when he has not been pursuing this course all the time? He can take myself and one of my honored colleagues from Missouri, one of the best men in this House, and make a parade. Other gentlemen are brought in here in the usual way in which it has been done here for many years, without any criticism or any record made against them. I should like the Chair to tell me, if he knows, why the Sergeant-at-Arms is guilty of this gross abuse of his power and foul discrimination?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The Sergeant-at-Arms is in the discharge of his duty, so far as the Chair is able to determine. The only business in order now is to obtain a quorum.

Mr. RUCKER. With all respect to the Chair, I want to say that I think the Chair is indulging in an assumption. I think the Sergeant-at-Arms has not done his duty.

Mr. LILLEY of Pennsylvania. Would it not be well for the gentleman from Missouri to refer his complaint to the minority leader of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is hardly in order. Nothing is in order except the ascertainment of a quorum.

Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules of the House and the warrant of the Speaker, I present at the bar of the House, under arrest, Messrs. GAINES of Tennessee, WALLACE, and WILEY of Alabama.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentlemen will be noted present and discharged from arrest. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] desire to vote?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to vote?

Mr. WILEY of Alabama. I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to vote?

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I left here after 6 o'clock, having voted on the roll call. I do not know whether this is a new call or not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. See if the gentleman is recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the gentleman is recorded as having voted on this call.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the proceedings, as regards the gentleman from Arkansas, ought to be vacated.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RUCKER. Was the Sergeant-at-Arms directed by the Speaker to arrest the whole membership of the House?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and the present occupant of the chair is unable to state.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the Sergeant-at-Arms is authorized to arrest a man after he has voted on the roll call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter which can be attended to when the presence of a quorum has been ascertained. At the present time nothing is in order except the ascertainment of a quorum.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. Under the rule is it not in order for the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in all absent Members, whether they have voted or not? Their duty is to stay here until the House adjourns.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is a matter which, it seems to the present occupant of the chair, is not debatable or to be considered until a quorum is ascertained.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that when I left here it was nearly 6 o'clock, and I left to look after a very sick brother, my own brother, who is very ill. I make no further apologies to the House or to anybody else, under these circumstances, for being absent.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make not exactly a parliamentary inquiry, but more of an omnibus inquiry. Has the Sergeant-at-Arms a right to arrest a Member after he is inside of the building—coming with his tongue out and his hat in his hand to help to make up a quorum?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that is not a parliamentary inquiry, and it is a matter which in any event can not be disposed of until a quorum has been ascertained.

Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the rules of the House and the warrant of the Speaker, I present to the bar of the House Mr. SULZER.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will be noted as present and discharged from arrest. Does the gentleman from New York desire to vote?

Mr. SULZER. I do.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. SULZER and he voted "aye," as above recorded.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make another inquiry. Was this a requisition to arrest Democrats only? I did not see any Sergeant-at-Arms with the gentleman from Michigan who just came in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that that is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. It is proper for the Chair to say, however, that although he has not personally seen the warrant, it was not confined to one side of the House or the other, as gentlemen upon both sides of the Chamber have been brought in.

Mr. YOUNG. I want to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Tennessee, that I merely escaped the officer.

The SPEAKER. Upon this vote the ayes are 164, the noes 1, present 27—a quorum. The doors will be opened, and the bill is passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GARRETT asked for leave of absence indefinitely on account of sickness is his family.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the request be granted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, during the afternoon the strict rule of the House bringing Members before the bar of the House during the call for a quorum has been, for the first time in the life of this Congress, put into operation. A great many Members of the House who have served here several terms did not understand the operation of that rule; and in consequence of their not having understood it, in consequence of its not being strictly enforced hitherto, I think it would be well that the proceedings in bringing Members before the bar should be vacated and not appear in either the RECORD or the Journal.

I shall ask unanimous consent that so much of the proceedings of the afternoon as relate to bringing Members before the bar under arrest because of absence while the call of the House was being made, in order to procure a quorum, be vacated and that the Journal and the RECORD be silent as to those proceedings.

Mr. PAYNE. I think, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to that request. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. RUCKER. To make a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has moved to adjourn.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, was my request put?

The SPEAKER. Before the Chair could put the question the gentleman from New York objected.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then we shall have to vote down that motion to adjourn, in order to get the request before the House.

The question on the motion to adjourn was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were 56 ayes and 23 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. DANIEL. I am directed by the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5825) to authorize the United States Government to participate in the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, on the shores of Hampton Roads, in Norfolk County, Va., in the year 1907, and to appropriate money in aid thereof, to report it with two amendments. I beg leave to say that at a convenient season I will offer an extended report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HALE. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18750) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I give notice that I shall call up the bill for consideration at an early day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

PANAMA CANAL.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. President, on the 9th day of last January the Senate adopted a resolution directing the Committee on Interoceanic Canals to investigate all matters relating to the Panama Canal, and pursuant thereto the committee, on January 11, began its hearings, holding sessions almost continuously up to the present time.

The testimony will embrace four or five large printed volumes, compiled for the use of the Senate. One of these volumes is devoted almost exclusively to the testimony of eminent engineers who were questioned at length upon the subject of type of canal, most of them having an intimate knowledge of physical conditions along the canal. The minority members of the committee believe that the engineers whose opinions are given in the volume mentioned are men of acknowledged ability in their profession, and that the volume throws important light on the question of type of canal. We hope that every Senator may find time to scan its pages.

The minority members of the committee did not expect the majority report of the committee on type of canal would be presented until the views of the minority could be prepared for the use of the Senate.

The delay in formulating the views of the minority was unavoidable. They are presented in the hope that every Senator may give them most careful consideration.

The views of the minority of the committee on type of canal I now present, and ask that they be printed. In addition to the usual number of copies, I ask that 2,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. The bill together with the report of the majority and the views of the minority?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks that, in addition to the usual number, 2,000 additional copies of the views of the minority, the report of the majority, and the bill reported from the Committee on Isthmian Canals be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. That includes both reports?

Mr. MILLARD. It includes both reports.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order to print is made.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That 2,000 additional copies of report No. 3626 on S. 6191, to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans and the method of construction, together with the views of the minority, be printed for the use of the Senate.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 1442) to increase the efficiency of the militia and promote rifle practice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business has not been closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, under existing law a joint committee exists to examine useless papers in the Departments, and under the present system every time a report comes in from the head of a Department that committee is called together to examine that particular report. It has occurred to me that it would be wise to amend the law so as to make a joint standing committee that could in its discretion take jurisdiction of those reports and from time to time submit their reports to Congress. For that purpose I introduce a bill, and as I feel sure that there can be no objection to it I ask that it be considered without reference to a committee. I ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 6321) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," approved February 16, 1889, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March 2, 1895, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments, approved February 1, 1889, and the act amendatory thereof, approved March, 2, 1895, be amended to read as follows:

"That whenever there shall be, now or hereafter, in any one of the Executive Departments of the Government, or in the various public buildings under the control of the several Executive Departments of the Government, an accumulation of files of papers which are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of such Department and have no permanent value or historical interest, it shall be the duty of the head of such Department to submit to Congress a report of that fact, accompanied by a concise statement of the condition and character of such papers. And at the beginning of each Congress it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer of the Senate to appoint two Senators and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives to appoint two Representatives, and the Senators and Representatives so appointed shall constitute a joint committee, to which shall be referred such report or reports, with the accompanying statement of the condition and character of such papers, and such joint committee shall meet and examine such report or reports and statement and the papers therein described and submit to the Senate and House, respectively, from time to time, a report of such examination and their recommendation. And if they report that such files of papers, or any part thereof, are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of such Department, and have no permanent value or historical interest, then it shall be the duty of such head of the Department to sell as waste paper or otherwise dispose of such files of papers upon the best obtainable terms, after due publication of notice inviting proposals therefor, and receive and pay the proceeds thereof into the Treasury of the United States and make report thereof to Congress."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. How does the bill now under consideration get before the Senate? By unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire introduced it and asked unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Chair heard no objection, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If no amendment be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RELIEF TO TOBACCO GROWERS.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. President, a bill passed the House of Representatives March 6, 1906, for the relief of tobacco growers, and it was laid before the Senate March 7, 1906, and referred to the Committee on Finance, and it has been in that committee for about three months. This is a very important bill. It was prepared by Hon. John W. Yerkes, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and reported to the House of Representatives by Mr. DALZELL of Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, and passed the House of Representatives unanimously. In the report is the statement that—

No annoyance will arise, so far as the execution of the laws is concerned and in the proper administration of departmental affairs in the Internal Revenue Bureau.

This bill is very important to my constituents. I have received a number of letters about it. As it has been in the Committee on Finance about three months, I ask that some member of the committee inform me—I have no other way of arriving at this information—when action will be taken upon it?

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. PENROSE. Let the regular order be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair did not distinctly hear the Senator from Kentucky. For what purpose did he rise?

Mr. McCREARY. I rose for the purpose of making an inquiry—I have no other way of obtaining the information—as to when the Committee on Finance will report this bill, after holding it for nearly three months. Unless some member of the committee will inform me—

Mr. HALE. What committee has the bill?

Mr. McCREARY. The Committee on Finance has the bill. It is a bill for the relief of tobacco growers. I believe the Senator from Maine is a member of the committee.

Mr. HALE. The chairman of the committee is not present.

Mr. BAILEY. Perhaps the honorable Senator from Kentucky could tell us to what subcommittee of the Committee on Finance the bill was referred.

Mr. McCREARY. I suppose the record will show. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], was, I remember, a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] is also a member of the Committee on Finance, and I suppose——

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The bill is not before the Senate at the present time, and I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is not before the Senate. The regular order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the regular order.

Mr. McCREARY. I desire to ask if I am not entitled to some information from the Committee on Finance in regard to this bill?

Mr. PENROSE. I ask for the regular order. That information could be asked if the bill was before the Senate. It is not before the Senate at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Kentucky could ask unanimous consent to make the inquiry.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Otherwise the Chair is of opinion that the only matter in order is the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. HALE. Let the Senator from Kentucky ask for unanimous consent.

Mr. McCREARY. I ask unanimous consent that some member of the Committee on Finance—I notice that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] are present—shall inform me what action has been taken by that committee on the bill within the last three months.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania consent to the inquiry made by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PENROSE. I will yield to a question and answer, but not to a running discussion regarding a bill which is not before the Senate and concerning which nobody appears to have definite information.

Mr. McCREARY. This is a very important bill to my constituents, and I have received a great many letters about it. Therefore, as the bill has been in the committee nearly three months, I should like to know the prospect of a report upon it. It passed the House of Representatives unanimously. It was prepared by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I object. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania demands the regular order. If there are no further bills or joint resolutions, concurrent or other resolutions are in order.

INTRODUCTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to give notice that tomorrow, if possible, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider the report which I made on Friday of an amendment to the rules.

CONFEREE ON STATEHOOD BILL.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, some time since the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] was to be absent from the city and resigned from the committee of conference on the statehood bill. The senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] was appointed in his place. The senior Senator from Nevada requested me to ask the Senate to excuse him from further attendance on that committee, as he has left the city. I ask that that may be done, and that some one be appointed in his place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Colorado? If not, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] will be excused from further service upon the conference committee. The Chair appoints in his place the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

AGRICULTURAL REPORTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of the United States of the 28th instant, requesting the President, "if not incompatible with the public interests, to transmit to the Senate the reports of the Keep Commission on Department methods relating to official crop statistics and the investigation of the Twelfth Census Report on Agriculture," I transmit herewith said reports.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 29, 1906.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13193. An act to prohibit the killing of wild birds and wild animals in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 16953, being the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 25, line 21, after the word "shall," strike out "deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service" and insert:

Consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

So as to make the clause read:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the proposed amendment insert:

Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated or any part thereof unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no objection to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask that the amendment be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire the amendment to the amendment read or the amendment of the committee?

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if this is in addition to the proviso as proposed by the committee?

Mr. MALLORY. No; I do not intend it to be so. I intend it to go in as a substitute for the amendment. I did not hear it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator offer it as a substitute?

Mr. MALLORY. As a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Senator from Pennsylvania understand the amendment to be in the nature of a substitute?

Mr. PENROSE. I understood it to be an amendment to the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was so treated, but the Chair now understands that the Senator from Florida offers it as a substitute.

Mr. MALLORY. I did not catch the remark of the Chair when he addressed the Senator from Pennsylvania or I would have called attention to the fact that I intended it as a substitute.

Mr. PENROSE. I am willing to accept it as a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read. We were not able to hear it in this part of the Chamber, owing to the confusion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment in the nature of a substitute. The Chair desires the attention of the Senator from Florida. It is not quite clear as to what the effect of it is.

Mr. MALLORY. Let the Secretary send the amendment back to me.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to call to the attention——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois rise to this amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; what I was going to call to the attention of the Senate is the committee amendment on page 17, lines 3, 4, and 5.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois for that purpose as soon as the Senator from Florida has perfected his proposed amendment.

Mr. MALLORY. The proposition which I make is to offer the amendment I send up in lieu of the entire proviso.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Beginning on line 19, page 25?

Mr. MALLORY. Beginning on line 19, after the word "Provided," so as to read:

Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated or any part thereof unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed amendment to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Provided," in line 19, page 25, strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert:

That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated or any part thereof unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks to the Senate upon the committee amendment as proposed to be amended by the substitute of the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY].

As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Florida, if his substitute is adopted the Postmaster-General would not be required to make any investigation or any finding as to whether this appropriation and its expenditure for the purposes provided are necessary or wise. It is a very important inquiry, which ought to be made by the Department, in view of the testimony of the Postmaster-General and his Second Assistant, as to whether this appropriation is needed at all, as to whether equally good service can not be secured without it—indeed, as to whether better service can not be secured without it.

Now, Mr. President, there are three great trunk lines running between Washington and Atlanta—the Coast Line, the Seaboard Air Line, and the Southern Railway. It is a matter of common experience that where there are several lines connecting two points, if the postal service is supplied by competition, generally a good service, an efficient service, a sufficient service is secured and the people living on the several lines get the benefit of competitive service, whereas if the mails are provided for by special arrangements with one line the people along that line get greater benefits, while those along the other lines get lesser benefits.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to say that I think the Senator is inaccurate in saying that the Coast Line reaches Atlanta.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should have said the Southern and the Seaboard Air Line.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he was entirely inaudible in this part of the Chamber. I should like to be somewhat familiar with the discussion. Will the Senator please speak a little louder?

Mr. BACON. I suggested to the Senator from North Carolina that he was inaccurate in stating that the Coast Line reached Atlanta. It does not.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is entirely right. I should have confined my statement to the Southern and the Seaboard.

Now, Mr. President, it was in evidence before the committee that by reason of this special contract with the Southern the through mail, which is a very lucrative part of the transportation business of this as of other parts of the country, is thrown, as the result of that arrangement, to this particular line, to the practical exclusion of the other, thereby denying its competitor equal opportunity to secure its pro rata part of that traffic, and taking away, therefore, the inducement to provide more rapid schedules for the purpose of securing in competition a part of this business.

The item in the existing law and in this bill as it came from the House reads as follows:

For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Mr. President, this particular item in the post-office appropriation bill has been in the law in one form or another ever since, I think, 1881. I do not know exactly what time the proviso was placed in the law; and when I say the proviso I do not mean the one under consideration, but the one which is in the law as it is now and in the bill as it came from the House.

Several years ago at least Congress seems to have come to the conclusion that possibly there was some doubt about whether this particular appropriation was needed in order to give the South, and especially that part of the South served by the Southern Railway, sufficient and adequate facilities. For the purpose of putting that question to the test, for the purposes, I assume, of getting a ruling of the Postmaster-General after an investigation upon this question, Congress conditioned that appropriation upon the finding of the Postmaster-General that it was needed in the interest of the postal service.

Notwithstanding this expression of Congressional doubt, notwithstanding this direction made to the Postmaster-General to inquire and ascertain before he spent any part of this appropriation whether it was needed or not, the present Postmaster-General declared to the committee at its recent hearings that he had made no such investigation and that he was not prepared to say whether this appropriation was needed or not in the interest of the postal service.

I wish to read from the testimony of the present Postmaster-General before the committee with reference to the proviso in the present law:

Senator SIMMONS. I notice in this item there is a proviso. It says: "For necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, $142,728.75: Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service."

Did you give full effect to that proviso, and did you reach the conclusion that it was necessary to enter into this contract with these railroads in order to promote the interest of the postal service, or did you ignore that proviso and proceed upon the theory that Congress had made the appropriation and intended you should employ the service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Largely, I understand, upon the theory that Congress had made the appropriation and desired the service rendered. Is that correct, General?

Referring to the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Shallenberger.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is correct, in my judgment. The Department having exercised its discretion under the proviso and notified Congress of the manner in which the discretion was exercised and the specific routes on which it was exercised, the terminal points between which the discretion was exercised having been named in the appropriation of Congress to provide a special and additional service, the Department, I repeat, had to assume that the special service was desired, and provided for it.

Senator SIMMONS. I will ask General Shallenberger if that did not necessarily involve your ignoring absolutely this proviso?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think not.

Senator SIMMONS. Then did you consider this proviso and reach the conclusion, independently of the fact that Congress had made the appropriation, that this service was necessary to promote the interest of the postal service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We reached the conclusion that it was not, in our judgment, necessary to provide adequate service, but that it was a specially expedited service which Congress desired.

Senator SIMMONS. Then you did reach the conclusion that it was necessary to promote the interest of the postal service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the judgment of the Department, not; in the judgment of Congress, yes.

Senator SIMMONS. Then there was a conflict between the judgment of the Department and the judgment of Congress, as you viewed it?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. None whatever. We never have a conflict. We simply accept the judgment of Congress.

Senator SIMMONS. You accepted the judgment of Congress and you did not act upon your own judgment?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We preferred to act upon the wisdom of Congress.

Senator SIMMONS. Then you think the law, as now expressed, is in the nature of a direction for you to employ the extra service?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. We do.

Senator SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Postmaster-General whether, if Congress shall by a proviso make it clear that it intends the Postmaster-General shall exercise his discretion as to whether this service is necessary, he would not then act upon his discretion instead of assuming that Congress meant to direct him to contract for this facility service by simply making the appropriation?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. In reply to that I will say—it does not answer your question directly—that the Postmaster-General would prefer not to have that discretion lodged in him, for the general reason

I have already given. If Congress sees fit to lodge in the Postmaster-General that discretion, he will exercise it.

Senator SIMMONS. I understand, Mr. Postmaster-General, that you do not express directly the opinion that this service is not needed.

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I am not prepared altogether to say that it is not needed.

Senator SIMMONS. You are not prepared to say that it is needed?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. No.

So, Mr. President, it is perfectly plain that up to this time the Post-Office Department has regarded the fact that Congress has made an appropriation not of a round sum, but of a sum run out to the very cent, which has heretofore been paid under the contract for this service; that Congress meant to say to the Department, notwithstanding this proviso, "Give this money to the railroads;" and under this construction of the law—a construction which, in my judgment, amounted to a nullification of the proviso—the Department has year after year made the contract without any investigation or finding as to whether the expenditure was necessary to promote the interest of the postal service. Now, Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Postmaster-General stated to the committee that he did not know whether this appropriation was needed or not, in view of the fact that he expressed in the way of an intimation the suggestion that possibly a better service could be secured without this appropriation as the result of the competition between the two systems, it occurred to me that Congress ought to make its purpose and its intent so direct and so mandatory that it would be impossible for the Postmaster-General to ignore in the determination of this question the requirement of Congress that he should not spend the money unless it was found necessary in order to promote the interest of the service.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Knowing the opinion or view of the Postmaster-General, as the Senator has just expressed it, does not the practical result of this amendment, if adopted, stop the present system as now conducted?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will answer the Senator that the Postmaster-General did not express the positive opinion that the appropriation was or was not necessary—was or was not needed.

Mr. FOSTER. Is not that the purpose and intention of the amendment?

Mr. SIMMONS. It is not the purpose and the intention, so far as I am concerned, as the Senator will see if he will wait until I have finished my remarks with reference to this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator yield to another question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield further to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator asks me another question will he permit me to finish my answer?

The Postmaster-General was particularly guarded in not expressing an opinion as to whether this appropriation was necessary or not. I presented the question to him in several different forms with a view to eliciting an opinion, if he had a definite opinion on that subject, and each time, as I recall, he left the matter in doubt, saying finally that he did not know, because he had never made an investigation; and he had not made an investigation because he thought no discretion was lodged in him by the law as written. If the Postmaster-General or the Post-Office Department were as hostile to this special service as the Senator seems to believe, I think the language of the existing proviso would have furnished ample excuse and justification for its discontinuance, and the fact that in face of that language it has been continued shows that the Department is not bent upon its destruction if opportunity offers.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. With the permission of the Senator, I should like to read a question and answer or two on page 57 of the testimony which the Senator did not read, in which it seemed to me that the Postmaster-General did express a very positive opinion.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think not. I will hear the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The following question was asked by the Senator:

Senator SIMMONS. I discover that you do not this year estimate for this service, and probably you have not estimated for it for many years past. Why do you not estimate for it?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. We have not estimated for it because of the principle involved. It appears to be a discrimination in favor of a road or of a section of the country. Personally, I am not in favor of anything in the nature of a special privilege to a road or to a section.

Senator SIMMONS. Do you mean, by not estimating for it, to recommend against the appropriation?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I do.

Senator SIMMONS. You are the responsible head.

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. You have been speaking of the attitude of the Department for several years.

Senator SIMMONS. Then, I will confine the question to this year. In not estimating for it this year do you mean to recommend against that service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

At the bottom of page 58 he said, in response to a question by the Senator from North Carolina:

Senator SIMMONS. Simply that you did not wish a discriminating service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

Senator SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask you, General, the direct question: In your judgment, is the appropriation for this service necessary in order to secure proper mail facilities in the section of country served?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I think not.

It seemed to me that that was pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is not a correct interpretation, in my judgment, of the position of the Postmaster-General. The Postmaster-General made it very clear in the colloquy which the Senator has just read that his opposition to this appropriation was the same as that expressed by Postmaster-General Wanamaker many years before, to wit, that it introduced into the postal service what he called a "disturbing element," by granting a preferential service in one section of the country. That was the reason, as I understood the Postmaster-General, why he was opposed to it. He said if this special service could be extended so as to include the whole country, so as to give all the people of the country the benefit of a like special service of like expedition of the mails, where it could not be secured by competition, then, as I understood him, his objection would be removed, because, as the Senator read a little while ago, when I asked the Postmaster-General, referring to the objection he had just stated—to wit, that it gave special privileges to a certain section of the country—"Is that your chief objection to it?" he said "Yes," or a like answer; I forget the exact language.

Mr. President, the Postmaster-General, I think, while he did say in the answer read by the Senator that he did not consider the service necessary, at another point in his testimony, as well as in the part I read a few moments ago, he qualified that statement by saying that he was not prepared to express a positive and definite opinion as to whether it "was needed or not needed," because he had not thoroughly investigated it and because he thought equally good service might be secured in another way. Here is what the Postmaster-General said, with reference to this matter, on page 59 of the hearings:

Senator SIMMONS. If that appropriation is not made, will it, in your judgment, materially affect the mail facilities of that section of the country?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I can not answer that question, because we have not made a sufficient investigation of the matter to enable me to do so.

Mr. President, returning to the subject of the proviso in the present law and the substitute proviso offered by me, I want to read from the colloquy which took place in committee between the Postmaster-General and myself with reference to that proviso:

Senator SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Postmaster-General whether, if Congress shall by a proviso make it clear that it intends the Postmaster-General shall exercise his discretion as to whether this service is necessary, he would not then act upon his discretion instead of assuming that Congress meant to direct him to contract for this facility service by simply making the appropriation?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. In reply to that I will say—it does not answer your question directly—that the Postmaster-General would prefer not to have that discretion lodged in him, for the general reason I have already given. If Congress sees fit to lodge in the Postmaster-General that discretion, he will exercise it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator permit an interruption?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. Is it the purpose of the Senator's amendment to lodge this descretion in the Postmaster-General?

Mr. SIMMONS. The purpose of my amendment is twofold, Mr. President. First, it requires that the Postmaster-General shall investigate the facts and determine and find whether this service is necessary to secure needed mail expedition in this particular section of the country. I do not regard that as a discretion; I regard that as a duty, judicial in its character, which is vested in the Postmaster-General.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Secondly, if the Senator from Louisiana will indulge me a moment further, if, after this investigation, the Postmaster-General finds that the service is needed, then the proviso which I have introduced provides that he shall pay for the service no greater sum than it is reasonably worth. In other words, I want the facts found, and if the service is to be continued, I want to put it upon a business basis and to pay for it what it is worth, and no more.

Mr. FOSTER. The final analysis, as I understand, of the Senator's contention is that Congress is to confer arbitrary power upon the Postmaster-General to say whether or not these postal facilities shall be accorded to the southern country?

Mr. SIMMONS. Congress is not to confer upon the Postmaster-General any arbitrary power, Mr. President, but is to confer upon him the same power to investigate and to determine in this matter of mail transportation as the general law confers upon him with reference to the establishment of any mail facilities whatever—the same power the law confers upon him in the establishment of every rural mail route.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I am inclined to think that, on a close examination of this proviso as submitted by the committee, it will be found that the discretion confided to the Postmaster-General is wider than that which is contended for by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should be glad to have the Senator point out the respect in which he thinks it is wider.

Mr. MALLORY. The first thing submitted to the judgment of the Postmaster-General is whether an expedition of the mails is needed at all; he has to determine that. Then, after having determined that matter, which I think is clearly within the province of Congress, after he has determined that expedition in the mails is needed, then he also has to determine whether this expenditure is necessary to secure this needed expedition of the mails; in other words, he has first to determine a matter which is out of his province, which is clearly within the province of Congress, and, in addition to that, he has to determine a matter which is within his province, namely, as to the amount of the expenditure.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; the Senator is wrong about that. The Postmaster-General is not to determine the general and broad question of whether expedition of mails is needed. That is a question that has been determined by the country and Congress. It is the settled and fixed policy of the Government to spend whatever sums may be necessary to secure expeditious transmission and delivery of the mails. There is no necessity for any finding by any officer of the Government about that. The question for the Postmaster-General to determine in this case is not whether the mails should be expedited, but whether the particular conditions and circumstances surrounding this section of the country are such as to require facilities which can not be secured through the regular transportation mail rates; whether it is necessary that an expedition should be made in their behalf and that they should be given a service secured by an expenditure for mails that is not common to the whole country. The language of my proviso in that respect and the power conferred upon the Postmaster-General in that respect are not materially different from the power conferred upon the Postmaster-General in the present law, if the Postmaster-General had exercised that power. The present law provides:

> That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

The same quality of act is required of the Postmaster-General in my proviso, except under it he is to determine whether the expenditure is necessary to secure needed mail expedition in the section interested, and not whether this expenditure is needed in the interest of the postal service of the country as a whole, as in the case of the proviso now in the law. The language of the existing law is general, that in mine is specific; the one applies to the whole service, mine to the specific service provided for in the bill. I struck out the general language in the present proviso and substituted for it the more specific language used in my amendment, and thereby confined the investigation to determine whether it was necessary in order to secure needed expedition of the mails in the particular section interested; in other words, under the existing proviso the powers of the Postmaster-General in determining this matter require him to take into consideration the interests of the whole postal service of the country. I eliminated that because it was too broad and too comprehensive, and used language which brought it down to the specific case in hand, requiring him to make an investigation in order to determine whether this service was needed to give this particular section of the country proper mail facilities and expedition.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to ask the Senator if he intends, in the language he proposes, to substitute for that particular provision of law that the Postmaster-General shall find whether the expedition of the mail is needed, or whether the Postmaster-General shall find what is necessary to secure it?

Mr. SIMMONS. I intend that he shall find whether this extra expedition of the mails is needed in that part of the country.

Mr. MONEY. That he shall ascertain?

Mr. SIMMONS. He shall ascertain and determine if greater expedition is required than can be obtained through the regular mail service through the regular trains that run and carry the mails for usual mail transportation rates; that if he shall deem extra service and compensation is necessary, he shall secure that service by making a special contract, paying for it no more than its fair value. I want, in short, to divest this transaction of every possible feature of subsidy.

Mr. MONEY. That, of course, is the Senator's own view of it; but it is very apparent to my mind that he has left the broad discretion of the Postmaster-General, which belongs only to Congress, to determine whether or not expedition of these mails is necessary. If the Senator had confined his proviso simply to securing an expedition of the mails, that would have been very much better and would have presented another question.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator from Mississippi can so frame the proviso as to better accomplish my object, as I have stated it, I shall be perfectly willing to accept his suggestion.

Mr. MONEY. It would be very easy to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is absolutely necessary in the matter of the administration of the Departments to vest in the heads of these Departments large discretion—discretion which it might be proper for Congress to exercise, but which Congress can not exercise for reasons of convenience, and because of the fact that it meets only once a year and sits for only a few months at a time. We had the same difficulty here a few days ago in connection with the matter of rate making. Everybody conceded that Congress had the power to make railroad rates, everybody conceded that it was a proper function for Congress to make and fix such rates; but everybody said that this is a function, that it is a power, which, for reasons of convenience, Congress can not exercise, and therefore it must remit it to an administrative body to act for it. So the Post-Office Department is the administrative body of Congress with reference to matters of this character, and if Congress should undertake to exercise the discretion over these matters which the law lodged in it, instead of remitting it to the Post-Office Department, Congress would reduce itself to the level of a mere administrative body, and time which it should give to legislation in the interest of the whole country and people would be wasted on administrative details and routine.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. On page 26 of this bill I find the following provision:

> For continuing necessary and special facilities on trunk lines from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans., $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall deem such expenditure necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service.

Now, why discriminate in that case against the appropriation which is made in the provision now under consideration?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. FOSTER. In one instant I will yield to the Senator for a reply. The proviso is identical and I would like to have the Senator explain why this discrimination is made.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Louisiana, I will say that I have not discriminated, but the committee which reported this bill has made the discrimination. In the committee—if it is proper for me to refer to such matters—I will say to the Senator, when the committee adopted my proviso to the first section with reference to the Southern mail facilities item, I at once moved to strike out the proviso which the Senator has read, which applies to Kansas City and to Newton, and substituted for it the identical proviso which I offered, and which the committee adopted with reference to the Southern mail facilities. I think it ought to have been done. The committee overruled me in that matter, however.

I was going on, Mr. President, to show that, if this proviso is adopted, the Postmaster-General will exercise the functions which I am sure Congress intended he should exercise when it first attached the proviso in the existing law to this item, but which up to this time he has failed confessedly to exercise. Let me again read from the hearings before the committee:

Senator SIMMONS. I understand, Mr. Postmaster-General, that you do not express directly the opinion that this service is not needed.

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I am not prepared altogether to say that it is not needed.

Senator SIMMONS. You are not prepared to say that it is needed?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. No.

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose the committee by reason of your knowledge of the matter, you being supposed to understand this situation better than we do, shall say that we will recommend this sum or so much as may be necessary, and we will leave it with you to decide whether the conditions are such as to justify this expenditure. In that condition of things, would you hold that it was incumbent upon you to exercise your discretion and employ this service and spend this money or not, just as you might conclude the service was necessary and in the interest of the postal service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. To spend it or not as I thought was necessary?

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose this amendment should be adopted to strike out the present proviso and insert:

This is the first part of my proviso.

Mr. FOSTER. On what page is that?

Mr. SIMMONS. Page 65.

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider, and so find that such expenditure is necessary to promote the interest of the postal service.

That was afterwards changed in the regard that I have before specified.

If that proviso should be adopted in that form, would you not then consider it necessary and incumbent upon you to decide and to find, before you expended any part of this money, that the service was necessary in the interest of the postal service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose that proviso should proceed further and say—

Now, this is the second proposition in my proviso:

"And in such case, no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the service that shall be rendered by said trunk line or lines."

If there is any element of subsidy in this appropriation, if Congress should accompany this appropriation with that condition and that qualification and limitation and proviso, would you not consider it your duty then to put this contract upon the basis of a purely business transaction?

And that, Mr. President, is all I am after.

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir; in the interest of the postal service and the people of the whole country.

Mr. MONEY. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him again?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. MONEY. I do not want to interrupt the Senator unless it is perfectly agreeable to him.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly; I have no earthly objection. I want to discuss this matter fairly and do what is right about it.

Mr. MONEY. I am sure of that or I should not interrupt the Senator at all. I want to ask the Senator this question: Can the Senator tell me what does the Postmaster-General mean by "in the interest of the postal service?"

Mr. SIMMONS. I will explain to the Senator.

Mr. MONEY. I should be glad to have an explanation.

Mr. SIMMONS. It was the use of that language on the part of the Postmaster-General that caused me to so change my amendment as to make it, as I said a little while ago, more specific and bring it down to the case in hand, because I did not want the matter decided upon the consideration of an element that was not properly a factor in the question. I wanted it decided upon the consideration of the merits of the specific question, which question, as I understand, is whether it is necessary for the Government to spend this money to employ special trains in order to give that section of the country equal mail facilities with the other sections of the country, in order to put it, in other words, upon a parity with the rest of the country. Having that object in view, I changed my amendment. The Postmaster-General, as his language showed, seemed to think he had to determine the question with reference to the postal service of the whole country, and I thought it should be determined largely, though not altogether, with reference to the conditions and resulting interest of the particular section in question.

Mr. MONEY. That is very satisfactory. Now, with the Senator's permission, I should like to ask him another question.

Mr. SIMMONS. Which will show the Senator that I am desirous of having this question decided, and not as a general question, but as a particular question.

Mr. MONEY. Exactly. Now, I want to ask the Senator this question: In what sense is it a particular favor to the southern section of the country? The mails are carried from North to South and from South to North. Are not the cities along the northern connections of the road just as much benefited by the rapid transmission of correspondence as those in the South? Why, then, should it be regarded as a special favor to the South? Why not regard it as a special favor to the merchants of New York and Philadelphia and Baltimore, who will receive expedited orders for goods and communications in reply, just as well as those in the South?

Mr. SIMMONS. I catch the point of the Senator, and I say to the Senator that when I speak of facilities my purpose is to put the southern section of the country on a parity with the rest of the country in mail facilities, in order to give it needed and necessary mail expedition. I do not speak of it as a special favor to the southern section of the country. I agree with the Senator that not only that section is interested in securing every mail facility that may be needed in order to dispatch its business and in order to prevent any handicap upon its development, but it is of equal interest to every other part of the country that may have business transactions with the South or of people who may travel in that section of the country. In that sense, of course, the whole country is interested in it; but it was evident from the answer of the Postmaster-General, which I have just read, that the Postmaster-General had been considering this question only in connection with the whole postal service of the country. The question is not whether the South should have its mails expedited, but whether it is necessary, in addition to the regular transportation pay, to provide a special appropriation and hire extra trains to secure just and proper and equal expedition, and whether this service should be paid for on the basis of value received or of bounty.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator what reason, if any, was given or can be given for making the proviso in regard to one section different from the proviso that applies to another section for the same kind of service?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator refers to the Kansas City proposition. No reason under the sun, in my judgment, can be given for it, I will say to the Senator, and I so stated to the committee, that both ought to be treated alike.

Mr. PETTUS. Has the Senator offered to make them the same?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did offer such amendment in the committee. I introduced this same proviso to both of those items, and the committee voted it down as to one and accepted it as to the other.

Mr. BACON. I will ask the Senator if he proposes to try to have the Senate strike out the Kansas City proposition?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall offer my proviso to the Kansas City proposition if it prevails as to the item now under consideration.

Mr. President, I will not trouble the Senate to read what the Postmaster-General said with reference to the second proposition in my proviso, but, in brief, he said that there was absolutely no difficulty in putting this service upon a business footing. He had never, he said in substance, ascertained by investigation what the extra train or trains which he had been employing were actually worth. Congress had made an appropriation of so many thousands and hundreds of dollars and cents, and he assumed that Congress meant that this money was to be given to the railroads for this service. He had never made the slightest investigation for the purpose of ascertaining and determining whether this extra service rendered by the railroads was worth that much or not, but he said if this proviso was adopted he would regard it as mandatory, and that he would, if he found the extra service was needed, go further and inquire what it was reasonably worth, and he would contract with the railroads accordingly. He said if the Southern Railroad should refuse the contract at the amount he found to be just and reasonable, he was not confined to that road. He would not, he explained, be confined to that system, but could employ the service under competition, giving it to the system which would give the best service for the least money. Indeed, there seems to be, under the law, no reason why a contract could not be made with more than one system, thus enlarging the scope of such benefits as may follow.

Mr. President, I do not want to go into the merits of this matter, and I will not now except in the briefest possible way. I myself do not know whether or not this appropriation is needed. The Southern Railroad is giving a splendid service; if it can not continue to give that service without this special and additional compensation I shall not object to giving it such part of it as may be a fair compensation for the extra service, but that is all it should demand or receive.

There is one fact to which I want to call the attention of Senators who are interested in this question—and I know all the southern Senators are interested in it—and that fact is this: That this appropriation is not expended upon one train. Attention has been focused in all the argument that has taken place in the other Chamber and in the country through the newspapers, upon what is known as "No. 97," a mail train and an express train, which goes out of this city about 8 o'clock in the morning, which carries no passengers. The idea prevails that all this appropriation is expended in paying the Southern Railroad for running that special train and that that special train would not be run without this appropriation. It is claimed by some that this train was not brought into service on account of this appropriation, but that it was brought into service because the increased volume of the business of that road so overloaded its regular passenger trains that it was necessary for it to provide an extra train to carry the mails and the express. I do not know how that is, but I do know that neither it nor any similar train was run until 1904, ten years after this contract was first entered into by the Government with that railroad. This is one of the things I think should be determined. If this train is run to relieve the congestion in that road's transportation, the Government should not be required to pay for it except in so far as the Government's control of its schedule may entitle the road to be compensated. Of that I will speak later.

Trains of this character are not uncommon in this country. There are other roads in this country which run special trains carrying nothing but the mails.

As I said, this train was put on in 1904. For more than twenty-three years we had been employing this extra service without any such train. The Southern Railroad itself had had this contract since 1894 without running an exclusively mail train, and it does not appear that when put on that it was put on upon the demand or requirement of the Department.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from North Carolina if he does not know the fact—I understand it to be the fact, although I may be in error—that, so far from this being a purely voluntary matter on the part of the Southern Railroad, there is a contract between the Southern Railroad and the Department under which this 97 has to be run, leaving here at a certain time, making certain points along the line, and reaching Atlanta and New Orleans at certain hours, and that a part of the contract is that 37, which is the train the Senator previously spoke of as carrying the mail——

Mr. SIMMONS. I have not spoken of that train yet.

Mr. BACON. The Senator did not call it by number. It is the regular passenger train.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Part of the contract is that, while this train 97 shall be so run, leaving here at certain hours and making certain points at certain hours, that this passenger train shall also be run. It is a part of the contract that it shall not be taken off, in that way securing double mail service.

Does not the Senator further know that as a part of this contract the Department exacts a heavy fine from the railroad company if its train 97 does not make the schedule, and that, as a result of that arrangement, the railroad company actually forfeits every year in the way of fines about 33 per cent of this amount? Are not those the facts?

Mr. SIMMONS. I will answer the Senator. Substantially, with some qualifications, those are the facts. The point I was making was that for ten years, under this contract with the Southern, this money had been paid over every year without this extra mail train, and the mails had been carried by the regular passenger trains. In 1904 No. 97 was put on, and I said it was claimed by some that the Southern Railroad had put that train on in order to relieve the congestion which had resulted from the great volume of travel and traffic which had been developed, and that this had grown so great as to overload its regular passenger trains and make it impossible to make the schedules according to the contract with the Government, to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. President, that contract applies not only to this extra train, but it applies to 37, which leaves here at 10.45 at night. This train gets a pro rata part of this appropriation. Thirty-seven is not a special train. It is a regular passenger train.

Mr. MALLORY. The limited.

Mr. SIMMONS. Limited, so that it runs 35 miles an hour. That is all. In 1881, when this contract was first made, the fast mail upon the Atlantic Coast Line was running at the same speed, to wit, 35 miles an hour.

It is true, as the Senator from Georgia says, that under the contract which the Southern has with the Government, the schedules of these trains are made subject to the approval and are, in a sense, subject to the control of the Government. They are required to make certain connections within a given margin of time and, failing in this, they get no special pay for that run. But when the Senator says they are mulcted with heavy fines if they do not make the connections, I think he is in error.

The contract is this: This sum of money, as I understand it, is divided into 365 parts. Each day that the train makes these connections on schedule time it is paid for that run. If it does not make the connections on schedule time it is not paid. It is not provided that if the train fails to make the schedule time the company shall be fined or required to refund to the Government in any way.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me finish the sentence. The contract is this: "If the trains make the schedules made by the railroads and approved by the Department, it is paid. Otherwise they get no part of this special pay for that run." That is the meaning of the contract.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to ask the Senator a question, with his permission.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. The Senator says if there is a failure to perform the contract, the result is that the pay is lost for that day.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. MONEY. And there is no fine imposed.

Mr. SIMMONS. No fine is imposed.

Mr. MONEY. Is the Senator quite sure of that?

Mr. SIMMONS. I am quite sure of it.

Mr. MONEY. Then I want to say that, although I have not examined the law for some time, formerly there would have been a failure to pay and an absolute fine imposed.

Mr. SIMMONS. There is none now, I am quite sure.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator from Mississippi will pardon me, if you take away from a party the compensation for services rendered, of course it is a distinction without a difference when you say he is not fined, but he is not paid. If the service involves expense in rendering it, and you refuse to pay or contract that you shall not pay for that service, it is the same thing as imposing a fine. There is not a particle of difference. If there was a failure to carry the mail, you might say there was a failure to perform the contract, and therefore there should be no compensation for it. The fact, however, is that the mail is carried, but they do not make the time. They are not simply deprived of the compensation for the extra service, but deprived of all compensation for carrying it. That is certainly the same as a fine.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Georgia is mistaken in saying they are deprived of all compensation. They do not get any of this special pay, but they get the regular mail-transportation pay. I do not desire to quibble about the matter. I admit very frankly that when the railroad companies surrender their schedules to the Government and permit the Government to dictate, in a measure, those schedules, and permit the Government to hold them down to them, the railroads part with a privilege and a liberty worth something, and I am not contending that the Government should not be required to pay them for it. This and the Newton and Kansas City case are the only ones in the country in which I believe the Government controls the schedules of mail trains and reduces or withholds compensation if those schedules are not made.

The Atlantic Coast Line once had this contract—up to 1893, I believe, when it voluntarily gave it up. They gave it up in 1893 for the express reason, I am informed, that they were not willing that the Government should control their schedules. I am not minimizing at all the handicap that this is to the railroads. I am merely stating the facts of this case, because I desire that Senators who are interested should be familiar with these facts, and probably, being on the committee, I have given it a little more thorough investigation than some of my colleagues. I have no prejudice or favoritism in the matter. I have tried to present the facts, as I understand them, fairly and accurately.

Mr. FOSTER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand from your statement that really the railroads are rendering better service in this matter now than they did prior to 1904?

Mr. SIMMONS. This 97 being put on, I should suppose it would give better service. Its schedule is faster—over 40 miles an hour, I think; 37 is a relatively slow train—35 miles an hour, I think. These are the two so-called "special facility" trains.

Mr. President, when this appropriation was first made in 1881, the condition of the South was very different from what it is to-day. By reason of its sparse population; by reason of the fact that it was largely an agricultural country and that interest but poorly developed; by reason of the smallness of its traffic and its travel and the lightness of the mails, it is manifest that there were reasons, which do not now exist, why its railroads could not, for the regular transportation pay of mail, afford to run as many mail trains on as fast schedules or as many of them as were necessary to give that section the facilities and expedition in this regard which different conditions made attainable in other sections of the country.

There is still a difference in this regard against our section and some other sections, but it is not nearly so great as it was then, and it is daily growing less. I am happy to believe that the time is not far away when it will altogether disappear.

There have been in recent years great changes in the conditions in these regards in the South. The agricultural products of that section of the country in the last ten or fifteen years—certainly since the first appropriation for this special service was made—have more than doubled. The manufacturing products of this section within that time have trebled. The mail that is carried by the great railroads which traverse it is more than twice as great as was carried at that time.

All of these systems now maintain a high standard of passenger service and equipment. Competition between them for passenger business, and especially winter travel, is active and keen. It has led to great improvements in equipments and facilities, and to increased speed of trains. Why is it not reasonable to presume that if the through mail matter for this section were made the subject of competition between these systems instead of being given to only one of them it would bring about a competition which would lead to further improvements in this direction?

Mr. President, the amount paid by the Government for carrying mails over the Southern Railroad from Washington to Charlotte in my State during the past year was, I am told, something like $500,000. This was outside of the special-facility pay we are now discussing.

The part of this special-facility pay due between here and Charlotte, after deductions last year, was only, I believe, a little over $23,000. It is claimed that the much-talked-of extra or special train, known as "No. 97," which carries only mail and express, is a profitable train; that it is not a burden—run at a loss—but that it yields a larger sum per mile actually run than the average regular mail and passenger trains of the Southern, and that it can live and prosper without this special appropriation.

All of these things need to be inquired into and the facts ascertained and determined. The Postmaster-General tells us it has not been done in the past and he does not know what the facts are. Surely, if the facts are as contended, this great system which is and has been such a factor in the development of the South, and which is reaping to-day such a rich reward as the result of that development, will not refuse its patrons in that section needed mail facilities if this appropriation is withheld, or if the Department should say, "Come, let us settle this matter on a business basis."

Mr. President, in conclusion I want to say that I am the last man in the Senate who would deny the southern country any mail facilities to which it may be entitled or which its representatives in Congress have a right to ask the Government to provide for it. If business conditions in that section will not admit of as rapid mail expedition as the balance of the country enjoys, it is not unjust to ask Congress in its interest and in the interest of the whole country to supply this deficiency by providing special and exceptional facilities. If the South needs this special appropriation of $142,000 in order to put it upon a parity in the matter of mail facilities with the balance of the country, I am ready to vote it or even a larger sum. What I seek through this amendment to accomplish is to have the facts investigated and ascertained, and if it shall be found that these facilities can be secured only through a special contract, that that contract be made by the Post-Office Department with due regard to the value of the extra service stipulated for, and that the Department do not blindly, as is seems to be doing now, turn over a given sum without any idea of whether the service rendered represents value received. If we need to hire a special mail train or trains to give this section equal and needed facilities, let us hire them and pay for them. But, Mr. President, there is no reason why we should pay for them more than a fair price or more than the service is worth.

The Postmaster-General tells us that he does not know whether or not the service is worth the amount of this appropriation. He has made no investigations. He has not ascertained the facts. He is blindly carrying out what he regards as the will and direction of Congress, and handing over the appropriation without asking any questions. Is that proper? The Southern Railroad is a great system. It is not in need of a subsidy. It does not, as I understand it, ask for any. It says this is not a subsidy. It claims that the Government gets value received for its money. Is this contention and claim true? That is one of the questions I want the Department to investigate and decide and later advise us about. The railroad is one party to this contract, the Government is the other. I do not think Congress should be willing to accept without question the railroad's estimate of the value of this service.

Mr. President, I am opposed to subsidies. My chief purpose in introducing this amendment was, as I have before said, first, to get the facts, and next, if there is any subsidy in this appropriation, to squeeze it out of it. In the committee I opposed the pneumatic-tube service. The bill appropriates $900,000 for this pneumatic-tube service. That is a facilitation of the mails in the great cities to the extent, I think, of from ten to fifteen minutes. I do not attack that service. I do not deny that it is a great convenience and advantage in the facilitation of the great business of the cities in which it has been installed.

But, Mr. Chairman, the plants which supply this service are, I am advised, comparatively inexpensive. They dig a trench, put into it a tube with a little machinery, and the Government pays the owner every year for this service, in some instances about as much as the plant is worth. That makes it a subsidy. The convenience of the service, the advantages and the benefits of the service, however great, do not change that fact or make it any less a subsidy.

The Government ought to buy those plants. If it can not buy them, by reason of the indisposition of the owners to sell them, then, if it can, it ought to condemn them. If there is no law providing for their condemnation, because they are protected by patents, then it ought to say to the owners: "We will pay you for this service a reasonable profit upon your investment, and if you are not willing to take that, we will withdraw the service and leave you 'to get business where you can.'" In that case, as soon as the patent expires, the Government ought to install its own plant. In the committee I declared myself as opposed to this appropriation to pneumatic tube service because it seemed to me that under the present arrangement the Government was making it a matter of subsidy and bounty instead of a business transaction. I repeat one of the reasons I am insisting on my proviso to the item under consideration is because I want to put this transaction on a business footing, if it is to be continued. I have had petitions from citizens and boards of trade and chambers of commerce in the cities in my State served by this railroad asking my support of this appropriation. I do not want to deny or abridge any advantage or privilege the good people of these thrifty and enterprising communities now enjoy.

I want them to continue to have as good service as they now have. I think they are entitled to it. But if the Postmaster-General shall find that it is necessary to hire a special train or trains to get it, if he shall find that the regular transportation pay, paid by the Government, which is always liberal, is not sufficient inducement to the carrier to give quick and prompt service, I want him to be able to say: "I will pay you what the service is worth; you have no right to exact any more, nor will I pay more."

Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Senate for having consumed so much time. It was not my purpose when I began these remarks to amplify and enlarge them to the extent that I have.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I shall not consume very much of the time of the Senate. I will go as far as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] in undertaking to limit the compensation for mail service to what it is actually worth, and the amendment which I have presented to the committee amendment, I think, is a step in that direction. It is a step in that direction and a better step, in my judgment, than that furnished by the proposition offered by the committee.

The language of the paragraph, as changed by the amendment of the committee, is as follows:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider and so find that such expenditure is necessary to secure needed expedition of the mails; and in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the services to be rendered by said trunk line or lines.

The amendment which I propose in lieu of that is this:

Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated, or any part thereof, unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

I do not think it is open to controversy as to whether this service or this expedition is needed. Between Washington and New Orleans lies a country principally agricultural and far less densely populated than the country of the Middle States and of the East. The Southern Railroad is the most direct route between New York and the commercial metropolis of the South—New Orleans. On each side of it for a distance of 150 miles there are farming communities and a number of manufacturing towns. All of these are more or less benefited by the expedited mail service, not to speak of the great benefit which arises from affording rapid communication between the cities of New Orleans and New York.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think it is hardly necessary for us to discuss here the question whether this expedited service is desirable. Under the amendment proposed by the committee, of which the Senator from North Carolina is the author, the very question of the necessity of this expedited service is, in my judgment, submitted to the Postmaster-General for determination. It may not have been, and it was not, I believe, the intention of the Senator from North Carolina to submit that to the judgment of the Postmaster-General; but the language is such that if the Postmaster-General chooses to construe it to mean that, he can very readily do so. He is to consider and to find that such expenditure is necessary—a very strong word—to secure needed expedition of the mail. He is to consider, first, in my judgment—for that is, I believe, the meaning of this clause—whether expedition of the mails is desirable; and then, if expedition of the mails along this route is desirable, the Postmaster-General is to determine whether the expenditure is necessary for it.

Under the amendment offered by me the same object—that is, the inquiry sought for by the Senator from North Carolina—can be obtained; but at the same time it does not do away with the advantages and benefits flowing from the establishment of this special facility for the mails. It prohibits the Postmaster-General from expending any part of the sum herein appropriated unless it be necessary, and that means necessary in his judgment, in order to provide the same or as good service as is now provided. If in his judgment it is necessary, in order to provide the same or as good service, he can make the expenditure. If in his judgment it is not necessary, he is under this provision prohibited from making the expenditure. He has to determine whether it is necessary or not, and in order to reach that conclusion he has to have an inquiry and an investigation into the facts, the very thing which the Senator from North Carolina declares here is the principal object in framing his amendment in the way he has done.

Mr. President, we are, as the Senator from North Carolina has said, making appropriations here for expediting service in the cities. In the matter of pneumatic tubes we provide an appropriation of $900,000, and in addition to that we provide for contracts running to the amount of about one million and a half more to expedite service in the large cities, where they already have frequent mail deliveries and almost every advantage which ingenuity can devise for the rapid transmission of the mails. The country through which this road runs has but two trains a day. It is true it is developing, it is becoming a large manufacturing center as well as an agricultural region, and the business is increasing.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Do I understand the Senator to say that the section of country to be supplied by the service to which this appropriation is applied has only two trains a day?

Mr. MALLORY. That is my understanding.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, my understanding is that they are running from here to Charlotte, in my State, along this road, six trains a day, three each way.

Mr. MALLORY. That may be true, but from here to Charlotte is not the entire route. It is not even one-half of the route. I am speaking of the entire route. I do not know how many trains there are a day between here and Charlotte, but there are only two fast mail trains, I believe, unless I have been misinformed, between this point and New Orleans.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, I will say to him that I think he has fallen into an error there. There is what is known as No. 31, which is nearly as fast a train as No. 97. It does not get any part of this appropriation, but it runs nearly as fast.

Mr. MALLORY. When does No. 31 leave Washington?

Mr. SIMMONS. It leaves Washington at 11 o'clock in the morning.

Mr. MALLORY. I do not think that the trains make very close connections below Atlanta or at Atlanta. My impression, from what information I have gotten on the subject, is that there are but two trains that carry mail from here to New Orleans in a day.

Mr. SIMMONS. I will state to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that No. 31, which leaves here in the daytime, is the fastest mail train which the Southern operates.

Mr. MONEY. Two each way?

Mr. MALLORY. Of course, two each way. I will not dispute here whether there are two or three. The fact is, however, Mr. President, as I said here yesterday, I know from my own experience—and I think Senators here who live along the line of this mail route will corroborate what I say—that the establishment of this particular mail line has been of immense advantage to the people of the section affected by it. I know that from Atlanta down to New Orleans an immense benefit is derived from it. My own home is approximately on the line, being only 44 miles off from the main line, and our mail from New York or our mail from Washington is from seven to eight hours ahead of what it would be without this expedited mail service. I think the same can be said of almost all the other points of importance—Mobile, Montgomery, and other points along the line, besides the cities and towns and communities for 150 miles on each side of the route.

Mr. President, the point I insist on is, if the Senator from North Carolina only desires to have the matter of the value of this service inquired into, he can accomplish that by the amendment which I have offered. I am unwilling to leave the matter to the judgment or decision of the Postmaster-General or the Post-Office Department. We are the proper authority to determine whether or not this expedited service is necessary, and I am opposed to submitting that to a departmental officer or bureau chief.

The other part, as to the amount of expenditure which is desirable, can be very properly confided to such an officer, but when the Postmaster-General tells us that, in his judgment, this will not tend to the promotion of the interests of the postal service, and when we have a gentleman of such standing and authority as Mr. Shallenberger stating before the committee that, in the judgment of the Department, it will not be necessary to promote the interests of the postal service, it strikes me that a delegation of the matter of determining whether this service should be continued or not to gentlemen who have already expressed themselves to a certain extent, at least, as of the opinion that it is not necessary to the interests of the postal service, would be confiding it to judges who have already expressed an opinion on the subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask the Senator from Florida if he does not think, from the reading of the testimony, that both the Postmaster-General and the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Shallenberger, were predicating their observations upon the general postal service and the interests of the general postal service of the country?

Mr. MALLORY. No; I can not say that I do. They were discussing this particular service. The question was put point blank by the Senator from North Carolina himself to Mr. Shallenberger:

> Then you did reach the conclusion that it was necessary to promote the interest of the postal service?

That is in reference to a previous remark made by Mr. Shallenberger; and he answered:

> In the judgment of the Department, not; in the judgment of Congress, yes.

This is about all I have to say, Mr. President. I shall insist on the amendment I have offered, because I believe it gives the Postmaster-General the opportunity to inquire into the question of the value of the service rendered by the railroads, but at the same time requires the continuation of the service for the benefit of the very large number of people in this country who are deriving benefits from it to-day.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I quite concur in the opinion expressed by the Senator from North Carolina that the language as it has heretofore existed in the proviso should be stricken out. I have not the slightest doubt, knowing the Senator as well as I do, that he is perfectly honest in advocating his amendment to the bill in the belief that he will promote the postal interests. But I ask the question, What are considered to be the postal interests of the United States? I know from long experience, and not by any means reflecting upon any public functionary who has been connected with the Department in any important grade since I have been here, that they are men who have been very anxious to do their duty, and I think the present Postmaster-General and his chiefs of bureaus have that intention.

Mr. President, the Post-Office Department have never considered the postal service as Congress and the people of the United States have considered it. They have considered it as a business, and they have brought, through the administration of that office, very great benefits. They have bent their energies to do everything to carry out as far as they can the laws of Congress to distribute the mails throughout the United States and to make the service pay its way; in other words, to use the language of the Senator from South Carolina, to put everything on a business basis.

Now, I will say you can not put the postal service of the United States on a business basis and do properly the function of government. The United States is not neglecting its business when it carries mail and receives pay for doing it. It is performing a function of government. The postage on the mail is not to be considered as a compensation for the service rendered, but it is simply a tax that is laid upon correspondence and upon other mail matter, just as a tax is laid upon whisky and other things that are produced in the United States. It is a tax that is easily distributed and easily paid, and it is paid by its beneficiaries, the proper persons to pay a tax. It is no more to be expected that the Post-Office Department shall pay its expenses than that Congress shall pay its expenses and the Army and Navy and the judiciary shall pay their expenses. We are to conduct this postal service as a function of the Government, and for the benefit of the people of the United States, who pay all the taxes.

When a thinly peopled section of the country calls for expedited or unusual facilities that are generally accorded the peopled sections, there should be no complaint made from the great centers of population because the correspondence is done with them. It is through the expedited service that merchants in the cities of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Boston, Louisville, Chicago, etc., get in communication and do business with their correspondents in the country towns and in the remote sections of the country; every expedition that goes to one place must come from somewhere else, and each terminal of the line will feel the impetus and the quickening impulse of that correspondence. Letters are the primordia rerum of the whole commercial world; without them there can be no commerce.

THE PANAMA CANAL.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will suspend for a moment. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, it is the duty of Congress to see that proper mail facilities are performed and carried to the farthest extremities of this country. While the people in the country look upon ten or twelve daily deliveries and pneumatic tubes with something of a dislike, for what seems to be a discrimination, in fact they should not do so, because it is just as much to their interests to have mail expedited and delivered quickly in the city as it is that the cities should be interested in the swift communication of their correspondence in the country. All sections should unite in sustaining Congress in its effort to make a proper and immediate distribution of mails everywhere.

It is unfortunate, as I said, that almost always in the Department, without any reflection upon anybody, the attempt has been made to cut down mail facilities because of the Department desiring to make both ends meet—in other words, that its receipts should equal its expenditures. That, of course, is a very desirable result. We would all be very glad if we could devise a way by which Congress could pay its expenses, and the Army could pay its expenses; but it can not be done. So in performing this function of government we are not to consider too closely what its cost is, except that there should be rigid economy and great honesty in the administration of that Department and in the expenditure of the moneys which Congress votes for the purpose.

Now, it is not a question in my mind in this particular case whether the Postmaster-General shall determine what is the best for the postal interests. As for me, I do not care whether it is better for the postal service in the light in which he considers it. I consider the postal interests to be promoted when the best possible communication is given from one part of this country to the other part. The whole country is served with railroads, with steamboats, and by star routes, and we need all these things. In the city we need frequent deliveries, we need rural delivery in the country, and expedited schedules in one or two places in order that the system may be perfected as far as possible without too great an expense. I am not willing to go into a very large expenditure to increase the facilities, but here is a facility that has been standing here by the will of Congress and against the will of the Executive Department for many years. We know already what the opinion of the Department is.

I had the pleasure not long ago of being told by a gentleman who is administering one of the great bureaus of that Department that I was responsible for the very worst law that had ever been passed. I said, "What is that?" He said, "You are the author of the bill that gave the newspapers the privilege of a rate of 1 cent a pound, and they have loaded down the mails so that we have to pay very much more than we receive from that particular source of income." I did not think I was doing anything for the benefit of the Department nor for the benefit of the newspapers, but I was doing something for the people of the United States. I was putting within their reach the great metropolitan papers, conveying the news of the country, and instructing the people upon the affairs of the world as well as their own domestic concerns. It was not a question with me whether the Department should make money out of this carriage of newspapers at 1 cent a pound or whether they should lose it. I expected them to lose it. But, on the contrary, they are carrying letters at a most tremendous rate and making a great deal of money on that. So we do not take these things into consideration at all.

Now, as to this particular amendment, I would have, I say, these words stricken out and not leave anything to the Postmaster-General except his business as administrator of that great Department to perfectly understand what the cost should be. He is not asked to determine exactly what the great lines of railroad throughout the country shall be paid. As far as the railroads go, we fix the price ourselves, determining it by the weight and space; and then he is left to make the grade by the annual weighing, which comes off according to law not less frequently than once in four years, but practically every year; and that determines it for him. He is not left to determine whether he will do it or not. When he comes to the star route the lowest responsible bidder, if he can give a bond, gets it. There is no discretion left to the Postmaster-General there.

It is not a question here whether the Southern road or the Seaboard line shall carry this mail to Atlanta. Atlanta is the half-way house. There are four roads that get the benefit of this appropriation. There are four roads that carry special fast mail trains containing two postal and express cars and no passengers going there; and as these four roads are sharing this sum it is not a question particularly how you get to Atlanta. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that the two roads mentioned shall compete for this and say what they will carry it for. It is nothing to me what road gets it. But I will say in this connection that in the genesis of this thing it was designed for and given to the Seaboard Air Line. They carried it for twelve years, and having carried it for twelve years, surrendered it on the ground that it did not pay for the cost which the road incurred in the transportation. Then it was transferred to the other route, and it is yet to be expedited through to Savannah. It was expedited through to New Orleans, and the effect of that expedition is felt at El Paso. You will find here, I presume, on the files of the committee—I speak without knowledge, but from my own experience of the past—petitions from every board of trade from San Antonio and Houston along up to near Washington asking that this service shall be continued. These commercial bodies know their business; they know what they want; they feel the lack of a good service, and they want it.

I believe the effect of the proviso offered by my friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] would be simply to leave the matter in the discretion of the Postmaster-General whether we ought to have expedited mail or not. If in his judgment there should be no expedition, there will be none. He has already said that he does not believe in favoring one section as against another, or one line as against another. We can predicate a pretty sound opinion upon his previous utterances, and we pretty well know now that he will say that it ought not to go at all.

I am not in favor of devolving any legislative function or any discretion upon a gentleman, however distinguished he may be. I know he is a very able and a very good man; I have no fault to find with him; but he has put himself on record. He forgets, of course, that in the more prosperous section, where there is such a thickly populated country and the commerce or traffic is so great that it must have eight or ten or twenty railroads a day, there is no need for it. I have been on the Hudson and I have seen ninety-two trains a day run past one point on one railroad, with a railroad on the other side with just about as many—and the river full of steamers going up and down also—and all of them making 40 or 50 miles an hour. What is the need of expedition there? But it is different down here.

I recollect that in the beginning of this thing there was only one transcontinental line, and their schedule was 18 miles an hour. They declined to go into any negotiations; they declined to accept the schedule that had been prepared by the Postmaster-General at any price upon the ground that their material was so dear—their cross-ties of metals—that they could not possibly expedite the service; that there would be such wear and tear on the rolling stock and roadbed that they would not be paid for the extra expense. So they declined, and it was the only line by which the expedition could be effected. It then began at Boston and ended at Savannah. They all declined the proposition until some years ago a special train was put on from Kansas City to Newton, Kans., and it had but one single object, to get the morning papers from Kansas City to Newton and intervening points and distributed at railroad centers. The only reason why it was put on was on account of the morning papers of Kansas City.

Now, as far as the Seaboard and the Southern roads are concerned, let them compete if necessary before the Postmaster-General for the carriage to Atlanta, and then we will consider also how many people are to be served on one or the other side. Unfortunately, by reason of its location, one road has the Atlantic Ocean on one side, and there is very little mail from that quarter except from cities on the border. On the other side there are lines going into the interior, communicating with the large cities of the West and of the South. I had once a compilation made showing the proportion of people served, and it was a great deal more than I had expected. I thought it would be a great deal; it was immense.

This matter is unimportant to those who live off this line and who are not representing constituencies to be affected by the discontinuance of this very great mail facility, but it is important to the people in the South, at least where I live and beyond. I have heard from a great many upon this subject. I have generally been in the habit of getting a pocketful of telegrams about this time. This year I have not received a word from anybody. I suppose they thought I had no connection with the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and, therefore, they addressed no communications to me; but I do not believe that they have changed their minds within a year. I know what they have done heretofore. I know the necessity of this service.

I have no objection to the Postmaster-General inquiring into what would be a proper compensation, and I do not want anything greater than a proper compensation paid. I do not want any subsidy; but I do not call it a subsidy to a pneumatic tube covered by a patent nor to a railroad which is simply rendering a service as cheaply to the Government as it would be rendered to anyone else.

The Government is at liberty to decline if the railroad will not take a good offer. I think myself that we might invest some sort of discretion as to the amount to be paid, so that it would be reasonable compensation, but I am not willing, under the utterances of the Postmaster-General, to allow him to say whether this expedition is needed or not. That is a thing that the people of the country affected have long since determined for themselves.

I believe there will be a general concurrence of opinion among the Senators who represent the Southern States, with the exception of my distinguished friend from North Carolina, who I know is just as zealous and as honest as I or anybody else can be, because I know him well enough to say that, and I say it with great sincerity. I do hope that in this instance his contention will not prevail, but I want to say it is just about as good as the language that was in the act, because that, in my opinion, made it just as much the duty of the Postmaster-General as the amendment. In fact, it says whatever in the judgment of the Postmaster-General is necessary. How can he come to a judgment unless he makes an investigation? How can he reach a judgment unless he has ascertained the facts and the reasons upon which to base a conclusion? If he has not done that, he has simply failed to do his duty; he has simply failed to obey the law. In my opinion, in a case like this the law is mandatory. In my opinion, it is mandatory all the time.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MONEY. With great pleasure.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to state to the Senator that the Postmaster-General said—I started to read it, but was interrupted and did not finish it—that he would regard the present proviso as simply directory; that he would not regard the proviso proposed by the committee as mandatory upon him, and he would exercise the judgment and discretion imposed on him to find the facts and to pay for the service no more than what he regarded it to be worth.

Mr. MONEY. If I thought the Postmaster-General would adopt the interpretation which the Senator himself puts upon it——

Mr. SIMMONS. That is his interpretation. I have it here. I can read it to the Senator if he would like to hear it. The Postmaster-General himself said it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MONEY. Of course; I desire to bring out all the information we can get. I am glad to have the Senator interrupt me, because he is much better informed than I am upon this subject.

Mr. SIMMONS. This is in two forms, and I will read it in the briefer form. Toward the close of the examination I find this:

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose the committee, by reason of your knowledge of the matter, you being supposed to understand this situation better than we do, shall say that we will recommend this sum or so much as may be necessary, and we will leave it with you to decide whether the conditions are such as to justify this expenditure. In that condition of things, would you hold that it was incumbent upon you to exercise your discretion and employ this service and spend this money or not, just as you might conclude the service was necessary and in the interest of the postal service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. To spend it or not as I thought was necessary?

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose this amendment should be adopted to strike out the present proviso and insert—

Then I read the first section of my proviso—

"Provided, That no part of the appropriation made by this paragraph shall be expended unless the Postmaster-General shall consider, and so find, that such expenditure is necessary in order to promote the interest of the postal service."

If that proviso should be adopted in that form, would you not then consider it necessary and incumbent upon you to decide and to find, before you expended any part of this money, that the service was necessary in the interest of the postal service?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

Senator SIMMONS. Suppose that proviso should proceed further and say—

This is the second part of the proviso—

"And in such case no greater sum shall be paid for such facilities than is, in the judgment of the Postmaster-General, a fair compensation for the service that shall be rendered by said trunk line or lines."

If there is any element of subsidy in this appropriation, if Congress should accompany this appropriation with that condition and that qualification and limitation and proviso, would you not consider it your duty then to put this contract upon the basis of a purely business transaction?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir; in the interest of the postal service and the people of the whole country.

Senator SIMMONS. Therefore, if this proviso should be adopted, you would consider it your duty to decide the question of whether this service was necessary?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

Senator SIMMONS. Then you would consider it your duty in making the contracts for this service with the railroads to base their compensation upon what the service to be rendered by them was actually worth?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina has kindly read me this testimony, and I want to say that it condemns his proviso; it condemns it absolutely. Here is the statement of the very Postmaster-General who is going to construe the law. I was going to say that he will pass away and other Postmasters-General will come in, who will not, perhaps, construe the law as he says he will construe it, if the law should be still on the statute books and should not be repealed, but here he himself says he will judge whether it is necessary to have any expenditure or not. That is a legislative function which I do not propose to submit to him if I can prevent it. I propose for Congress to retain in its own hands the right to dispense this service or to dispense with it, not for the Postmaster-General or any of the executive officers to step in and say whether it is necessary or whether it is unnecessary. But when Congress has said "We desire this to be done," then I am perfectly willing for the Postmaster-General to investigate, and it is his duty to do so, without any requirement in this proviso or in any other law that is not already on the statute books, and to say what will be a reasonable compensation, although he has not been required to say that in regard to any of the contracts we have made. In all the contracts for railroad service and star routes and steamboats in this country the Postmaster-General has not been required to say what he thought was a reasonable and just compensation, but he has had to pay according to the law in every instance. In a case like this I think, however, there should be a deviation and that his judgment should be consulted as to the amount which might be necessary, but at the same time the railroads also are to be consulted. Every railroad in this country can to-day lay down its contract and refuse to carry any mail if it chooses to do so. We are not arbitrarily to fix the burden upon the railroads of the country. They are not to be required to perform the service, however much they may desire to do it, without just compensation. We must not fail to recollect that they are the great promoters of civilization, that they are the promoters of business, and that they must be paid a fair and just compensation for this as well as for any other service which they may perform for the Government or for the citizens of this great country. So the railroads themselves must be consulted as to what is a reasonable compensation. The Postmaster-General might say that it was worth $1,000 a month, and the railroads might say "We can not do it for that sum."

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] said a while ago that the great railroads would not voluntarily put a mail contract down, even if it did not get paid, because they would thereby incur the disfavor of their patrons along the route. That would seem to be a very good argument, but we have an instance right before us here. The Seaboard Air Line did put down its mail contract.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator refers to the Atlantic Coast Line, I presume.

Mr. MONEY. True; I got those two routes confused for the moment. The Atlantic Coast Line, which had one of these contracts, put down that contract without any fear of incurring the disfavor of the people along its route.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. MONEY. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Mississippi is right. The Atlantic Coast Line did put down a contract, to use his own language, and declined to enter into a contract again; but the Atlantic Coast Line continued to give the same schedules afterwards that it had given before.

Mr. MONEY. Then, certainly that road could not have been under good business management if they continued without compensation the same service for which they had received $142,000. It was not well managed if it did that.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Atlantic Coast Line repudiated that contract because they said that they were unwilling that the Post-Office Department should exercise a control over their schedule. They put it on that ground.

Mr. MONEY. Yes; that is the ground on which they put it. The fact is that when the Atlantic Coast Line found that the service would be continued for the benefit, not of any railroad, but for the benefit of the southern people as well as the northern people in communication with them, the Atlantic Coast Line again applied for the contract, but did not get it. They were very willing, though having once thrown up the contract, to again apply for a contract to carry the mail rather than have their competitor carry it, and they asked again to be allowed to carry it, at a loss, I presume, or at least at inconvenience, having an unwillingness to comply with the schedule which the Postmaster-General imposed upon that road.

All this postal business is done under schedules prescribed by the Postmaster-General. He tells the roads where and when they shall start and at what time they shall get to their destination; and while the Senator from North Carolina is very much more familiar than I am with the law as it is now, the law as it was some years ago I know not only mulcted the pay of the road, but that they were absolutely fined for a failure to make schedule time unless they could show some good cause—such as a washout or an overflow or a burned bridge or some difficulty of that sort—had prevented them, and they had to offer a very good excuse, too.

I happened at one time to be interested in this matter. I was an attorney for one of the great railroad lines of this country. One of their greatest troubles was that they were being mulcted, not only failing to get their compensation, but being fined for not being able to make connections. There was great difficulty in making the Department see that the circumstances which obstructed the carrying of the mails were such as to justify them in remitting the fines in cases where the railroads were absolutely not at fault.

At any rate, Mr. President, I am satisfied of one thing, that with this proviso in the bill, it means—I will not say the Senator from North Carolina means it, because he does not; that is not his purpose, I am quite sure of that—but I say the effect of it will be, if the present Postmaster-General should die or if that good man should go out of office, the next man and the next might conclude that it was not necessary to have anything down there except the regular trains. Perhaps it is not. That is a matter of inquiry for the people who live down there, the residents of that section of the country, for, although I have had some letters from them, I know that this movement comes from the boards of trade, the chambers of commerce, the business men's leagues, and similar organizations. It is that class of people who generally organize for the purpose of effecting things, just as they do in this case, and that is one of the purposes of those organizations—to secure proper mail facilities, to get mail in due time to transact their business, to get it off, and to get a return in a short time. Time is the essence of contracts in every kind of commerce—the primordia rerum.

I recollect an instance, which has just occurred to me, that in correspondence many years ago with a banker in Denver, Colo., he stated that the interest on the time drafts between New York and Denver would pay the full cost of facilitating the mails. The railroads, then, would not at any price follow the schedule laid down, or which would be probably laid down by the Postmaster-General, owing to the great cost of constructing the roads.

At any rate, Mr. President, I give my opinion that if this amendment prevails, it means a discontinuance of this service, and that would mean very great dissatisfaction in my section of the country; it would mean a great many letters and telegrams and appeals to me and to others who represent Southern States asking for a return of this service.

I venture to say that the commercial bodies of New York, of Philadelphia, of Boston, and of Baltimore are just as anxious to see this service continued as are the people of New Orleans, Houston, Galveston, Atlanta, Nashville, and other places that are affected by it, because the correspondence it carries is largely between the parties who sell in the North and those who buy in the South. The money goes north, and the people up there are just as much interested in this matter as the people who are in the southern cities and towns.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I have but a word to say, and that of a practical character. I very heartily favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY], and I as earnestly object to the amendment proposed by the committee at the instance of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. The only interest I have in this matter is that the present mail service to the South shall be maintained. That service is essential to the business interests of a very large section of this country. The business of that large section of the country has become adjusted to this particular service, and to take it away would disarrange everything and produce an amount of dissatisfaction resulting from deranged business which would find no compensation in any small economy of the amount expended.

Whatever may have been said in the past under the previous provisions of law as to whether or not this was a subsidy or a gratuity, there can be no such claim made if the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida is adopted. I do not regard the law as it now stands as a subsidy, but as a compensation for expedited service. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida is in these words. After the appropriation provided for in the bill, the amendment is to this effect:

> Provided, however, That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated, or any part thereof, unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

There is practically a square, emphatic provision that, in the first place, the present service shall be maintained, which is the great desideratum, and then the equally emphatic provision that, with that service maintained, there shall only be paid such an amount as is necessary thus to maintain it.

I quite agree with what has been said by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] about the Post-Office Department not being a business Department. It is true it is very important if it can be done that it shall be made a paying Department, but that is not the first consideration. The first consideration is the service to the people of the United States in giving to them not only good mail facilities, but the very best mail facilities. There is no Department of the Government from which the people so universally receive the direct benefits as from the Post-Office Department, and there is no Department in which the people are as willing that there should be, if necessary, an excess of expenditure over receipts.

Take a most recent departure in the service of the mails—the free rural delivery service. Who stops to consider whether or not it pays, in view of the great benefits which are growing from it? I am not on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads and I can not say whether that service repays or not the amount expended for it; but regardless of that, that service is to be maintained. Its value to people in the rural districts can not be expressed in money value.

Here is an immense area of country in which special service from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans is the great facility by which prompt and expeditious mail service is secured, not only to those cities but to practically the whole of seven or eight States. I repeat, whatever may have been said in the past as to whether or not this was a gratuity or a subsidy, this amendment puts it upon the secure ground of compensation for service rendered.

The reason why I favor the amendment of the Senator from Florida and why I oppose the amendment which has been ingrafted on the bill at the instance of the Senator from North Carolina is that in one case it leaves in doubt the question as to whether or not this particular service shall be maintained, and in the other case it fixes that as a certainty; and that is what we wish to maintain.

Now, Mr. President, I am just going to read for a moment a statement which will show the character of the service. I want to premise it by saying first, however, that while I have not had an opportunity to read at length the testimony before the Post-Office Committee, I have listened to the portions which have been read by Senators and I have read a little in addition thereto, and, so far as I can gather, there is not in this testimony any statement, either by the Postmaster-General or by the Assistant Postmaster-General, to the effect that this appropriation is not necessary to secure this particular service. It is true that there is a statement to the effect that it is not necessary to what they consider to be the essential or necessary service; but with the service now rendered to these States, there is no testimony on their part that the appropriation is not needed for the purpose; on the contrary, reading the testimony of Mr. Shallenberger, it will plainly be seen that this is not the construction which they put upon it. Mr. Shallenberger, in his testimony, says this:

> The Department having exercised its discretion under the proviso and notified Congress of the manner in which the discretion was exercised and the specific routes on which it was exercised, the terminal points between which the discretion was exercised having been named in the appropriation of Congress to provide a special and additional service, the Department, I repeat, had to assume that the special service was desired, and provided for it.

Thereby evidently implying that, with that special service maintained, this appropriation was needed. I do not know, however, that I will pursue that any further, except to call attention to one other statement in the succeeding answer, where Senator SIMMONS asked him this question immediately following the foregoing:

> Senator SIMMONS. Then you did reach the conclusion that it was necessary to promote the interest of the postal service?
> Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the judgment of the Department, not; in the judgment of Congress, yes.

By which he meant that, in the judgment of the Department, it was not necessary for the southern country to have this expedited service, but that Congress, having determined that it was necessary, that it should have this expedited service, the appropriation necessarily was made by the Department in order to secure it.

Now, just one moment, Mr. President, and then I will not further trespass upon the time of the Senate. I will state a few facts relative to the arrangements which led to the present service.

The Post-Office Department was anxious to have a train, leaving Washington at 8 o'clock, with the New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington papers and mail, connecting with the train that left New York between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning and run through the South. The Department proposed to the Southern Railway that if they would put on a special mail train, leaving Washington at 8 a. m., and run through to New Orleans and there connecting with the Southern Pacific for all points in Texas and through to California, and would run this train 41 miles per hour, regardless of all stops, from Washington to New Orleans, and agree not to change the schedule without the consent of the Post-Office Department, and agree that, if they fail to make the schedule time at the end of the different routes (there being five routes between Washington and New Orleans), they should lose the pay for the special facilities for that day, and that the Southern Railway should run train No. 37 as it now runs, and should not change the schedule without the approval of the Post-Office Department, that they would give the line from Washington to New Orleans $125 per mile per annum, which amount would be divided according to mileage between the Southern Railway, Washington to Atlanta, Western Railway of Alabama, Atlanta to Montgomery, and Louisville and Nashville Railroad from Montgomery to New Orleans. While Congress appropriated $142,728.75 per annum for this service for the calendar year 1905, the Post-Office Department only paid out $106,567.67, the balance being deducted for failure to make the schedule.

Now, as to the way in which this service operates.

A letter leaving New York Monday at 2 a. m. and Washington at 8 a. m. arrives at Atlanta at 11.07 p. m. same day, and leaves there at 11.15 p. m. for New Orleans, Montgomery, Birmingham, Macon, Brunswick, and Savannah, and arrives at New Orleans next morning—Tuesday morning—at 11.15.

In other words, Mr. President, a letter leaving New York this morning at 2 o'clock is in New Orleans to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock, and without this facility it would not get there for at least twelve hours later than that hour. Other intermediate and lateral points are, according to distance, served in the proportionate time.

The Southern Pacific holds their train at New Orleans for this connection, and leaves there for Texas points at 11.55 a. m., taking the mail to Houston, San Antonio, El Paso, Austin, Galveston, and California points. For example, take Birmingham, Ala. Train 97's mail arrives at Birmingham at 5.20 a. m. The mail is distributed at Birmingham, and also given to the rural free-delivery carriers leaving there at 7 o'clock, and is distributed all through the country. Now, let us suppose that 97 was not running. This mail would reach Birmingham at 12.01 p. m., too late to be carried out in the city of Birmingham for the morning delivery and would compel the rural free-delivery mail to lay over twenty-four hours. The same applies to Savannah and Macon and other points—I might say to almost all other points in seven or eight great States.

I repeat, Mr. President, that the interest I have in this is the public interest of a very great section of this country. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida distinctively relieves it of every possible feature of a gratuity and puts it upon the simple basis, first, that the present service shall be maintained, which is the great and important desideratum for all that great section of the country, and, second, that the Postmaster-General shall only pay so much as is necessary to maintain for that large section of the country the present service or equally as good service.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, I shall only occupy the time of the Senate for a very few moments. The people of my State, and especially of New Orleans, are very much interested in the continuance of this appropriation and of this service. Under this special service, for which special and extra pay is given by the Government, the mails are received in New Orleans some six or eight hours earlier than they would be by the regular trains. If the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] prevails, in my judgment, the practical effect of it will be the discontinuance of this service. In the first place, it leaves the matter to a tribunal which has practically prejudged the case. If this amendment prevails, according to the expressed opinion of the Postmaster-General as I read it, this service will necessarily be discontinued. On page 58 of the hearings the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] asked the Postmaster-General this question:

> Senator SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask you, General, the direct question: In your judgment, is the appropriation for this service necessary in order to secure proper mail facilities in the section of country served?
> Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I think not.

The opinion of the Postmaster-General is that this service is not necessary, according to the answer which he gave to the Senator from North Carolina. On page 66 the same Senator asks the Postmaster-General this question:

> Therefore, if this proviso—
> Referring to the proviso in the amendment—
> should be adopted, you would consider it your duty to decide the question of whether this service was necessary?

The answer is "Yes, sir."

So the opinion of the Postmaster-General is that, under this amendment, it would be left with him, first, to decide whether the service was necessary, and then he has expressed an opinion that the service is not necessary. Therefore, in my judgment, Mr. President, the adoption of this amendment would mean practically the discontinuance of this very important service, which is not only important to the South, but important to the West and important to the great Northeast.

The discontinuance of this service would practically break up all the business arrangements now in the cities benefited by it, because, as has been said, time is not only an important factor, but it is almost the essence of a contract during these days of rapid and swift business transactions. Before we deprive this section of the country of these expedited postal facilities which they have enjoyed for years, and without assigning any reason why they should be changed, but, on the contrary, admitting that the service is better to-day than it has ever been, there ought, in my judgment, to be presented a better and more potent argument than has thus far been made. I simply wish to make this statement——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not interrupt the Senator when he read from the hearings a moment ago what the Postmaster-General said; but I now wish to call his attention to another statement of the Postmaster-General which, to my mind, clearly qualifies the answer made to the interrogatory which the Senator read a little while ago. I have taken the trouble to find it in the hearings. On page 65 this colloquy occurred:

Senator SIMMONS. I understand, Mr. Postmaster-General, that you do not express directly the opinion that this service is not needed.

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I am not prepared altogether to say that it is not needed.

Senator SIMMONS. You are not prepared to say that it is needed?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. No.

Again, on page 68:

Senator SIMMONS. When you pay this money to these railroads, do you regard it as a subsidy to the railroads? You speak of it as a subsidy in your reports, I believe?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. No; I carefully avoided calling it a subsidy.

Senator SIMMONS. Then it is the Second Assistant Postmaster-General who sometimes refers to it as a subsidy?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. Simply because I did not know whether I regarded it as a subsidy or how I did regard it. I have been looking into the matter for some time, but I did not want to characterize it because we regarded it in the Department as largely the act of Congress.

Senator SIMMONS. Then you did not want to express any opinion about it?

Postmaster-General CORTELYOU. I did not.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all very true, Mr. President; but anyone who will look over and analyze the answers of the Postmaster-General, especially when the direct question is put to him, must conclude that the question is practically prejudged in the mind of the Postmaster-General; that the Postmaster-General considers this service not necessary, and, further, that if this proviso is adopted, that he shall judge whether it is necessary or not, the practical operation of the amendment when enacted into law will be the discontinuance of this very important service.

Mr. PETTUS obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PETTUS. Certainly.

ADJOURNMENT OVER MEMORIAL DAY.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Thursday next.

Mr. PENROSE. Before the motion is put I should like to make an inquiry as to whether it has been usual for the Senate to thus adjourn over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This is not a debatable question, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PENROSE. I ask unanimous consent to make an inquiry.

I am anxious to have the Post-Office appropriation bill disposed of. I shall have to leave town in a day or so, and, although I have the greatest respect for the ceremonies that will take place to-morrow, an adjournment over will seriously embarrass me personally. If the Senate has not been in the habit of adjourning over that day, I should like to have a session to-morrow, in the morning at least.

Mr. FORAKER. I think every time since I have been a member of the body that the Senate has been in session when Memorial Day came it has adjourned out of respect to the day.

Mr. PENROSE. If that is the Senator's belief in the matter, that the Senate has always adjourned over, I shall not object.

Mr. FORAKER. I can not be positive about it, but that is my recollection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion made by the Senator from Ohio.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, I am in favor of the continuance of this mail service on this line. All of the gentlemen who have spoken on the subject seem to be in favor of it. It is one of the most important matters that I know of to the people along this line. It is stated that the business associations all along this line have unanimously asked that this service be continued. The bankers on this whole line through the South and many of those in New York insist on its being continued. The bankers are more interested in this quick motion of the mails than almost any other class of people.

I wish to suggest to those who desire this service continued that the best way to do it is to strike out of this bill the amendment which the committee has brought in and to take the House provision as it stands. We know what that means, and we know what it will effect; and the Senator from North Carolina does not seem to be certain what his amendment would produce. To my mind it is absolutely certain that his amendment would produce the discontinuance of this service entirely. Unless the Postmaster-General is so changeable that we can not depend upon his own statement of his own opinion, this service would be discontinued the moment of time arrived for the application of this provision.

Mr. President, I do not see any reason why the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads made this change. I can not understand it; and I especially do not understand why they did not make the same change, if they thought it was essential, in the paragraph which follows this provision. The two provisions came from the House in the same identical words, with the same proviso, and they amended one and did not amend the other. Why was this? I should like for some gentleman on the committee who favors this amendment to the House bill to explain why they did not put it on the other paragraph. If it was essential to one, why was it not essential to the other? I could myself give a reason and a very good one, I think. The roads run in the wrong direction.

I hope that the amendment reported by the committee will not be agreed to, and that the substitutes which have been offered will also be rejected, and that we will leave the bill as it came to us from the House. We know what that means, and we know what service it will produce. To reject the amendment will also take a very considerable item out of the committee of conference.

I hope those gentlemen who are in favor of continuing this service will see that that is the best mode to arrive at it.

Mr. PENROSE. As I have already stated, so far as I personally am concerned, I have no objection either to the substitute of the Senator from Florida or the suggestion made by the Senator from Alabama, to revert to the provision of the House bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORY] for the amendment of the committee. The substitute will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the proviso on page 25, at the bottom of the page, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall not be authorized to use the money hereby appropriated, or any part thereof, unless it be necessary in order to provide the same or as good a service as is now provided.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to ask if it is in order to offer an amendment to the substitute just adopted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not now in order, the amendment as amended having been agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. When will it be?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be when the bill is in the Senate.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire information as to the situation of the amendment proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS].

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not now in order, but it will be in order when the bill reaches the Senate. The Chair understood the Senator from North Carolina to withdraw it.

Mr. PETTUS. Then this subject has not been acted upon at all?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That specific amendment has not been acted upon.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 27, line 13, to reduce the appropriation for manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special delivery stamps, and books of stamps from $550,000 to $450,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 18, after the word "Government," to strike out "at any higher rate than offered for the same work by any responsible private contractor, nor shall the bid of such Department or bureau be at a price;" and in line 21, before the word "cost," to insert "labor;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no contract for the manufacture of adhesive postage stamps, special deliver stamps, or books of stamps shall be made by the Government with any Department or bureau of the Government below the labor cost of such work to the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 23, to reduce the appropriation for manufacture of stamped envelopes and newspaper wrappers from $1,075,000 to $1,025,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 3, to reduce the appropriation for manufacture of postal cards from $250,000 to $202,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 14, to reduce the appropriation for travel and miscellaneous expenses in the postal service, office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, from $1,000 to $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, Supplies for Postal Service," on page 28, line 24, to increase the appropriation for stationery, including all money-order offices, from $75,000 to $85,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 30, line 17, to increase the appropriation for wrapping twine and tying devices from $175,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 8, to increase the appropriation for pay of letter carriers and clerks in charge of substations of rural delivery service from $28,200,000 to $28,700,000.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, this bill carries $28,000,000 for free rural-delivery service, an increase of $7,000,000 over the last post-office appropriation bill for the same class of service. The history of rural free-delivery service is both interesting and gratifying to the farmers of the United States. This service was put in operation in the year 1896, less than ten years ago. Its growth has been phenomenal. The earliest date of establishing an experimental rural free-delivery route was October 1, 1896. Only $40,000 was appropriated for this entire service in the year 1897, and only eighty-three routes were in operation at the end of the fiscal year 1897. When the Post-Office Department began the experiment of sending the mail to the doors of more than 20,000,000 farmers throughout the length and breadth of this great country, this laudable work met with most strenuous opposition. It was predicted that the expense would be enormous, and that the task would never be accomplished.

Thoughtful men realized the value of such service and pressed the work with great energy and untiring industry, that the farmers of every State in the Union might receive their mail daily at their homes, thus enjoying the pleasures and profits derived from reading daily newspapers. In this way farm life was to be made more attractive and the farmer was to come in daily contact with the social and business world. In my opinion more real benefit is derived from this appropriation than any other appropriation made by the Government for public service. I do not undervalue the importance of the strength and power of our Navy and Army. Both are essential to the security and protection of the American people. But with a happy, contented, intelligent rural population the future of the American Republic is safe.

The following table will show the rapid progress this service has made since 1896.

On June 30, 1905, 32,055 routes were in operation. Mark you, only 83 routes were in operation in the year 1896. In a period of less than ten years this service has grown from 83 routes to 32,055. Only $40,000 was appropriated for this service in the year 1897, and in the year 1905 $21,116,600 was appropriated for the same service. The growth of the rural service year by year is shown by the following table:

[Page 671, Postmaster-General's Report for 1905.]

Fiscal year.	Appropriation.	Routes in operation.
1897	$40,000	83
1898	50,000	148
1899	150,000	391
1900	450,000	1,276
1901	1,750,000	4,301
1902	3,993,740	8,466
1903	8,054,400	15,119
1904	12,921,700	24,566
1905	21,116,600	32,055

Since June 30, 1905, 6,119 additional routes have been established; hence we now have in operation in the United States 38,174 routes. Say that each route serves 100 families and that each family, on an average, consists of 4½ members. This shows that 17,178,750 persons in the country on the farms are receiving the mail daily. This number embraces more than half of the farmers of the entire country, and this work should never cease until the mail is carried to the door of every farmer in the United States. The purpose of rural free delivery is to carry the mails daily to the farmers in the country, who otherwise would not receive a daily newspaper. The interest in this work has never abated in the least. The country people are hungry and eager for the daily mail service.

The total number of petitions filed for new routes during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, was 8,955, of which 7,572 were accepted for investigation. I again reiterate that the interest of the people in this service has shown no signs of abatement. I give below a table showing the number of routes in operation in each State June 30, 1905:

At that time my State, Georgia, led all other Southern States except Texas and Tennessee. I insert as a part of my remarks a letter received from the Department of Commerce and Labor, of date April 27, 1906, which will be of special interest to the people of my State:

Hon. A. S. CLAY.
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In accordance with the request of your secretary by telephone last evening, I respectfully report that according to the returns of the 1900 census the number of farms in Georgia was 224,691. If it be assumed, as seems just, that each farm supports an average of 4½ persons, the total number of farmers and dependents of farmers upon farms in Georgia would be 1,011,109.

There are 282,347 agricultural laborers, according to the census in the State of Georgia. It will probably not be safe to multiply this by more than two in order to secure the number of dependents upon agricultural laborers, for two reasons. First, many agricultural laborers have no families; and secondly, many women, particularly among the negroes, are classified as agricultural laborers, being cotton pickers; hence I ventured the personal opinion to your secretary that two was an ample multiple. If that be accepted, 564,690 people are either agricultural laborers or their dependents, a total of 1,575,799.

The total population of Georgia at the Twelfth Census was 2,216,331, leaving 640,458 persons in the State who are neither farmers, members of farmers' families, agricultural laborers, nor members of agricultural laborers' families. Of course this figure is entirely approximate, but I am inclined to believe your observation of conditions in your State will confirm its general accuracy.

Along the line of verification of this figure, I call your attention to the fact that by a census analysis recently completed of the urban and rural population of the various States of the Union, it appears that 15.3 per cent of the inhabitants of Georgia resided in towns and cities of larger than 2,500 inhabitants, while 84.7 per cent resided in the rural districts. This means that approximately 340,000 persons resided in towns, and 1,876,000 in rural districts, a proportion which seems to me to excellently conform with the calculation made above, since it is, of course, true that not everyone residing in rural districts is a farmer or farm dependent of some sort. By putting these calculations together you will perceive that 300,000 persons of the total rural population of the State are not accounted for in the first calculation above concerning farmers and farm laborers, which seems to show that the calculation is approximately correct.

Respectfully, yours, W. D. ROSSITER, Chief Clerk.

At the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1905, 1,181 routes were in operation in Georgia, each route supplying, on an average, about 100 families. Since that period about 120 routes have been established in the State. Thus it will be seen, at this time 1,301 routes are in operation in Georgia. Calculating that the average family consists of 4½ members, only 585,450 persons on the farms of Georgia are receiving their mail daily. Quoting the figures from the Department of Commerce and Labor, it appears that there are 224,691 farms in Georgia and that each farm supports an average of 4½ persons, making the total number of farmers and dependents of farmers upon farms in Georgia 1,011,109. It also appears that there are 282,347 agricultural laborers in the State, making the total number 1,575,799 persons residing in the country and who ought to receive the daily mail by the free rural delivery service. This calculation gives a family of two to each laborer. I hope the time is not far distant when every farmer in my State and throughout the entire country will have his mail daily sent to his own door. This service may not be self-sustaining for years to come. It will probably cost more than $50,000,000 per year to put in operation this service throughout the length and breadth of the entire country, and a part of the expense will necessarily have to be borne by the Government. But I predict the time will come, at no distant day, when this service will be self-sustaining. The benefits that accrue to all classes on account of this service are incalculable.

At no period in the history of my State have the farm lands increased so rapidly in value as during the last ten years, since this service was put in operation. The enhancement of the value of farm lands during this period has more than doubled in many sections of the country and better prices have been obtained for farm products. The people realize that in order to keep this service they must necessarily have good roads, and in many sections of the country hundreds of miles of country roads have been graded in order to obtain rural free delivery. The farmers are now subscribing for magazines and daily newspapers, and are in close daily contact with the business world, and country life is more attractive than at any other period in the history of the Republic. In my judgment, the rural carriers should be given permission to carry packages for the accommodation of their patrons. The privilege should be given to the farmer's wife to purchase small necessary family articles at the village shop through the rural carriers when it is inconvenient for them to go to the markets. The farmers should realize that rural free delivery of mail can never be made a thorough success except in localities possessing good thoroughfares, insuring rapid transit at all seasons of the year. The farmers bear a large part of the burden of taxation and they are justly entitled to some of the privileges accorded to others. The only way the farmer's family can be kept satisfied with country life is to put them in close touch and intercommunication with the world's thought and action, or they will migrate from the country to the already overcrowded cities. The farmer must be given the opportunity to take daily papers and monthly magazines, and to be put in touch with all the elevating, refining, and educating influences of the day. Of all men, the farmer needs the daily papers. He is enabled thereby to keep in touch with the world's advance, to be posted on current events, and to understand daily markets. Man is a social creature. He can not live by himself. He is anxious to communicate with others and to know what is going on in the social and business world. Isolation and loneliness bring about dissatisfaction with country life. The rural carrier each day brings sunshine and happiness to the country home.

The extraordinary extension of rural free delivery during the past ten years has proved to be most salient, significant, and far-reaching. The frequent and rapid distribution of the mail in great cities was nothing more than was expected, but to undertake the daily delivery of the mail at the individual and isolated farmhouse on the country road was a much more difficult task. It indeed was a new conception. The plan of embracing the country road and the rural home as well as the city street and the solid block within the Government agencies of communication was thought by some to be a task that could not be performed. The timid regarded it as too costly and burdensome to be admissible. This movement encountered most serious opposition when first proposed, and reluctantly Congress authorized the experiment. It took time and argument to develop and enforce the view that the great body of the country people, who live outside cities and towns, are entitled to share in advanced mail facilities. When we consider the task, we should not be surprised that many doubted its success. To undertake to deliver the mail daily to every farmer in the United States was a herculean task. The men who have given their time and thought to this great work deserve the good will of the American people. Who can calculate the benefits that have thus far accrued from this service? The farmer is brought into direct daily contact with the currents and movements of the business world. The Postmaster-General tells us in his annual report that a more accurate knowledge of ruling markets and varying prices is diffused, and the producer, with his quicker communication and larger information, is placed on a surer footing. Well does he say that the rural free-delivery service has become a great factor in the social and economic tendencies of American life. We know that the disposition to leave the farm for the town is a familiar effect of our past conditions. This tendency doubtless has been greatly checked by the free rural-delivery service. Well has it been said that rural free delivery brings the farm within the daily range of the intellectual and commercial activities of the world, and the isolation and monotony which have been the bane of agricultural life are sensibly mitigated. Wherever it has been extended the schools improve and the civic spirit of the community feels a new pulsation. The standard of intelligence is raised, enlightened interest in public affairs is quickened, and better citizenship follows. The Postmaster-General in his annual report for the year 1900 has described the powerful effect of this service on country life so well and truly that I most cheerfully adopt the same.

The Postmaster-General says the mails attest the visible presence and service of the Government, and not the least among the merits of the rural free delivery is its creation of the satisfying conviction of the farmer that he shares with the townsman the manifest advantages of which the Government is the direct minister. He feels that the organized and helpful agency of his country comes to his door, and the effect is to stir his conscious pride and stimulate his loyalty and patriotism. With all these results clearly indicated by the experiment, as thus far tried, rural free delivery is plainly here to stay. It can not be abandoned where it has been established and it can not be maintained without being extended. It is a service in which there can be no backward step. Those who enjoy its advantages will not consent to surrender them, and every new route creates a demand from contiguous territory for the same service. We are thus confronted with the problem of gradually extending the delivery service over the whole area of the country where it is physically feasible or where the population is not so sparse as to make it unreasonable. A project of such comprehensive and colossal character may seem formidable and deterrent, but while its difficulties are not to be underestimated, they are shown, when examined in the light of practical tests, to be far from insurmountable.

To make this service a success we must not neglect the rural carrier. He must be paid reasonable and fair remuneration for his services. He must be taught to feel a pride in his work, and that faithful service on his part will be appreciated and rewarded by the Government. The rural carrier, like all other employees of the Government, needs and must have a short vacation. He should be given at least fifteen days' vacation each year. I repeat, this splendid work in behalf of the farmers, now half completed, should be pressed vigorously and carried to completion within the next ten years. No candidate or political party disloyal to this service deserves the sympathy and support of the American people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 11, to insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That rural letter carriers after twelve months' service be allowed annual leave, with pay, not to exceed fifteen days; the substitutes for carriers on vacation to be paid during said service at the rate of $600 per annum: And provided further, That in the discretion of the Postmaster-General the pay of rural carriers on water routes who are employed only during the summer months may be fixed at an amount not exceeding $500 in any one calendar year.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to amend the proposed amendment by inserting in line 14, after the words "fifteen days," the following: "Exclusive of Sundays and holidays."

Mr. PENROSE. That amendment is simply using the phraseology of the provision as to holidays for city letter carriers, and there is no objection to the adoption of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After the word "days," in line 14, insert "exclusive of Sundays and holidays."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNHAM. I move to amend the amendment, in line 19, page 31, by striking out, before "dollars," the words "five hundred" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "seven hundred and twenty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, at the end of the line, strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and twenty."

Mr. PENROSE. This part of the bill applies only to some seven or eight cases in the whole postal service, a peculiar condition incident to summer travel in connection with some of the lakes. There is no objection to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. What is the amendment to the amendment? Let it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again read.

The SECRETARY. In line 19, of the committee amendment, strike out "five hundred" and insert "seven hundred and twenty;" so as to read:

That in the discretion of the Postmaster-General the pay of rural carriers on water routes who are employed only during the summer months may be fixed at an amount not exceeding $720 in any one calendar year.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 32, line 2.

Mr. LATIMER. On page 32, line 2, after the word "dollars," I offer the following amendment——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will not be in order until after the committee amendments have been acted upon.

Mr. LATIMER. This is not a committee amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads was, on page 32, line 5, to reduce the appropriation for travel and miscellaneous expenses in the postal service, office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, from $1,000 to $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 5, to strike out:

That hereafter no article, package, or other matter shall be admitted to the mails under a penalty privilege, unless such article, package, or other matter would be entitled to admission to the mails under laws requiring payment of postage.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, line 14, after the word "association," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That this provision shall not apply to any committee composed of Members of Congress.

So as to make the clause read:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful for any person entitled under the law to the use of a frank to lend said frank or permit its use by any committee, organization, or association, or permit its use by any person for the benefit or use of any committee, organization, or association: Provided, That this provision shall not apply to any committee composed of Members of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 32, after line 16, to insert:

That there shall be appointed a joint committee of Congress, consisting of three Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, whose duty it shall be to investigate, consider, and report, by bill or otherwise, to Congress its findings and recommendations regarding the second class of mail matter. The said joint committee shall have power to employ clerks and stenographers, administer oaths, send for persons and papers, and do all things necessary for the carrying out of its objects. For the payment of such actual and necessary expenses as may be incurred by the said joint committee in traveling and for the rental of quarters, printing, and other miscellaneous expenses of the joint committee the sum of $25,000 is hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first amendment passed over is on page 17.

Mr. PENROSE. On page 26, line 23, I desire to offer an amendment which was overlooked and which is particularly requested by the Postmaster-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 26, line 23, after the word "piers," insert:

And not exceeding $5,000 for payment of indemnity for the loss of registered articles in the international mails, in accordance with the provisions of treaty stipulations.

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment does not add to the appropriation, but simply provides that that amount may be devoted to that purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment on page 16.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it a committee amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. It is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The committee amendments have not yet been disposed of.

Mr. PERKINS. I beg pardon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee on page 17 which was passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, in lines 9, 10, and 11, the committee reported to strike out the words "Cincinnati, Kansas City, and Pittsburg" and to insert "Baltimore, Md.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Kansas City, Mo.; Pittsburg, Pa., and San Francisco, Cal."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent to recede from the vote taken yesterday on the committee amendment in lines 3, 4, and 5, on page 17, and to adhere.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is a committee amendment which has not yet been acted upon. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Illinois after that is disposed of. The amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Beginning at the foot of page 18 the committee proposes to strike out lines 24 and 25 and all of the bill down to and including the word "freight," on line 11, page 19, and to insert:

For pay of freight or expressage on postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, $250,000. And the Postmaster-General shall require, when in freightable lots and whenever practicable, the withdrawal from the mails of all postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, in the respective weighing divisions of the country immediately preceding the weighing period in said divisions, and such postal cards, stamped envelopes, empty mail bags, furniture, equipment, and other supplies for the postal service, except postage stamps and stamped newspaper wrappers, shall be, whenever practicable, transmitted by either freight or express.

Mr. STONE. I offered on yesterday an amendment to that amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment to the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment, after the word "express," line 2, page 20, insert:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster-General shall include periodical publications issued in magazine form by alumni associations of any university as second-class matter, and the same shall be admitted to the mails as such, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter and no more.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement to the Senate and then appeal to the Senate, particularly to the Senator from Pennsylvania who has charge of this bill, to do a simple act of justice to a number of my constituents. I regret that there are so few Senators in their seats, for I have absolute confidence that if Senators were present, and I could have their attention and make them understand the matter I rise to speak about, I would have no difficulty in getting their approval and assistance in what I am endeavoring to accomplish.

I have had this matter before the Senate on two former occasions and many Senators have some familiarity with it. About a year ago the Alumni Association of the Missouri State University began the publication of an alumni magazine. It was submitted to the postal authorities for admission to the mail as second-class matter, and was denied. My attention was called to the action of the Department by the editor of the magazine, and I was asked to communicate with the Post-Office Department and see if I could be of assistance. Since then I have had correspondence with the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, and I have personally interviewed him, and by reason of this and from other sources I have come to understand the situation.

Mr. President, I exhibit to the Senate a copy of this publication. [Exhibiting.] This is the issue of December, 1905. It contains sixty-nine pages of printed matter relating to a number of subjects. I was informed by the Post-Office Department that it was denied admission to the mails as second-class matter because it did not contain information of a public character, nor was it devoted to literature.

The law—that is, the act of 1879 classifying mail matter and providing the rates of postage—provided for the admission as second-class matter of newspapers and other publications which are issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and which came within the provisions of sections 12 and 14 of the act. Section 14 provides:

That the conditions upon which a publication shall be admitted to the second class are as follows:

First. It must regularly be issued at stated intervals, as frequently as four times a year, and bear a date of issue, and be numbered consecutively.

Second. It must be issued from a known office of publication.

Third. It must be formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications.

Fourth. It must be originated and published for the dissemination of information of a public character, or devoted to literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry, and having a legitimate list of subscribers.

The Third Assistant Postmaster-General held that this publication did not come within the limitations of that statute. I do not concede that, but for the present I will not join issue as to that. For the present I will waive that. Upon inquiry I found that exactly similar publications were being admitted to the mails as second-class matter. I found that an exactly similar publication was being issued by the alumni of the Pennsylvania University, and was going through the mails, and had been for several years, as second-class matter. I hold in my hand a sample copy of that publication. I also found that a similar publication, a copy of which I hold in my hand, was issued by the Wisconsin University Alumni Association, and that it was being admitted as second-class matter, and had been carried as such for more than seven years.

Mr. HALE. May I look at it?

Mr. STONE. Certainly; I am glad to have the Senator look at it.

I also here exhibit a copy of the Michigan Alumni Monthly, published under the auspices of the Alumni Association of the University of that State. This is No. 5, volume 11, and is of the same character as this Missouri publication. It is absolutely the same, as any Senator can see who cares to compare the two.

I now exhibit the Harvard Graduates' Magazine, another publication of exactly the same character. There can be no dispute about the exact similarity of the publications.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. What reason does the Third Assistant Postmaster-General give to the Senator, if any, for admitting the publications he has mentioned, published at Cambridge, Ann Arbor, and other college towns, and declining to permit to pass in the mails the college publication he refers to as published by the University of Missouri?

Mr. STONE. In a general way, I think I can say it is claimed by the present Third Assistant Postmaster-General that these publications which have been admitted were inadvertently admitted, or mistakenly admitted. He holds that——

Mr. HALE. And were afterwards thrown out of that class?

Mr. STONE. No; they have not been thrown out, as I will show to the Senator in a moment.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I was on the subcommittee to which this matter was referred, and I call the Senator's attention to the fact that at the time of the hearing of the subcommitee the Third Assistant Postmaster-General stated that before the Department had decided upon the policy, or rather before it had given the construction that is now given to the statute, these other publications had been admitted, and that he had finally given the construction which bars the magazine of the alumni of the University of Missouri. I think I should state that it appeared in the investigation that subsequent to denying the alumni magazine for the University of Missouri a magazine of exactly similar character published by the alumni of Dartmouth, I think, was admitted. He was not able to explain why that was so, except to say that it must have been done through either incompetency or inadvertence on the part of some of the subordinates.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to ask if, after his attention was called to it, the Third Assistant Postmaster-General made any effort to rectify either the one mistake or the other?

Mr. FULTON. He stated this——.

Mr. HALE. He should put them on the same level.

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely. Not only as to the entire number, but having excluded the publication issued by the students of the University of Missouri and having admitted the one issued by the student body of Dartmouth, I want to know if he afterwards excluded the Dartmouth publication; and if not, why not?

Mr. FULTON. In answer to the Senator, I will state that I called his attention to the fact that it was claimed the Dartmouth publication had been admitted. I had not at that time seen the publication. I subsequently saw it. He gave this answer, and I take it that is his answer, because he furnished no other subsequently, or rather after he had made the investigation: He said that it was the intention of the Department to exclude all these publications from the mail that did not come up to the standard which he had required in the case of the Missouri institution's publications; that they had not yet proceeded that far in their investigation, but they expected in time to get around to it.

I am bound to say, so far as I am concerned—that is my judgment—that, as it now stands, a very unjust discrimination is made against the publications of the alumni of the University of Missouri. I think all such publications should be excluded, or that this should be admitted. That seems to me to be clear.

Mr. BAILEY. This, Mr. President, is the most extraordinary and indefensible conduct I have ever known a Department to be guilty of. It might have been a good excuse that these publications were admitted before the present administration of the Department, which established another rule; but the same rule that would have kept these new ones out would have excluded the old ones under its operation. After they had excluded one publication, to admit another and a similar publication, and then exclude the admission of the second one upon the ground of inadvertence—which, I think, ought to have been described as incompetence—is one of the most extraordinary exhibitions of Departmental tyranny and arbitrary rule that I have ever known.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me a moment——

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand that Dartmouth College, in my own State, has a publication similar to this, which is admitted. Am I correct in that supposition?

Mr. STONE. Yes, sir; and it has been admitted since the Missouri publication was excluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. That makes it all the worse. I quite agree with the Senator.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator from New Hampshire will pardon me, I have a copy of the magazine to which he refers.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have not seen it, and shall be glad to examine it.

I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY], that there ought to be an inflexible and uniform rule governing this whole matter. My impression is that the difficulty is that the Department has not fixed a standard, and that they have got some sort of a notion that such publications ought to have a list of subscribers, but they do not say how many; that each publication ought to have some general literary matter in it, though they do not say how much; and that it ought to be published for the information of the public generally, rather than a particular class.

I think the same difficulty applies to other publications. As an illustration, the Episcopal bishop, who lives across the street from me at my home in Concord, N. H., is very much aggrieved that a church publication, which has a great deal of general news in it, most of it pertaining to the Episcopal Church, has been excluded, and he suggested to me that he thought other publications of a similar nature were going through the mails as second-class matter. I have not looked into it very particularly, except that some time ago I called the attention of the Department to that particular case, but I got no satisfaction.

There ought certainly to be a uniform rule concerning all these publications, and no discrimination whatever should be practiced. So I have no apology to make for the fact that the Dartmouth Bimonthly is going through the mails and the publication issued by the alumni of the University of Missouri is excluded. There is no excuse for it that I can discover.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] that, in my judgment, he would have used a better word if he had said "a law" instead of "a rule." There is too much rule and too much arbitrary dictation and assumption of authority, apparently or actually, by the Post-Office Department to satisfy me; and I will illustrate that by a little incident in my own affairs to show just how dictatorial they are. Three or four months ago I sent out some letters to certain rural free-delivery carriers in my State, asking them to send me the names of the principal patrons on their respective routes—those who would appreciate public documents and things of that character. I wanted it for my own use, to distribute public literature, seeds, etc. Of course in a small State like mine, or like that of the Senator from New Hampshire, he can understand what is meant by that, while Senators who represent large constituencies, where they run up into the millions, do not care about these little things and their constituents do not expect them.

Some of those carriers notified me that it was against the rules of the Post-Office Department for them to furnish such names to anybody. I thereupon wrote a letter to the Post-Office Department making inquiry as to whether I could not get the names of my own constituents for a perfectly legitimate and proper purpose, and asked that the regulations be modified so far as Senators and Representatives were concerned; but they sternly refused to do so, and said it was against their custom. Therefore I could not get them to do anything.

I can understand why it is not desirable that such names should be distributed generally, because there are certain instrumentalities of fraud practiced on unsuspecting people to get the names of bona fide residents so as to send them all sorts of circulars and all that kind of thing. I thought, however, it might be permitted that a rural carrier should send to a representative of his State or of his district in Congress the names of his constituents; but the high muck-a-mucks up here did not think it was permissible, and I had to submit.

I would suggest, instead of having so many abominable rules and regulations, as I will point out a little later—and I have been waiting for such an opportunity—that we ought to have a little more specific legislation, statutory law, regulating the Post-Office Department, so as to get rid of such complaints.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Missouri will further permit me——

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and I think the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, if I understand the provision aright, had that in view in the appointment of a commission to take up this entire matter and report to Congress. I have not read the proposed amendment very carefully—it may not be in good form—but I think the committee have that in view.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. STONE. I yield.

Mr. CARTER. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire, in connection with his observations, that the recommendation of the Postmaster-General was in effect that a mixed commission be appointed to investigate the questions involved in the second-class mail matter and the alleged loss to the Government in connection with it. It was the belief of the committee that the two Houses of Congress could investigate, for the use of Congress, to better effect and in a more satisfactory manner than could the mixed commission suggested; and in consequence the amendment proposed is that a joint committee of the two Houses of Congress shall be charged with the duty of investigating all matters relating to the transportation of magazines, newspapers, and other forms of literature and matter under the second-class rate. We believe that good results could not be expected, at least to the satisfaction of Congress, from the mixed commission proposed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Just a word more. In view of the fact that our mails are loaded down with the cheapest possible trash, in some cases carloads going out from a single city, and that a small city, in the country, literature that in the very nature of things can do no one any good, and that all sorts of pernicious printing is being circulated in that way, I want to put in the RECORD my feeling that the best interests of the people of the entire country dictate that publications of this kind, emanating from the colleges, publications issued by church organizations that tend for the uplift of the American people, ought certainly to be admitted pending an inquiry such as is proposed.

I trust the Post-Office Department will exercise more liberality in that regard than they seem to have done in the past. I should be very sorry indeed to have the Dartmouth Bimonthly excluded from the mails, it having been admitted—I do not know upon what representation—but I also want the publication in which the Senator from Missouri is interested likewise admitted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I do not want to be tedious, yet I want the Senate to understand this matter. I have read the material part, so far as it applies to the present consideration, of the act of 1879. The Post-Office Department at first admitted publications under that act which, under a later ruling, the Department excluded. Numerous complaints were made because of the subsequent ruling of the Department. Growing out of those complaints Congress, in 1894, passed an amendatory act, providing specifically that certain kinds of publications should go into the mail as second-class matter. Publications of the character of these magazines were admitted under that amended act of 1894. There was no difficulty about them being admitted. They were admitted as a matter of course.

Wanting to be entirely fair to the Department, I wish now to say that these publications issued by Harvard, by the Pennsylvania University, the Michigan University, the Wisconsin University, and by other alumni associations whose publications I have exhibited, were let in as second-class matter under the more liberal construction of the law which obtained up to about 1901. When Mr. Madden came in as Third Assistant Postmaster-General he changed the rule and applied a more restrictive rule regarding admission to the second class of mailing matter. It was after this new ruling of the Department that application was made for the admission of this Missouri University alumni magazine. My complaint, if I have any at all specially to urge against the Department as being unfair and unjust, lies in the fact that after the Third Assistant Postmaster-General had actual notice for approximately a whole year that these publications were passing through the mails as second-class matter, he took no steps to right the wrong. I called his attention to the fact myself, personally and by letters addressed to him months ago.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I assume that the Senator from Missouri did not ask that they should be excluded.

Mr. STONE. I did not, and I do not ask it now.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think they ought to go in the mail as second-class matter.

Mr. STONE. Yes; they are all meritorious publications.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will pardon me until I can complete my answer to the Senator from New Hampshire, I will say that I did insist to the Department that if the Missouri magazine was to be excluded the others should be excluded also.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is what I meant to say, that the Senator's contention was that if the others were continued, the magazine in which he is interested should be included.

Mr. STONE. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is right.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am free to say that there seems to be here some question as to the consistency of the ruling of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General upon these magazines, especially as shown in the two cases of the Missouri University magazine, which was excluded, and the Dartmouth alumni magazine, which was afterwards admitted. One can understand that if the present Third Assistant Postmaster-General established a more stringent rule, it might take some time to cast out those that have already been put in; but these two cases, as I say, seem to show a difference of consideration to two institutions that apparently are on the same level. I can not believe that this has been done with the intention of inflicting any injustice.

I have had some experience with the matter of second-class mail. At one time I, with other members of the Maine delegation, spent a good deal of time in traveling back and forth to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, trying to get established certain rules affecting second-class matter. I got the impression then that the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, beset by many difficulties, met with a very great task, and with divers, almost innumerable magazines and periodicals, was trying to do the right thing; that he meant to be just and to hold an even balance; and I can not now, with the impression which I got then, believe that there has been any intention of doing injustice or of discriminating in two cases that are exactly alike.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri——

Mr. HALE. I was going to ask the Senator if he has laid this matter lately before the Third Assistant Postmaster-General and has, to use a common phrase, "had it out with him?"

Mr. STONE. Yes, I will answer the Senator; but first I want to submit to the inspection of the Senator from Maine the Dartmouth Bimonthly, an alumni publication, and the Missouri publication. [Handing magazines to Mr. HALE.] The Senator from Maine can observe that the bimonthly was entered as second-class matter October 26, 1905.

Mr. HALE. That is the Dartmouth publication?

Mr. STONE. That is the Dartmouth publication. Two months before that, and only two months before, or less than that, this Missouri publication was denied admission.

Now I come directly to the Senator's question. I did not call the attention of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General to the Dartmouth magazine until about a month ago, for I did not know about it until then; but I did call his attention to the other publications which I have shown to the Senate, and which have been running in the mails for a greater or less time.

About a month ago, or a little less, there was a hearing before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. I introduced a resolution here in the Senate covering this subject—and the resolution was debated more or less at the time—calling upon the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to inquire, ascertain, and report to the Senate whether discriminations were made in the admission to the mail of this character of publications. That was one of the things that they were to inquire into. Upon the hearing growing out of that resolution the Third Assistant Postmaster-General was present and was examined. The whole matter was gone over. Just a few days before this hearing I was informed by the editor of this Missouri publication of the existence of the Dartmouth College publication. At the hearing the matter was gone over with the Assistant Postmaster-General, and he thoroughly understood it then; but still nothing has been done. I am not asking that anything shall be done in the way of excluding the Dartmouth Bimonthly or any of the publications previously admitted to the mails, but I do insist—and I have the right to insist—that if the Postmaster-General will not give my constituents, the alumni of the University of Missouri, relief from this discrimination, then that the Senate and the Congress shall step in and see that justice is done.

Mr. HALE. Yes; I see how the Senator feels. I should hope, from my impression about the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, that the publication of the university of his State will at no very distant day be given the same privileges that other publications have. Why it has not been done up to this day I do not know; but I can not yet believe that it is with any thought of doing injustice to that institution.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STONE. I will in a moment. I want to say one word further to the Senator from Maine. It is almost inconceivable, I admit, that the Postmaster-General or any of his assistants would make deliberate discrimination against one university or college in favor of another. I do not know just what to say about it; but I know that the fact is that the post-office officials are fully informed of all these matters. I have gone over this personally with those officials, and I have written to them. The editor and publisher of this magazine, employed by the alumni association of the university to conduct it, has also written them letter after letter. The matter has been before the Third Assistant Postmaster-General for months. He was before the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads something over a month ago. The whole matter was gone into at that time. He was examined and made his statement of the case. I will say in this connection that it was developed on that hearing that Assistant Postmaster-General Madden did not personally inspect these magazines when they were offered for admission to the mails——

Mr. HALE. That is quite likely.

Mr. STONE. But they were sent to a clerk—I suppose a $1,200 or $1,400 clerk—and he passed upon them, and that was the end of it. I asked him if the same character of publication would go to the same clerk, and he said, "Ordinarily, yes."

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. STONE. With pleasure.

Mr. PENROSE. Perhaps I should have advised the Senator from Missouri earlier in his remarks that I am willing to accept his amendment, so far as the committee is concerned——

Mr. DOLLIVER. Before that is done——

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator will wait one moment, please—although I think the complaint will be amply—at least I hope it will be—met by the amendment at the end of the bill, providing for a joint committee of both branches of Congress to consider these matters and to report next December the proper remedy for these abuses, if any exist. While I have no disposition to cut short the Senator's speech, I simply desire to advise him that I shall not oppose the amendment.

Mr. STONE. I am perfectly willing to have my speech cut short. I want to say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, however, that I approve of the amendment added to the bill providing for this joint committee or commission to revise the laws relating to second-class mail matter. It ought to be done. The whole subject needs revision. But here is the trouble, Mr. President, so far as this particular matter is concerned. This commission will not meet until after Congress adjourns. We know how slow the processes of these investigations are. We do not know just what will come up. If you undertake to change the law or to increase the postage rate, there will be protests coming here to Members of the House and members of the Senate, and there will be a diversity of views.

I can not tell, nor can any Senator tell, when the legislation that this commission may initiate will be brought to a conclusion; the matter may run on indefinitely. The only thing I ask of the Senate and of the Senator from Pennsylvania, as chairman of the committee, is that alumni publications in the form of magazines, issued by the alumni of universities—I have confined it to the alumni of universities—shall be admitted as second-class matter. It is, at most, only a slight enlargement of the present provisions of the law. I believe they are entitled to admission now, but no harm can come from making it clear. I want them specifically named in the statute. I see no other way to make sure of remedying this injustice. Of course, I suppose it will be done after awhile. The Department itself may remedy it in the course of time. I do not know what the Department may do. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has said that the Department would certainly correct it after a while. Yes, and judgment day will come after a while. We have been running on in this way for months, almost a year, trying to get this done, and we are now where we were at the beginning. If this discrimination is intentional, if it is possible to conceive it to be intentional, then it is a shameful outrage; and even if it is unintentional, it is so unjust that every Senator's sense of justice must and ought to revolt against it. It seems to me that this amendment ought to go on the bill and ought to be kept in the bill. That is the important thing—to keep it in.

Mr. DOLLIVER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment which has been presented by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE].

Mr. STONE. I do not suppose that is in order; but I should like to hear it read.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I think the Senator will accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment the following:

Provided further, That all regular periodical publications issued from a known place of publication at stated intervals and as frequently as twelve times a year, by or under the auspices of charitable, educational, or religious institutions, which institutions are not conducted for pecuniary profit, if such publications are made to further the objects and purposes of such institutions and are formed of printed paper sheets without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding, such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications, are under the true meaning of existing law entitled to be admitted to the mail as second-class matter, and at the rate of postage fixed for second-class matter and no more, and the existing laws with reference to second-class mail matter shall hereafter be so interpreted.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, personally I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as I heard it read; but I can not consent to modify my amendment. I offered a bill covering this subject, as well as the resolution to which I have adverted. Now I have to put all that aside, and I have narrowed the scope of my bill, which covered a good many things besides the publications of university alumni associations, simply with a view of remedying this one wrong, and to reach that only. That is all I am seeking to do; and I hope the Senator from Iowa will not press his amendment, because, if he does, I am satisfied that it——

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if he has not narrowed the proposition too much? He confines it to universities, if I understand his amendment.

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. FULTON. Well, would that admit the publication of college alumni publications?

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator, I first wrote it "colleges and universities," and I struck out "colleges" and left "universities."

Mr. FULTON. I ask the Senator if the publications of colleges should not be admitted equally with university publications?

Mr. STONE. I think so.

Mr. FULTON. I would also suggest that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] is not wider than the present law, if it is so wide; it certainly is not wider, and under the construction given by the Post-Office Department these publications will still be excluded.

Mr. SPOONER. On what ground?

Mr. FULTON. Because they are not publications of the colleges themselves, but are alumni publications.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator refers to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER]?

Mr. FULTON. I refer to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa. These alumni publications are not college journals, strictly.

Mr. STONE. No.

Mr. FULTON. At least, the Post-Office Department makes that distinction, I recall.

Mr. STONE. Yes. If they were printed by the colleges or the universities——

Mr. FULTON. Or under their auspices.

Mr. STONE. They would come in under the very terms of the law.

Mr. FULTON. They are not printed under the auspices of the colleges.

Mr. STONE. No; they are not.

Mr. FULTON. Hence the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa would exclude them.

Mr. STONE. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that I was induced to strike out the word "colleges" from the amendment as I first prepared it because of an apprehension that an objection might be made on the ground that it would admit business colleges or any school which went under the name of a college. While I have no objection to including colleges, I did not wish to imperil this amendment.

Mr. FULTON. Still, the Senator is aware that there are many schools that go by the name of colleges which are of just as high character as those that go under the name of universities.

Mr. STONE. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. FULTON. When you employ the term "universities" you exclude all publications by college alumni associations.

Mr. STONE. Yes. But I must conclude. I am growing too prolix.

I want to say to the Senator from Oregon that my purpose was simply to meet this particular case, so that this publication might go into the mails along with other similar publications and enjoy that privilege until the law shall be amended on the line of the suggestion contained in the committee amendment to the bill. That is all I am seeking to do. I am perfectly frank about it, and there is no reason why I should not be.

Mr. FULTON. Will the Senator allow me? The Senator, I think, understands that I am in full sympathy with his desires in the matter. I have said that the investigation I have made convinced me that an injustice was being done the University of Missouri in excluding as second-class matter the publication he mentions. I do not think it was an intentional injustice. I think it grew out of the fact that some subordinate in the Post-Office Department was either incompetent or negligent in the matter. But the amendment the Senator offered, it seems to me, will exclude many publications that are equally as meritorious and in reality of the same class as that which the Senator is seeking to have admitted, and therefore I thought he should broaden his amendment and make it apply both to colleges and universities.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, am I correct in understanding that the Senator from Pennsylvania, in charge of the bill, said he would agree to this amendment as I proposed it?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Did the Chair understand the Senator from Pennsylvania to say he is willing to accept the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the amendment of the Senator from Missouri and also the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the objection to inserting "or quarterly?"

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. STONE. I, of course, assume that the Senator from Pennsylvania is accepting these amendments in all seriousness. I have no right to assume anything else. I want to be dealt with, of course, with perfect frankness and fairness in this matter. The mere acceptance of the amendment, with a view to striking it out in conference, would do no good. I should like to have an expression of the Senate upon it, and will ask a vote on my amendment unless I can be assured of perfectly fair treatment.

Mr. PENROSE. If I am appointed one of the conferees on the part of the Senate, as I suppose I may be, I should consider it, of course, my duty to press to the best of my ability the bill as passed by the Senate. I can not answer for the House conferees on this subject.

Mr. STONE. I was led to make that remark, I will say to the Senator, by the liberality which he displayed in accepting every amendment proposed, without regard to number or character.

Mr. PENROSE. Because I recognize that these cases involve great hardship, they have my deepest sympathy; and it is because they have my deepest sympathy that my heart goes out to them, and I am willing to accept the various remedies suggested.

The committee considered these matters very carefully, and went to the point of referring the particular case of the Senator from Missouri to a subcommittee, which gave several sessions in hearing his complaints. It was thought that this remedy, especially recommended by the Postmaster-General, as modified by the committee, recommended at the instigation of the periodical publishers themselves, would meet this condition, and that everybody would be satisfied with it. But now that is impressed on my mind by this debate that that satisfaction has not been obtained, I am willing to accept these amendments and shall in good faith endeavor to defend them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified. The Senator from Pennsylvania accepts the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, which has been reported, and he also accepts the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. SPOONER. I move an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa. It is to insert the words "or quarterly."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. If amended, it will read:

All regular periodical publications, issued from a known place of publication, at stated intervals, and as frequently as twelve times a year, or quarterly.

Mr. GALLINGER. "As frequently as four times a year."

Mr. SPOONER. I think the word "frequently" ought to be stricken out. Let it read "monthly or as frequently as four times a year."

Mr. GALLINGER. "At least four times a year."

Mr. NELSON. I should like to have the entire amendment reported with all of these accepted amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment as modified.

The SECRETARY. On page 20, line 2, after the word "express" in the amendment of the committee, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided, That from and after the passage of this act the Postmaster-General shall include periodical publications issued in magazine form by alumni associations of any university as second-class matter, and the same shall be admitted to the mails as such, and the postage thereon shall be the same as on other second-class matter and no more. Provided further——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was in hearty sympathy with the effort of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to remove the discrimination against the magazine published at the university of his State, and also with the effort to admit to the privilege of the mail all college magazines. I can not conceive of any publication which the Government could so well afford to carry at a loss as these magazines published at our various institutions of learning. But it seems to me we are now about to practically abolish all limitations upon second-class mail matter. I believe the Police Gazette is now entitled to the privileges of the mail and to the cheap rate of postage. Just exactly how any officer of the Post-Office Department or any Senator or Representative could ever evolve it from his consciousness that the public good could be served by having the Government carry a publication like that at a loss is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. SPOONER. There are some worse.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator from Wisconsin says the mails carry some worse publications, and so they do, because the Police Gazette, I believe, confines itself to publishing what is true, although bad, while some magazines of semirespectable standing not only publish what is bad, but go outside of the truth to find something to publish. I readily agree that there are publications of somewhat less respectable standing than the Police Gazette, but I believe we have not attempted to classify them as respectable and disrespectable.

But what I rose to protest against is this: The Government is to-day carrying second-class mail matter at a loss of over $20,000,000 annually. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], who is a member of the committee and who is always accurate, suggests to me that the loss is $27,000,000. I put it to the Senate whether it is better to let the people who publish the magazines or those who read them pay this $27,000,000 or lay it as a burden of taxation upon the people who do not have the time to read them, and compel them to contribute to carry cheap and sometimes unwholesome literature to those who are well able to pay a small increase in price, which would cover the cost of transportation.

As for my part, I believe the Government ought no more to carry a magazine at a loss than it ought to perform any other service at a loss. Originally it was not contemplated that magazines and other forms of merchandise should become a part of the postal system. It was organized for letters and newspapers, and if it were properly confined to-day to the object of its original organization, it could supplement the liberal appropriation which is now made for the free rural delivery, and instead of a deficit there would be a surplus. The letter mail of the United States to-day not only pays its own expense, but contributes a round sum toward meeting the losses incurred by the Post-Office Department in carrying other matter; and it seems to me that, instead of increasing the deficit which arises from carrying this second-class matter and leaving the taxpayers of the country to meet this deficit, we ought to exclude from the mails some of those things which are now carried at a loss.

Of course, we have grown into the habit of feeling that if the Government performs a service for us at a loss or for less than we can obtain that same service from some other source we have gained that much; and perhaps the man for whom the particular service is performed does gain that much. But whatever he gains somebody else must lose. It is trite—so trite as almost to offend the Senate—when I repeat that the Government has no money with which to perform these services at a loss, and whatever the Government does somebody must pay for the doing of. Either the person for whom it is done or the taxpayers for whom it is not done must bear the expense.

Mr. President, I protest against burdening the taxpayers of this country in order to give cheap transportation to the publications that are issued for profit. The college magazine for which the Senator from Missouri speaks is not issued for profit. There is no thought of that in the minds of the young men who edit such publications; and if they are carried at a loss there is complaint, because complaint lies against any losing transaction; but surely that complaint is reduced to a minimum of force. But when the Government is asked to carry the various publications, every one of them published for the sake of profit, at a loss, it is an injustice to the taxpayers of the country—an injustice which is already great enough and one which ought not to be made greater.

Mr. President, suppose I should say—I am not sure but that the time will come when it will be said, and it will probably become a popular proposition—that as a means of spreading the Gospel we will carry all religious publications free. Surely, if the Government is to engage in a work of that kind, there would be no just criticism in that. Of course some of us would rather have less of the Gospel and pay for it out of our own pockets. But the real thrifty people, who think that everything they get from the Government is that much saved, migh want to insure the salvation of their souls through a governmental expense.

I see no reason why, if we are going to carry many publications at a loss, we should not carry some publications for no charge at all. Let us say to all the religious denominations of the country, "We will carry your papers free," because those religious papers are not published for the sake of profit. I doubt if any of them declare large dividends. I doubt if many of them pay extravagant salaries. They are conducted for a high and an unselfish purpose, and no Senator here and no man elsewhere begrudges them an increase in their circulation. We know that their prosperity means the spread of a better rule of life, and we welcome an extension of their circulation. But shall we extend it by taking money from the taxpayer's pocket, when that taxpayer does not happen to be a Christian, in order even to teach him and his children a better way to live?

There are other publications almost as well deserving of free transportation in the mails as these. But nobody proposes to carry them free. Yet, Mr. President, it is a difference in degree and not in principle. When the Government carries them at a loss, it is only another step until it carries them for no charge at all.

But I leave all that aside, and I raise my protest against this extension of the privilege of cheap mails to those publications which are issued solely and only for profit, publications that do not scruple to appeal even to a vicious and a morbid taste if only they can thus extend their circulation and so increase their profit. Let all such, Mr. President, if admitted to the mail at all, pay the Government for carrying them all it costs the Government to perform that service.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Texas [Mr. BAILEY] are absolutely correct, and, striking as is his statement, he hardly goes to the full limit of facts. The abuses under the second-rate mail privilege are becoming so colossal as to startle the imagination and even to test our credulity. Sixty per cent of all the mail matter carried by the Post-Office Department consists of this second-class mail matter. It was originally intended to apply to those publications the purpose of which was the dissemination of useful information to the public. That purpose has, under various pretexts, been grossly abused and widely departed from. It was originally intended that those publications whose purpose was the dissemination of useful knowledge should be received by bona fide subscribers, and that element of the original law has likewise been widely departed from, until to-day most of these publications are simply pretexts for the circulation of large numbers of pages of advertising and are given away to an alleged subscription list which does not contain 10 or 20 per cent of bona fide subscribers. The people of the United States are practically being called up to pay nearly $30,000,000 a year in order that advertisements of automobiles and soaps and patent medicines and farming implements and all the various and multitudinous items which people in various sections of the country are interested in may be advertised free of the charge of transmission, solely for the benefit of those engaged in trafficking in such merchandise.

Not only does this matter constitute the bulk of our mail matter, but there are being started every day in the United States from eight to fifteen alleged periodicals, all claiming the privilege of second-class mail matter. The pending bill this year carries an appropriation of $192,000,000. It is only a question of a few years when it will pretty nearly double that amount. Four or five hundred million dollars in the Senatorial life of many Senators here present will be the amount carried by this bill.

The deficit, owing to the extension of the rural free delivery and other improvements of the service, has been increasing with a dangerous rapidity, and unless something is done courageously by the Government to confine the privilege of the second-class matter to its original and legitimate purpose, the whole postal system will be threatened with an absolute breakdown. It may be that there are inconsistencies in the rulings of the Department. I take it for granted that that must be the case, because these abuses have been accumulating since the act of Congress providing for the privilege of second-class mail matter down to the comparatively recent period of Mr. Madden's incumbency of his present position, when he, acting under the direction of the Postmaster-General, began his present vigorous and systematic investigation and correction of these abuses.

If periodicals are still being carried through the mails which are equally open to objection as those concerning which the Senator from Missouri complains, I take it that it is because they have not been reached; that it has been physically impossible to prune the whole system of these abuses rather than that there has been any favor or any discrimination in the allowance of these privileges.

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania permit me, in connection with what he is saying, to call attention to the report of the Postmaster-General in regard to second-class matter. The Postmaster-General says:

During the last fiscal year the total weight carried at 1 cent a pound and free, was 663,107,128 pounds. If it cost the Government as much as 5 cents a pound to handle this matter in the mails, it will be seen that the amount paid out was $33,155,356.40. The actual revenue was $6,186,647.54.

This shows that the Government of the United States paid nearly $28,000,000 more money for handling this mail than it received. Is it not true that about 85 per cent of the revenue derived from handling the mails comes from first-class matter? I believe the Postmaster-General time and again has recommended that the cost of carrying second-class matter is so great that the postal charge on the same ought to be increased.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Georgia is entirely correct, and the appropriation of some $30,000,000, expended for this service, is practically a philanthropic benefaction to the venders of merchandise. Not only are there many cheap periodicals daily started, and, under various catching terms, given an appearance of bona fide character, but even the older periodicals of the country are gradually degenerating into the same condition; and anyone who buys a magazine, whether it be the Atlantic Monthly or any other old periodical, has only to observe that three-quarters of its weight is made up of advertising matter, with a streak of literary effort, generally feeble and ineffective, running through the center.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. PENROSE. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania, as he has pointed out this injustice and these wrongs, why it is that no attempt has been made in the bill to correct them?

Mr. PENROSE. There is an attempt.

Mr. McCUMBER. Or if there is an attempt, what that attempt is, and why it can not be made broad enough to entirely eliminate the evil?

Mr. PENROSE. The attempt, as I have already several times stated, is found in the last amendment to the bill, inserted on the recommendation of the Postmaster-General, providing for the appointment of three members of the Senate and three Members of the House to thoroughly investigate this question and report remedial legislation to Congress next winter. The matter is extremely complicated, and it was thought impossible and impracticable to report any complete system of legislation at the present session of Congress.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. President, I must oppose this amendment unless the Senator who offered it will consent to insert the words "or college" after the word "university." Otherwise it will simply extend this privilege to universities and will deny a like privilege to colleges.

Mr. STONE. If the Senator will permit me, the amendment I proposed has been agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I do not understand that it has yet been adopted. The Senator from Pennsylvania said he would accept it, but I do not understand that it has been as yet adopted by the Senate.

Mr. STONE. I understood the Chair to state that it had been agreed to.

Mr. FULTON. I agree entirely with the Senator from Pennsylvania that the rate on second-class matter should be increased, and I think some discrimination should be made between publications. For instance, newspapers probably should pay a less rate of postage than magazines. Daily newspapers are necessary to everyone; magazines are not so necessary. I think a discrimination should be made there, but in the meantime there ought to be no discrimination between publications of this character. It is in order to obviate that discrimination pending some reform of the law that the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is offered; but I ask that the words "or college" be inserted immediately after the word "university" in the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the Senator from Iowa as accepted by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The Secretary read as follows:

And provided further, That all regular periodical publications issued from a known place of publication, monthly or quarterly, by or under the auspices of charitable, educational, or religious institutions, which institutions are not conducted for pecuniary profit, if such publications are made to further the objects and purposes of such institutions and are formed of printed paper sheets, without board, cloth, leather, or other substantial binding such as distinguish printed books for preservation from periodical publications, are under the true meaning of existing law entitled to be admitted to the mail as second-class matter and at the rate of postage fixed for second-class matter and no more, and the existing laws with reference to the second-class mail matter shall hereafter be so interpreted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON] proposes an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "university," in the proviso offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE], insert "or college."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, this amendment is agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

COMPULSORY EDUCATION IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives relating to Senate bill 1243.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate agree to the amendments made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BAILEY. As I caught the reading, it establishes a compulsory system of education in the District.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does.

Mr. BAILEY. I have always had some doubt about the justice of a law which taxes one man to educate the children of another man, but I have surrendered that doubt to the almost universal judgment of my countrymen. I can not, however, go beyond that and admit the right of the Government to supersede parental authority in the matter of educating all children, and I must therefore vote against this bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. As a rule, the proposition is to go on the street for the children and send them to school.

Mr. BAILEY. In this enlightened age, with so many charitable and religious people, it looks to me like you could influence them to go to the schools you have provided for them without compelling them to do so.

I did not happen to be here when that bill was passed. I simply am unwilling that any bill establishing a compulsory system of education shall pass a body of which I am a member without my saying that I am opposed to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the question be put on agreeing to the amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon I asked that the amendment on page 18 be reconsidered for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is such an amendment now in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is now in order.

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk the proposed amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 18 of the bill, at the end of line 23, add the following:

And provided, That the Postmaster-General shall require all railroads carrying the mails under contract to comply strictly with the terms of said contract as to the time of arrival and departure of said mails, and it shall be his duty to impose and collect fines for delay at the rate of 20 per cent of the value of each train carrying mail, when such delay is not caused by unavoidable accidents and when such delays on any given route shall aggregate in any month more than five hours or on any day shall be more than two hours.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator whether there would be any objection to adding after the word "accidents" the words "or conditions," so as to read "unavoidable accidents or conditions?" I suppose a condition of storm——

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know what the Senator means by the word "conditions."

Mr. PENROSE. A violent blizzard or storm might delay trains. A washout of a track, perhaps, might not be an accident.

Mr. TILLMAN. Of course, I am after simply getting the mail delivered with reasonable regard for the contracts, and I do not want to have the conditions of delivery made burdensome or unreasonable. If it is thought best to broaden the provision a little, I have no objection.

Mr. PENROSE. I think it would strengthen the Senator's amendment by making it a little more practical and reasonable. That is the only reason why I suggest it.

Mr. TILLMAN. I hope the Senator will incorporate it in it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the words "unavoidable accidents" insert the words "or conditions."

Mr. TILLMAN. Now, Mr. President, my reason for offering this amendment will occupy some little time, although I shall be as brief as possible; but I want to present the facts to the Senate in order that the Senate conferees may have something more than a mere guess, probably, as to the reasons actuating me.

Some time in the latter part of February I received a letter from the president of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce complaining about the delays in the arrival of trains from Washington. The exhibit was so remarkable that I immediately took the matter up with the Post-Office Department. I wrote back to the president of the Chamber of Commerce and asked him to give me the facts and to state the reasons why he complained about the delays in the trains. I will send to the desk a letter written on the 24th of March by the president of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, accompanied by a letter to the president of the Chamber of Commerce from the president of the Clearing House Association of the banks, showing just what the business interests of Charleston have had to put up with in regard to these delays which I am seeking to have remedied.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHARLESTON CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Charleston, S. C., March 24, 1906.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of the 6th instant was much appreciated, and I regret that the reply to it has been so long delayed. The principal cause of this delay was the difficulty and the time consumed in getting the inclosed figures, and partly by absence from the city.

From Mr. Grice's letter you will note that during the period of fifty-five days covered by this statement the Southern Railway train No. 16 has been on time less than ten times and the Atlantic Coast Line train No. 85 less than twenty times. Mr. Grice's letter explains how these continued delays affect the banks, and I understand other branches of business complain also of the bad effect upon them.

Asking your help in this matter and thanking you for the willingness expressed in your letter to give us the assistance of your influence, believe me,

Yours, respectfully, J. ADGER SMYTH,
President.

Mr. TILLMAN. It has been suggested to me by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] that instead of having them read I might have these matters printed, and I will ask that the succeeding letter be treated that way rather than occupy the time of the Senate in hearing it read. It relates to the inconvenience and disarrangement or loss of time in regard to the receipt of the mail and the handling of checks and transactions by the banks.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF CHARLESTON,
Charleston, S. C., March 21, 1906.

Hon. J. ADGER SMYTH,
President Charleston Chamber of Commerce, City.

DEAR SIR: We are inclosing you a table showing the arrival at the post-office of mails by train No. 16, over the Southern Railway, and No. 85, over the Atlantic Coast Line, from January 15 to March 10.

You will note that No. 16, over the Southern, has come in less than ten days on time. The Coast Line less than twenty times. The Coast Line train is not so important, for the reason that the bulk of the northern mail comes in on the train due 11.30 p. m., but mail over the Southern Railway is very important.

As the banks make their daily clearings at 10 o'clock, unless they can get the mail from the post-office by 9 a. m. it is impossible to put checks through the clearing house that day, consequently items have to be held over until the next day, which amounts to a considerable loss in interest.

Should these trains arrive on time, the post-office department is able to distribute them to the boxes in ample time for our needs, but when they arrive, as they frequently do—No. 16, over the Southern; No. 85, over the Atlantic Coast Line, and the vestibule train—at the same time, it is utterly impossibly for the clerks to distribute this mail to the boxes in less than several hours' time, which means that it is very often from 11 to 12 m. before we can get it.

We trust that you will be able to help us out in this matter, and any further information that you may want will be cheerfully furnished.

Yours, truly, E. P. GRICE,
President Clearing House Association.

Mr. TILLMAN. Some time the latter part of March I went to the Post-Office Department and had a talk with the Second Assistant Postmaster-General. I called his attention to the outrageous way, I will say, in which the railroads were treating that community. On the 2d of April I received a letter from General Shallenberger, who had had the matter under advisement, and I will read that, as it is quite brief:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE,
Washington, April 2, 1906.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, City.

SIR: Referring again to your personal interview, at which time you called up the question of delays of mails for Charleston, S. C., I would state that careful inquiry has been made, and it is found that while there have been numerous delays to mails dispatched by Atlantic Coast Line train 85, at 3.45 p. m., there has been still greater trouble with mails dispatched over the Southern line, and which reach Charleston by express train No. 16, scheduled to leave Columbia at 1.40 a. m. and due at Charleston at 7.30 a. m., the latter train having been on time but five days from February 1 to March 30, 1906, inclusive. The record received thus far from train 85 of the Atlantic Coast Line indicates that it ran upon time ten days from February 1 to March 24, inclusive, and was late forty-two times, though these delays were not as great as those affecting Southern train 16. The Department is giving this matter all the attention possible, and hopes that there will be a manifest betterment at once.

Very respectfully,

W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

In addition to that, Mr. President, I have here a table prepared by the president of the Clearing House Association, giving the dates upon which the train was late, beginning January 15 and ending March 10. I will ask to have that incorporated and printed along with the Postmaster-General's letter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. TILLMAN. I have here a letter of May 3 from the chairman of the railroad committee of the city council of Charleston, making complaint along this same line, and calling attention to the absolute failure of the railroads to comply with their contract. I ask to have that printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 3, 1906.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On February 27 the Charleston Clearing House Association addressed to city council a petition in reference to delay of the mails arriving at the Charleston post-office. These papers were handed to me as chairman of the railroad committee of city council and sent to Postmaster Harris, of this city. Mr. Harris was kind enough to give me the information asked for in reference to time the mails should arrive at the post-office and the time they did arrive from a period covering from February 1 to March 16, and in his reply, returning papers, he suggested that I take the matter up with the honorable Second Assistant Postmaster-General at Washington.

I herewith inclose copies of letters of March 28 and April 23. As yet I have had no reply to either of these letters. You can readily understand that the business interests generally are suffering owing to delay in the arrival of the mails, and we assume that the transportation companies are under contract with the Government for the delivery of same. I would therefore ask, as a special favor, that you take this matter up and see if you can not get us relief from the present conditions.

I must apoligize for bothering you with a matter of this kind, but knowing that you are interested in such matters, I would ask that you take it up at your earliest convenience.

Awaiting your commands, I beg to remain, yours, truly,

R. BEE LEBBY,
Chairman Railroad Committee, City Council, Charleston, S. C.

Mr. TILLMAN. I have another letter from the president of the railroad committee of the Charleston city council, dated May 7, transmitting a letter from Major White, Superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, which speaks for itself, and shows the absolute necessity for action by Congress if any relief is to be had.

The letters referred to are as follows:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 7, 1906.

Senator B. R. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Referring to my letter of the 3d, in reference to delay of mails arriving at Charleston, S. C., I am just in receipt of a letter from Mr. White, and inclose you copy.

You will note that he claims that the Department has no way of forcing the railroads to maintain schedules. This is rather a surprise, as I was under the impression that the Department could compel transportation companies to deliver mails with reasonable promptness in accordance with their schedules.

If you can help us in this matter I will appreciate it. Thanking you in advance for your attention, I beg to remain,

Yours, truly,

R. BEE LEBBY,
Chairman Railroad Committee, City Council, Charleston, S. C.

MAY 5, 1906.

Mr. R. B. LEBBY,
Chairman Railroad Committee of City Council,
Charleston, S. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 23d instant, addressed to the honorable Second Assistant Postmaster-General, relative to delayed running of trains into Charleston, and in response to your inquiry as to what action the Department proposes to take to secure relief, have to say that the attention of the railroad companies have been called to the matter and that the Department has urged that the trains be run on schedule time, but the question of railroad schedules is one over which the Department has no jurisdiction. I regret that it is not in a position to compel the companies to run the trains upon schedule time.

Very respectfully,

JAMES C. WHITE,
General Superintendent.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I want to do exact justice to the Post-Office Department. Among other things, I obtained from the Second Assistant Postmaster-General a copy of the order of the Department of October 2, 1905, in relation to the delay of trains. Having made application to the Postmaster-General to spur up these roads by collecting fines, he sent me this, and with it a letter stating that under the circumstances the Department did not see its way clear to enforce the provisions of the order, showing that the Postmaster-General already has the authority to assess fines and spur up the roads, but has felt unwilling to do it. It was with a view of having the law specifically direct and compel him to do this that I have put in evidence the facts as set forth with the amendment which specifically relates to such conditions as will force the roads to pay when they fail to deliver their mails. I ask to have this incorporated also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The order referred to is as follows:

Deductions on account of inferior service.

OFFICE OF THE SECOND ASSISTANT POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., October 2, 1905.

On account of the inferior service resulting from failures to observe the schedule on routes, or parts of routes, on which railroad mail service is not more frequent than seven times a week each way, it is ordered that in certifying to the performance of the service on such routes for, and subsequent to, the quarter ended December 31, 1905, deductions be made at the rate of 20 per cent of the value of each train that arrives at the termini or junction points fifteen, or more, minutes late and the aggregate number of late arrivals is ten, or more, without satisfactory excuse in any one quarter, except that no deduction of less than $1 will be made.

W. S. SHALLENBERGER,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. TILLMAN. I do not know that there is anything more necessary to be said. The chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has assured me that he sympathizes with the purposes of the amendment and will endeavor to see that it does not go out in conference. I have given sufficient facts, I think, to warrant the effort on the part of Congress to compel the roads which are receiving, as I think, an excessive rate for the transportation of the mails to have some regard for the business interests which they serve, or which they fail to serve. These delays have been so outrageous in our part of the country, from one cause or another—mainly, I think, by reason of inadequate engines or something like that—I thought it was advisable, at least, to try to get Congress to incorporate a provision of this sort and make the rule general, so that the railroads would be notified hereafter that unless they were more cautious and exerted themselves to a greater degree to comply with their agreements with the Government and deliver mail on time they would have to pay for it.

Mr. PENROSE. I will accept the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer an amendment on page 16, line 11, to come in after the word "service."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, line 11, after the word "service," it is proposed to insert:

From a port of the Pacific coast of the United States via Hawaii and the Samoan Islands to Australasia, on steamships of the United States of not less than 16 knots speed, for a service once in three weeks at a maximum compensation not exceeding $217,000 a year in addition to the compensation now provided pursuant to contract under the act of March 3, 1891, entitled "An act to provide for ocean mail service between the United States and foreign ports, and to promote commerce."

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, in support of this proposed amendment I desire to ask to have read at the desk a letter from the Postmaster-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., April 24, 1906.

Hon. GEORGE C. PERKINS,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the call of yourself and ex-Congressman Loud, and to your letter of the 17th instant, relative to the additional compensation which it is proposed to pay to the Oceanic Steamship Company, now under contract with this Department, for ocean mail service from San Francisco to Australia, by way of Honolulu and Pago Pago, I have to say that careful consideration has been given to the representations made as to the very great importance of this service and the wholly inadequate compensation which it is claimed by the company is now being paid for the same as provided by the act of March 3, 1891. The contracting company in written communications to the Department claims that they are now conducting the service at a heavy loss, and that unless relief comes speedily by a liberal increase in compensation, it will be unable to continue service under the contract after July 1 proximo.

In that event the Department can not look to the sureties for a continuance of service, as they would be without suitable vessels; nor could the Department hope to secure proposals under a new advertisement unless the compensation provided by the act of 1891 shall be materially increased. The efforts of the Department for a period of ten years succeeding the passage of the act failed to secure a proposal for service of this character, and it was not until 1901 that the proposal for this particular service, from San Francisco to Australasia, was secured and a contract executed; mails to be carried in fast steamers of over 6,000 tons register, with sailings maintained regularly every three weeks; with compensation at the rate of $2 per mile, outward voyage, as provided in the act mentioned for vessels of the second class. The contract is for a period of ten years, covering seventeen trips per year; the route is 8,329½ statute miles in length, yielding an aggregate compensation of $283,000 per annum, in round figures. The volume of mail has largely increased since the beginning of the contract term.

The interests of the Government in the Philippines, and the Hawaiian Islands, and at the several naval stations in the Pacific Ocean, render it highly desirable to maintain mail service in vessels flying the flag of the United States and sailing with a frequency and speed equal at least to those of other countries. Both Canada and Japan are contesting more and more vigorously with this country for the carriage of mails from the Pacific coast to Australasia and the Orient. They are increasing compensation to regular steamship lines with a view to securing shorter schedules and better mail service from Vancouver and San Francisco.

These conditions seem to justify favorable consideration of the proposed increase of compensation provided by Senate bill 529, and in general of such legislation as will make it possible for vessels sailing under the flag of the United States to compete with foreign vessels for the mail service of the Pacific.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. B. CORTELYOU,
Postmaster-General.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, at this late hour I do not care to go into a discussion, for the reason that the Senate has already given its approval to this amendment in the passage of the bill known as the bill for the "development of the American merchant marine and American commerce." This is the exact phraseology and the exact amount that the Merchant Marine Commission recommended after hearing testimony. But I will trespass upon the Senate for a few minutes just to read an extract from their report. It was, as you know, a nonpartisan commission. They devoted nearly a year's time to the taking of testimony in the different commercial ports of the United States and to devising some means whereby we could resuscitate and rehabilitate American commerce. The minority of the Commission made a report, but nowhere in that minority report have I been able to find any objection taken to this special recommendation.

I will, Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, read a brief extract from their report. It is stronger and more forcible than it is possible for me to otherwise present it. That report says:

In the first place, the American line to Australasia operates in Pacific waters, where the cost of fuel, labor, etc., is considerably greater than at Atlantic ports. Secondly, the line is required to maintain a very high speed. Furthermore, the ships of the company employ exclusively white crews, instead of the Asiatics utilized by many other Pacific companies.

This American line to Australasia not only performs the best service, but now receives the lowest compensation of all lines running to Australasian ports. This service is so regular and swift that great numbers of Australasian men of business, even when bound to Europe, are brought en route to the United States, and thereby become regular purchasers of American merchandise. The very heavy increase of our exports to British Australasia, from $12,674,000 in 1896 to $27,401,000 in 1904, is due, unquestionably, in a great degree to the extraordinary efficiency and regularity of the ill-paid American steamship service out of San Francisco.

The increase provided for in the present bill is $217,000 a year, which, added to the $283,000 now paid, will bring the compensation to the American line up approximately to the compensation paid European steamship companies and will a little more than restore the original rates of the postal-aid law of 1891, which were cut down, to the serious crippling of that measure, when the bill passed the House of Representatives.

It is announced authoritatively that unless the subvention to the line to Australasia is increased as proposed the service, which has been losing heavily every year, will have to be abandoned. In that case our increased Australian trade would inevitably go in large part to other countries, involving a loss of millions of dollars a year to American producers. The Merchant Marine Commission believes that it would be recreant to its duty if it did not provide for the continuance of an American steamship line which has fought so bravely against such heavy odds and has achieved such notable work in the expansion of American commerce.

This report was made after that commission had visited every port on the Pacific coast from Victoria to San Diego, where they took testimony, and where they investigated this whole subject-matter. There is no question but that it will be beneficial to the trade and the manufacturing interests of the country to continue this American line, the only one plying between the United States and Australia and New Zealand. Indeed, the British Government has seen the advisability of coming in and sharing this trade with the United States, by subsidizing a line of ships plying between Victoria, British Columbia, and Australia. We are only asking this for the Oceanic Steamship Company, operating ships built in American shipyards, built in the city in which the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads [Mr. PENROSE] resides, the money which was used in constructing those ships having been paid out to mechanics and laborers in his city and his State; those ships being manned to-day by American seamen, American citizens, or those who are capable of becoming American citizens; which pays the best wages that are paid by any line of steamships in the United States; whose ships travel a route of seven thousand two hundred and some odd miles, from San Francisco to Sydney, at an average speed of 15 knots, or nearly 17 statute miles per hour, which is the fastest line there is in the world which passes through the Tropics; and yet, Mr. President, its owners have been operating it under great disadvantages.

The people who own that line, the Spreckels Brothers, a family who are among our most enterprising citizens, went into this new line of business to build up their trade. They have lost on an average $360,000 a year in operating those ships; but their pride as American citizens in seeing Old Glory flying at the peak has impelled them to go on and keep this steamship line operating in energy and in force, as it is to-day, for the development of American trade and bringing the trade of the colonies of the South Sea into the United States.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. PERKINS. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. PATTERSON. I desire to ask the Senator from California if this is one of the subsidies that is contained in the shipping bill, which has already passed the Senate and is now pending in the other House?

Mr. PERKINS. It is a subvention, I should prefer my friend from Colorado to call it, rather than a subsidy.

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, we will not quarrel about that now; but I will suggest to the Senator from California that if that bill passes and this provision is incorporated in the pending bill, he will have the subsidy or subvention twice told.

Mr. PERKINS. Since I, as a boy before the mast, following the sea, saw the pride of the nation—ships built by Americans on the ocean—decline and go out of use, I have waited to see them revived, but "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," and so I would rather this would go into the pending bill, where my friend from Georgia, my friend from Texas, and my friend from South Carolina will put their little amendments, and they will go into conference, and if our conferees do not convince the conferees of the other House that these are proper amendments they will go the way of other amendments which have gone to that bourne whence no amendment has ever returned. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the Senate has already given its expression by an overwhelming vote on this proposition. It is true my friend from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] made some slight objection, but he was frank enough to admit that, of all American steamship lines of which he had knowledge, the Oceanic Steamship Company was the most thoroughly American line; that it treated its sailors and its officers better and paid them better wages than were paid by any other steamship company in the world; and I think by his silence he acquiesced in the passage of the subvention bill, which was reported to the Senate and which passed the Senate and is now on file in the House of Representatives. I have several bills on file myself which, I think, when reached in due course, will undoubtedly pass.

I want, Mr. President, for the information especially of my friend from Colorado, to state that we would not ask for this appropriation—and when I say "we" I mean the people of the United States; I have no pecuniary interest in this matter; I am not interested, directly or indirectly, in any steamship business; that has passed away, but it has left me with experience, and I am investing now in lands, which will not burn up as buildings do when earthquakes and conflagrations come—we would not ask for this appropriation but for the fact that we have in competition, Mr. President, with this American steamship line six other lines, one French, one German, three British, and one Japanese. The Oceanic Steamship Company are making seventeen trips a year, or one every three weeks, between San Francisco, Sydney, Australia, via Honolulu, Pago Pago (Samoa), and Auckland, New Zealand. Those ships are, on an average, 6,000 tons, and receive a subvention—no, compensation—for transporting the mails of the United States of $16,659 a trip, with an average speed of 15 knots an hour, equal to 17 statute miles.

The British ships plying between Victoria and Sydney make but fourteen trips a year. They are ships under 3,500 tons. They make twelve voyages—one a month—and yet they receive $27,500 per trip, or nearly double what our ships that are nearly 3,000 tons larger receive; and yet, Mr. President, we would not come here as we do if it were not for this competition, if it were not for the fact that the French, the English, and other foreign governments are subsidizing their ships, and the Japanese are operating theirs for 58 per cent less than we are able to operate our American ships.

But aside from the fact that you are only paying them a fair compensation for the transportation of the mail in these ships, we are placed in direct communication with our naval station at Pago Pago, in Samoa, where, without them, the Navy Department or the War Department would be obliged to operate transports or other vessels in carrying supplies and in attending the only naval station we have in the South Pacific.

I think, Mr. President, the compensation received for this service would not more than pay for operating one of our naval vessels or a United States transport. All this is in addition to the great commercial interest and the great commercial benefit which we derive from this line of steamers that is being operated by this company.

The hour is late, Mr. President, and I am afraid my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], if I keep on talking, will not be strenuous in retaining this amendment in conference, while he would be disposed to do otherwise if I occupy no longer time. Therefore I hope he will accept this amendment, thereby only ratifying that which the Senate has heretofore done, and is a proposition on which, I think, the committee looked with favor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] was, in the opinion of the majority of the members of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, a most meritorious one, and it has been ably and persistently advocated by the senior Senator from California and his colleague [Mr. FLINT] before that committee and with individual Senators. At the same time the committee thought that it was a subject regarding which there was great diversity of opinion between the two sides of this Chamber, and that it might lead to considerable controversy.

It was also thought that the matter was already provided for in the Gallinger shipping bill, which is now pending in the House of Representatives, and of the passage of which we are all hopeful, and that there was no real reason for making a discrimination in favor of the Spreckels line, leaving the numerous other interests provided for in that bill without any attention. In fact, the suggestion of this discrimination and apparent favoritism had caused considerable resistance and opposition from the friends of the Merchant Marine Commission measure, who thought that the whole subject ought to rest upon the final passage of that bill by the House. For these and other reasons the committee, while deeming the amendment very meritorious, thought that perhaps the Senator from California had better wait until the shipping bill passed, it being evident that when a thing is a good thing it can never come too soon and it is difficult to wait for it. However, this amendment has been offered, and it is for the Senate to determine whether it shall be inserted in the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I want to call the Senate's attention to the testimony in regard to this item. It is brief. Mr. Loud appeared before the committee and advocated this amendment. It was first adopted by a majority of the committee, the minority voting unanimously against it. The amendment was then reconsidered and rejected by the entire committee. Now, I want to read briefly some of the testimony in regard to the item involved. It will take only two or three minutes:

Senator TALIAFERRO. Is it a monthly service?
Mr. LOUD. No; once in three weeks.
Senator CULBERSON. You say the Government now pays this line $283,000 a year for this mail service?
Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir.
Senator CULBERSON. Upon what basis does that rest?
Mr. LOUD. Two dollars a mile under the act of 1891.
Senator CULBERSON. They are paying all that is allowed under the present law?
Mr. LOUD. Yes, sir.
Senator CULBERSON. This $217,000 would be in excess of the law on the subject?
Mr. LOUD. Yes. The reason we urge this particular amount is because the Senate has already passed this particular provision.

That is, in a general bill—the ship-subsidy bill—which included this item——

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. PERKINS. I should like, if my friend from Georgia will permit me——

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. To state that this company is only asking the rate which, under the act of March 31, 1891, a ship would get provided it could make a speed of 20 knots an hour. That is all. She now makes 17 knots an hour, but if she had a speed of 3 more knots an hour than she now has she would be entitled to it under the provisions of that act. Therefore it seems, considering all the conditions and the great disadvantages under which the company labors in plying their steamers to Australia as against those that ply the North Atlantic and receive a subsidy of $4 a mile on the outward voyage, that it should apply to this company. Because ex-Representative Loud, of California, did not explain that, I venture at this time to inject this explanation into the speech of my friend from Georgia.

Mr. CLAY. We are all glad to oblige the Senator from California at any time, but I think the reading of the testimony will convince the Senate that this item ought not to go into this bill at least.

I now resume the reading of the quotation from the testimony:

Mr. LOUD. Yes. The reason we urge this particular amount is because the Senate has already passed this particular provision.

Senator CULBERSON. Not unanimously, though, I think.

Mr. LOUD. I was present in the Senate, and I did not hear my friend from Texas object to it.

Senator PERKINS. I will state to the Senator that Mr. Mallory, who is on the committee, was very strongly in favor of this appropriation.

Senator CULBERSON. He was against the bill, however.

Mr. LOUD. If I may make the statement, I do not think there would have been so many Democratic votes against that portion of the bill as there were against the other portion.

Senator CLAY. You mean the mail service was more popular than the other.

* * * * * * *

Senator CARTER. What is the subsidy of that line?

Mr. LOUD. Three hundred and thirty thousand dollars. They make monthly service. They are comparatively small boats. One of them is of 4,000 tons, and there are two others of 3,200 or 3,300. Of course, it is not nearly as expensive a service to operate as ours. Ours make 15 knots from the hour of departure to their destination.

Senator CULBERSON. Mr. Loud, do you deny that the present law affords reasonable compensation?

Mr. LOUD. Absolutely. There are no lines operating under the act of 1891 except two or three little small lines that go now and then down to South America and Central America.

Senator CULBERSON. Probably you misunderstood my question. I will repeat it in a little different form. What I mean is this: Do you believe, taking it as an abstract and also as a practical question, that the $283,000 for carrying a mail is or is not a reasonable price for the service rendered by this steamship company?

Mr. LOUD. I do not. They can not operate under it.

Senator SCOTT. He says they are losing money.

Senator CULBERSON. I am talking about the quantity of mail they carry.

Mr. LOUD. Of course the pay for the mail amounts to about $90,000 a year, if that is the point you are aiming at.

Senator CULBERSON. I want to get your opinion as to that particular question. Considering the service rendered, the amount of mail carried, is $283,000 a reasonable compensation for that service to the Government?

Mr. LOUD. I will answer it in this way, Senator: We could get the mail carried that is now carried for about $90,000.

Senator CULBERSON. We pay, then, $190,000 in addition to what it could be carried for by other people?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Senator CULBERSON. And you still want that increased by $217,000?

Mr. LOUD. Of course it must be borne in mind that the act of 1891 was not absolutely a postal act. It considered the question of the commerce of this country.

Mr. President, just a word further. I do not wish to attempt to discuss in any way a subsidy bill at this time. I say that when we are here for the purpose of passing an appropriation bill which is to provide for paying the expenses of the Post-Office Department annually we ought not to take into consideration and incorporate into the bill a distinct subject that necessarily will lead to great discussion.

It is true that the ship-subsidy bill has passed the Senate and has gone to the House of Representatives. It is pending there now before a committee and contains this identical item. To take one item or two items or three items out of that general bill and insert them in the post-office appropriation bill, in my opinion, is absolutely indefensible. You might just as well get a dozen items, Mr. President, from that bill and insert them in this; you might just as well take the entire subsidy bill and insert it in the post-office appropriation bill. We have already inserted in this bill three or four items which, in my opinion, ought not to have gone into it and which are pure legislation. We are reaching the point where we enact half of our legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. President, if you consider the rules of the Senate, I do not believe the amendment is in order. I call the attention of the Chair to the general rule on the subject, which is Rule II, on page 16, and I make the point that the amendment is not in order, being general legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is in contravention of the rules of the Senate, and is not in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask, Mr. President, the status of the committee amendment at the top of page 17 of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been disagreed to, which restores the text of the House bill.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois moves to reconsider the vote by which the amendment at the top of page 17 was disagreed to. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 17, line 3, after the word "years," the committee amendment proposed to strike out:

And with the right of termination at the discretion of the Postmaster-General of any such contract at the end of any year of the contract term after four years, on one year's notice.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no objection to that amendment remaining in the bill, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GALLINGER. It seems to me, Mr. President, in view of the fact that some Senators who expressed an interest in that amendment are not present to-day, that we ought not to take action such as is contemplated. The Senate is very thin.

Mr. HOPKINS. It would simply put it in conference.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not think so.

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; it would.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; it would put it in conference. That is the reason I wanted to have the vote by which the amendment was rejected reconsidered. I want to have the amendment adopted, so as to get a disagreement between the House and the Senate on the subject.

Mr. PENROSE. I think the Senator from New Hampshire does not understand the suggestion.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand it now. I did misunderstand it. Personally I have no objection to the proposed action.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to reconsider the vote by which the amendment referred to was disagreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. What amendment is it, Mr. President?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment at the request of the Senator from Colorado.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LATIMER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 32, at the end of line 2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 32, at the end of line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That patrons on all rural free-delivery mail routes now established or that may hereafter be established may put up, for their individual use, boxes constructed of such material, either wood or metal, as they desire, and that carriers on all rural mail routes shall deposit mail in such boxes in like manner as in boxes now in use.

Mr. LATIMER. Mr. President, under the present rule of the Department, in order to get a free rural delivery route, it is necessary for the patrons along the route to buy at least seventy-five patented boxes. The result is that a great many rural delivery routes are denied to the people of the country, and where the routes are established a hardship is placed upon the people that is not required even in the star-route service, as it now exists. Even under the old star-route service the Department never required that approved boxes be bought and put up for the deposit of mail. Any citizen who lived along the route was allowed to make or buy his own box—any kind of a box he desired to have the mail put in. Such is true under the present star-route service, and in the cities, where the receivers of mail are not required to buy special patented boxes in order to have their mail delivered. The mail is deposited where the recipient of the mail directs that it shall be put, and in the manner, place, or receptacle pointed out by him.

I say it is a mere departmental ruling—it is not a law—that seventy-five of these patented boxes shall be bought in order to have a free-delivery route established. Such a condition is a financial hardship upon the people who live along the route, compelling them to buy boxes when they ought to be allowed to make their own boxes. They can be depended upon to provide boxes that will be satisfactory to them, be sufficiently secure, and therefore I think the amendment which I have offered ought to be adopted.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. LATIMER. For a question.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think, before any vote is taken on the amendment, it is proper to state that under the present system these boxes are furnished by the Post-Office Department, and the delivery of the mail in those boxes makes it mail until it is taken by the person to whom the mail is addressed, and papers or letters taken from those boxes are taken from the Post-Office Department precisely as they would be if taken from the post-office proper.

If the amendment of the Senator shall prevail, it will simply make each one of these boxes a free place, so that any thief who comes along the highway can, with perfect immunity from prosecution under the postal laws, break into any of those boxes and take out the mail.

Mr. LATIMER. In answer to the statement made by the Senator from Illinois, I will say that he is in error in stating that these boxes are furnished by the Department.

Mr. GALLINGER (to Mr. HOPKINS). You are wrong about that.

Mr. LATIMER. The boxes are all bought by the patrons along the route from the postmaster or direct from the manufacturer, provided they are of the type approved by the Department.

Mr. HOPKINS. But they are under the control and supervision of the Post-Office Department, are they not, the Department requiring——

Mr. LATIMER. The Department has approved certain makes of boxes, and require that only these shall be used. I have a list here of the manufacturers whose boxes are approved. The patrons of the office are required to buy their boxes exclusively from these manufacturers.

There is one other remark I should like to make in reply to the statement made by the Senator from Illinois, and that is that I see no reason why the Federal law should not punish persons interfering with the mail of a farmer whether it was in an approved patented box or one of his own make, as they are all left open without a lock. It is a matter of common knowledge that in the rural free-delivery service throughout the United States boxes are left open. I know that in my county, where we have complete rural-delivery service, the mail carrier merely pushes the mail into the box, and there is no more protection in the present approved box than there would be in a wooden box made by a farmer, because the present approved boxes as a rule are open at both ends, and none of them are locked.

Mr. HOPKINS. But there is the protection of the law. The point I was making—it may not be sound—is that if we should change that rule it might fix it so that the recipient of the mail in a box of that kind would not be protected against thievery. It is a matter in which I have no interest one way or the other, and I only make the suggestion for the consideration of Senators before the vote is taken. It may be that there would be equal protection in one box as in the other.

Mr. LATIMER. I went over this matter with the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General this morning, and he stated that on all star routes they have just such boxes as the patrons along those routes furnish, but that he thought there ought to be a uniform system. It was his opinion that the star-route patrons either ought to be required to buy approved boxes, such as are used in the rural free-delivery service, or that the discrimination against rural delivery patrons ought to be abolished, as it was unjust to require one and not the other to buy these specially approved boxes.

With regard to any meddling or tampering with the mail, I can see no reason why the law should not and would not punish the guilty party whether the mail was in one of the most expensive approved boxes or in one of the cheapest and most economical boxes a farmer would put up and be willing to have his mail deposited in. In either case, it is the intentional interference with another person's mail that is the crime, and such would doubtless or ought to be whatever the nature of the receptacle.

Mr. HOPKINS. If they are protected in one as well as the other, I can see some merit in the amendment.

Mr. LATIMER. That was the statement made to me this morning.

Mr. HOPKINS. It seems to me that if the box is prepared by the recipient of the mail the delivery of the mail would be precisely like it is in any house in a city.

In the city, where the mail is delivered in the house or office, after it is once delivered there the Post-Office Department has nothing further to do with it, and if the letters are gathered up either in the house or office, it is not a robbing of the mails in the sense that it would be if the mail was taken from a post-office box that was under the control of the Department itself.

Mr. LATIMER. We have had the star-route service for a long time, and the providing of boxes has been left entirely to the discretion of the patrons, and, so far as I know, there has never been the least bit of trouble of the kind which the Senator imagines might flow from the adoption of this amendment.

There is just one further statement I wish to make in this connection. Recently I saw a published notice that the Post-Office Department had ordered these boxes be painted. It will require at least $30 on every rural delivery route throughout the country to paint these boxes, and there are at least 38,000 of these routes in the United States. Consequently I figure it would cost about $100,000 to paint these boxes. Adopt this amendment which I have offered and the people will be relieved from this expense, and each man will be allowed to provide his own mail box and get rid of this expense. I think that everyone is sufficiently interested in the receipt of his mail and its protection to provide an adequate receptacle.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that six or eight years ago, shortly after rural delivery became so popular, I made an effort here, with the very best possible ability that I possessed, to get the Government to furnish these boxes to the various patrons of the rural free-delivery route at cost. I then had substantial proof, in the shape of a box right on my desk, made out of galvanized iron, according to the specifications and pattern required by the Post-Office Department, offered in large quantities—by the twenty or forty thousand, I have forgotten the number—at, I believe, about 60 cents apiece, whereas the post-office regulations, which have been mentioned by my colleague, then, as now, although the price has fallen some, compelled every patron on a rural route who wanted his mail put into a box to buy one of a certain class of boxes that had been approved by the Post-Office Department. There would not be any rural free delivery established unless they did comply with the conditions imposed by the Post-Office Department. People throughout the United States have been compelled to spend in the last seven or eight or ten years, since the rural system has been in vogue—I do not know how many thousands of these boxes are in use, but certainly it is a very large number; perhaps my colleague can tell me——

Mr. LATIMER. There are seventy-five to a hundred on each route, and there are 38,000 routes.

Mr. TILLMAN. How many hundred thousand would that make?

Mr. FRYE. It does not make any difference.

Mr. TILLMAN. Anyhow, there has been a large expenditure of money by the farmers, who have been compelled by the Post-Office Department to purchase these boxes or not have the benefit of rural delivery. I agree with my colleague that it is an imposition upon the farmers of the country to compel them to purchase these boxes that are approved by the Department, under the specious plea that it offers protection against thievery. I hope the amendment will be adopted, because it is along the line of relieving the people of the country from an imposition.

I will mention, further, that at the time of the discussion in the Senate there were some very grave and serious accusations here against the Post-Office Department, and since then one of the officers has been convicted. But the charge was made—and I dare say it could have been proved if it had been pressed—that he was in collusion with manufacturers of these boxes and was getting a rake off for compelling the people to buy them. I do not know that any such thing exists now, but it would be along the line of relieving the farmers of the country and the users of the free-delivery service of a burden and an imposition if we could get the permission to have a man use such a box as he sees fit, and order his mail put in it and take the responsibility and be absolved from the necessity of purchasing a box approved by the Department.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he would object to an amendment to his amendment to the effect that the box shall be approved by the inspector having the route in charge?

Mr. LATIMER. I would, for the reason that there is where the trouble is now. The farmers have to buy a box that is approved by the Post-Office Department in order to get the route established. There is the trouble, and I propose by this amendment to relieve them of this order.

Mr. PENROSE. It does not seem to me that that is the trouble. Such an amendment would give permission to the farmer along the route to make his own box. He would not have to purchase an alleged patented article, but he could make his own, provided the design met the approval of the inspector.

The committee carefully considered the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina and took the view that the recipient was not the only individual who had rights in connection with the delivery of a letter. The sender of a letter has rights equally important, and he should not be placed at the mercy of the recipient who may design some cheap box. I suppose it would have a bottom, but it might have a hole in the bottom—and some of us would like to have a hole in the bottom of the box for some of the mail we receive.

In any event, it might not have a cover that would protect the mail from the elements, and thereby the destruction of notices of promissory notes and demands for the payment of bills and other little disagreeable features of our daily life would, under the amendment of the junior Senator from South Carolina, run riot. It seems to me the amendment is almost calculated to encourage delinquent debtors and those who desire to evade their just responsibilities rather than to eradicate graft from the Post-Office Department.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PENROSE. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Is there any difference in law between a box that a farmer has to buy and one that he makes himself?

Mr. PENROSE. I am not willing to go into that point. I simply want the rural free-delivery system to be assured of a box that will properly protect the mail deposited therein from the elements by having a cover on it and from the ground by having a solid bottom in it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? Does not the law of self-preservation apply in this case, and would not a farmer naturally want a box that would preserve and protect his mail?

Mr. PENROSE. The amendment leaves the standard to the farmer, while the Government takes the ground that it has a right to fix the standard, so as to protect the sender of the mail as well as the recipient of it.

Mr. LATIMER. I should like to ask the Senator a question, and then I shall be willing to have a vote on the amendment. His speech would indicate that the farmer ought not to be allowed to use discretion in this matter, while he is perfectly willing to accord that discretion to those who live in the cities, who are not required to put up boxes, and to those on the star-route service, where there is no requirement that a patented box shall be bought. Why discriminate in the rural free delivery and leave these other classes to use their own methods in getting their mail?

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that any such discretion prevails in connection with city delivery. There may be an apparent exception in connection with the star-route service, which is a peculiar and particular branch, forming but a small part of the business of the Government as a whole. It hardly furnishes a parallel to or example for city delivery or rural delivery.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. LATIMER]. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair the noes have it.

Mr. LATIMER. I demand a division. ["No!" "No!"]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will again put the question. [Putting the question.] In the opinion of the Chair, the noes have it.

Mr. LATIMER. A division!

The Senate proceeded to divide.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the yeas and nays. It is manifest that there is not a quorum present, and we may secure one on a roll call.

Mr. LATIMER. What was the decision of the Chair?

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair was about to announce the result when the Senator from New Hampshire demanded the yeas and nays. He now withdraws that demand?

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw it.

Mr. PENROSE. I have stated to the Senate the reasons which had weight with us in not inserting the amendment in the bill, but I am willing to accept it, and see that it has a fair hearing in conference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania accepts the amendment, and the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. I desire to offer an amendment. On page 31, after the word "substation," line 11, I propose to insert these words:

The Post-Office Department shall make no regulation which will prevent fourth-class postmasters or rural route carriers from furnishing a Senator from a State the names of those to whom he delivers mail, nor to a Representative the names of those to whom he delivers mail within the district so represented.

Mr. President, all Senators, of course, are aware that the Post-Office Department has adopted a regulation that forbids postmasters and rural carriers furnishing to Senators and Representatives the names of those to whom they deliver mail.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is denied to everybody.

Mr. BAILEY. I think it proper to forbid the furnishing of names to people generally. But they have extended the prohibition so as to include Senators and Representatives.

Senators and Representatives desire the names of those who receive mail only in order that they can distribute to them the vast number of Government publications which are printed and which are printed for that very purpose. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] very well suggests that the same is true of free seeds. It looks to me like an odd regulation that prohibits the Senators and Representatives from securing the names of the very people to whom these Government publications and these Government seeds ought to be sent.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I would suggest to the Senator that the names of these parties can be secured through private sources instead of compelling the Post-Office Department to furnish them. Now, speaking of my own experience as a Member of the House, I used to keep the names of all the people in the various sections of my district. Where it is divided up into counties and townships and smaller districts, it is an easy matter to secure an entire list, and the names can be furnished by private sources. It is an innovation in legislation to require any public official——

Mr. BAILEY. I did not require him to furnish it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh!

Mr. BAILEY. I do not require him. I said, under the present law, the postmaster could not furnish it if he desired.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. BAILEY. I do.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not understand that any Senator or Representative can not get this information.

Mr. BAILEY. But that is the fact.

Mr. PENROSE. I have frequently myself had occasion to send a clerk to the Department to get it. The Government had no clerical force, and it has not the money to spend to furnish this very voluminous material, but I think the Senator from Texas can go to the Post-Office Department or send half a dozen clerks there and get all this information. The fact of this matter is that this information would be sought after by every newspaper owner and periodical publisher and trafficker in patent medicines who would want to circulate his wares among those people.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator does not understand this amendment.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought I did.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not seek in the amendment to relieve the carriers and postmasters against the rule which forbids them to do this, except as to Senators and Representatives.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator propose in this amendment that the carrier shall be compelled to furnish the list?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not.

Mr. PENROSE. Then there is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from Texas that it read "Senators, Representatives, and Delegates."

Mr. BAILEY. That is a very good suggestion.

Mr. CARTER. I suggest to the Senator that he strike out "fourth-class" and simply leave the term "postmasters."

Mr. BAILEY. I think that is also a good suggestion. I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned, I know nothing about the distribution of documents and seeds. The young gentleman who is my Secretary has been with me for fifteen years, and he drew this amendment. He tells me the difficulty that he experiences, and I readily see how it becomes impossible to reach the people who are entitled to the seeds and documents. I accept the suggestion of the Senator from Montana and the suggestion of the Senator from New Hampshire, and I will make it read now as follows:

The Post-Office Department shall make no regulation which will prevent any postmaster or any rural route carrier from furnishing a Senator from a State the names of those to whom he delivers mail in that State, nor to a Representative or Delegate the names of those to whom he delivers mail within the district or Territory so represented.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Here is another amendment along the same line:

Any mail matter entitled to free transportation under the frank of a Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress when addressed to a rural route and a numbered box thereon shall be delivered as addressed.

Mr. President, it happens in some cases, I am advised, that the initials are not known, or that possibly the name is not known, but they can deliver these things intended for distribution through addressing them to a box. I am not as sure about this as I was about the other. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY], who is a member of the committee, says there is some doubt about it, and I will withhold it for the time being until I can examine into it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment is withdrawn. If there are no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 29, 1906.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move the approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the Journal be approved.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman for a statement or a question. Whether I shall yield further than that I shall determine later.

Mr. McCLEARY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, in view of the fact that the proceedings at the close of the session last evening were quite unusual and became a hardship upon certain Members of the House, the proceedings relating to the arrest and bringing of Members before the bar of the House should be vacated, and I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the proceedings of last evening in reference to the arrest and bringing before the bar of the House of Members be vacated. Is there objection?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman desire time?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Three or four minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I remained here at work in the House throughout the day yesterday, and until nearly 6 o'clock. The Committee of the Whole was rising to go into the House when I left. I then went home—or, rather to my hotel—for the purpose, of course, of quitting the labors of the day, but particularly to make a long-distance inquiry about the very serious ill condition of my brother, seven or eight hundred miles away from here. While at the hotel an officer of the House came up and asked me if I had voted. I said no, and asked him, "What is the vote on?" He replied that the House was without a quorum and that he wanted me to go to the House, and held a paper in his hand—a warrant, I presume. I said, "Well, I am not going now for anybody," and then explained to him the very distressing condition of my brother, whom I was trying to hear from, and told him I was extremely distressed. I was unable to communicate with the attending physician—and have been even to this moment—and the officer very kindly excused me. I then went down into the restaurant for my supper. There I saw a number of Members of the House and told them the condition of the House; that a call for a quorum was being made, but that I could not go. They came up. After I had finished my meal I went up into the lobby of the hotel and met a Member, who said he had voted and left "some time ago." I then went outside to see if the flag had been taken down from the House—in other words, to see and determine whether or not the House had as yet secured a quorum and adjourned. I could not see any flag. I then went back and telephoned to the House. I was informed over the telephone that the "House is still twenty-nine Members shy."

I was unable to telephone during this time to my sick brother or hear about his condition, so I got on a car and started to the House to help make a quorum, after I was excused you see, and was overtaken about Seventh street, or, rather, was hailed by my friend from Alabama Mr. WILEY and by my friend from Arkansas Mr. WALLACE, and by a gentleman who was with them, a deputy I suppose, one of the officers of the House at all events. I do not now recall his name, but he is here present. I then got in the carriage with them and we came up to the House together. We came into the Speaker's lobby together; I was a few steps ahead. At about halfway the Speaker's lobby, the gentleman who handles the mace, whose name is Mr. Pierce, inquired if we had been arrested. I laughed and went on and came to the door of the Chamber, turned and saw that he had stopped the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY] and also the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WALLACE]. I waited for them to catch up. We walked on into the Chamber, and we were reported by this officer here at the bar as having been arrested. Now, that is the whole story as to myself. I state this and another fact, that hereafter we may improve on the manner in which the laws are administered in this House with reference to this kind of a matter. I stayed here in the House for a few moments, and then walked out into the Speaker's lobby and saw, with my own eyes, that Republican Members were not stopped and arrested by this officer of the House as we had been, but came in and simply voted, whereupon I asked this officer why he was drawing a distinction between Democrats and Republicans.

The Speaker is somewhat familiar with the language that I used at the door to this officer, as I would to anybody else under similar circumstances. I do not retract anything that I then said. I saw that he did not hail Republican Members that came by, he did not stop them and ask whether they had been arrested, and the fact that he did not stop them as he did the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WILEY], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WALLACE], and as he would have stopped me if I had paid any attention to his order, is the point that I make against his conduct. I treated the whole matter, when he first addressed us, more as a matter of twitting us than otherwise. Of course, if I had known that the gentleman was really in earnest I, too, would have stopped. He had a little piece of manuscript in his hand. Now, Mr. Speaker, if Republicans are to be treated that way hereafter, all well and good. If Democrats are to be treated that way hereafter, all well and good; but I serve notice now upon the officers of this House that hereafter they shall treat all Members alike. I am willing to be arrested when I should be. If arrested in this case, I never was before. I have not been absent from the House very often, and would not have been this time except for the distressing conditions named overtaking me. I make no apologies now for my absence on this occasion. These facts speak for themselves, but I do insist that Democrats and Republicans be treated alike when the order of this House goes out to arrest its Members.

Mr. RUCKER rose.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Missouri desire some time?

Mr. RUCKER. I would not have gotten up if I had not wanted a few minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, I would like to have five.

Mr. PAYNE. Very well; I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I am very much obliged to the gentleman for his kindness. It seems that we can not get anything here without placing ourselves under obligations to some gentleman of the House. Referring to the incident of last evening, I want to make a statement, inasmuch as this is going to be an experience meeting. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that late in the evening I left this House to go to my hotel. Just about the time of going to supper, as I call it, dinner as gentlemen sometimes call it, I received a telephone message that the House was being called. I had a conversation with one of my Republican friends—by the way, one of the most elegant gentlemen in this House, who lives at the same hotel—and we agreed that we would eat supper hastily and get over here in order to vote and relieve the Chair and not delay the business of the House. A few minutes later (the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] said an officer; I deny it) a usurper so far as legal authority is concerned, a usurper from this House having no authority to arrest presented himself and asked us to come here with him. I came here, and I was the first culprit arraigned before the bar of this House. Gentlemen present expressed surprise and I confess I myself was surprised. Last week, Mr. Speaker, these same officers, clothed with the same kind of process, went to the baseball park and, as I am informed, arrested a number of Members, including one not far removed from the White House family, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and brought them here, but there was no parade and their names did not appear in the RECORD. Other distinguished gentlemen on that side whom I see now were arrested and were even saved from the clutches of the very diligent officers of this city for running an automobile at a dangerous rate of speed and were brought here in custody of an officer, but no record was made.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman does not wish to make a mistake. A little newspaper pleasantry indicating that there had been a bicycle——

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIBLEY. A little newspaper pleasantry stated that the party, in returning to the House, had been followed by a bicycle cop and placed under arrest. Such was an absolute misstatement of facts. We saw no bicycle cop. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman have personal knowledge of the instance to which I referred?

Mr. SIBLEY. There was no policeman seen, and no one spoke to us or hindered our free progress, so the gentleman should not make that statement, for he has not been correctly informed. We neither ran in excess of legal speed nor were spoken to by anyone on our way to the Capitol.

Mr. RUCKER. I am glad the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania was only arrested once on that occasion, and I am also glad there was no record made of that. Mr. Speaker, last night, I say, I was the first man arraigned before the bar of this House. On investigation I found some forty or fifty Members came in before me, but no man was arraigned. I appealed to the Speaker, and I told the gentleman then occupying the chair that there was some discrimination being employed in this matter. After that the Speaker pro tempore issued an order from his chair to the Sergeant-at-Arms to show no discrimination, and subsequently, Mr. Speaker, you were not here, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] was in the chair. After that interview with the Speaker pro tempore my colleague from Missouri and my good friend from New Hampshire, one of the best and most faithful men on this floor, were arrested in order to appease my wrath, I suppose, and I regret exceedingly that it was so. So far as I am concerned, I have no favors to ask of this House. I am glad the gentleman from New York is pursuing the policy which has characterized his course all through this session. He is so bent on mortifying some few Members that he seeks now to vent his partisan feeling against five Democrats, although it involves three good men on that side. I ask no favors of him.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. Can I have a few minutes more?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. Five minutes?

Mr. PAYNE. Two minutes more.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, am I recognized for five minutes more?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield five minutes?

Mr. PAYNE. I thought you asked for two, but the gentleman can have five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is so genial this morning that I hardly have the heart to say what I would like to say. [Laughter.] And I apprehend that if I should say all I feel like saying and all that the occasion warrants, the gentleman would ask to have it stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat again, as shown by the RECORD at the time the doors were closed, that there were about 260 Members absent from this floor. One member of the police force of the Sergeant-at-Arms, under the direction of the Chair, after making a most diligent effort, succeeded in bringing four Democrats and one Republican into this House. One other succeeded in bringing in two Republicans, and one other a Democrat. So I say that, out of 260 absent Members, the RECORD shows that five Democrats and three Republicans only were arrested.

Now, I care nothing about it. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, while I do not believe and do not expressly charge, or do not charge, that this discrimination was winked at or directed by the Chair, I say that the discrimination shown yesterday was foul and contemptible, and I say, sir, that, so far as I am concerned, the officers of this House may do what they please, and I will go forth with my head erect, unmortified and unhumiliated by anything that can be done in this House. Why is it that distinguished Members of the other party are permitted to come in here, according to the uniform practice prevailing here, and are permitted to vote and go undenounced by the RECORD of this House, while others are made a parade of? Then why is it that the gentleman from New York, who is the author of this dilemma, as some seem to think, objects to the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MCCLEARY] to strike from the RECORD that which is unpleasant to some of his colleagues? Does he think that it humiliates me or any of my colleagues? If so, I want to relieve his mind as to that, because I tell him it is not in his power to humiliate me.

Now, let me say again that it is a little remarkable, if the Speaker did it, that he would issue a warrant yesterday evening to be served upon a lot of Democrats, when this same Speaker within the last few days had to send clear to the baseball park to bring in distinguished members of his own party in order to make a quorum on this floor and no record whatever made of it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am always good-natured, and I will not trespass upon the patience of this House, but place myself square with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], by yielding back to him the time I have not consumed. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] yield me a few moments?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY] can hardly take me off the floor for a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri rises to a question of the highest personal privilege. The motion before the House is to approve the Journal. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has the floor. In the opinion of the Chair the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. MURPHY] can raise his question of the highest personal privilege when the gentleman from New York is not upon the floor.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman state that his question of personal privilege grows out of the approval of the Journal?

The SPEAKER. No; nor has the Chair conceded that it would make any difference if it did, in the time of the gentleman from New York. The gentleman from Missouri can not take the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] off of the floor upon a question of personal privilege, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman [Mr. WALLACE] desire?

Mr. WALLACE. I am one of the arrested parties.

Mr. PAYNE. Was the gentleman arrested?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. WALLACE. Three or four minutes, I suppose—say five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Five minutes?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I yield five minutes.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I am not in the least out of humor this morning, although I was subjected to the course of the law on yesterday afternoon. I simply wish to detail the situation in as few words as I can, regarding myself alone. I refer to this matter not as a partisan one, nor in that spirit do I ask the attention of this House.

Mr. Speaker, it may have passed your mind for the moment, but the RECORD will show that about the first of this month I was appointed upon the committee to investigate charges against the Government Asylum for the Insane. Of course you know how busy members must be on that kind of a committee. We held a meeting yesterday afternoon, and I came to the House with my bulk of testimony and remained here and cast my vote on the roll call for adjournment. Then thinking that would be the last call, I went down to my home for the purpose of taking an early start and go through that testimony last night. But I was informed there was another roll call over here. I immediately returned to this House, and cast my vote upon that call, out of which grew the order for these arrests. I stayed here and cast my vote for a quorum on the roll call under consideration.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I did my duty toward this House on yesterday evening. I have explained to you why I could have no idea of dodging any duty or in any sense play the filibuster. I was simply undertaking to discharge my duty to this House as well as I could, and also to the committee of the House on which I was appointed. So, Mr. Speaker, when the officer came to my dinner table last evening and told me that I was wanted on a roll call—he did not know exactly what it was, and I was not certain. I did not finish my meal. I got up, went out, and took a delightful ride with him up to this Capitol; and in that particular I want to say he is the only gentleman, I believe, who has ever been so courteous and kind. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I feel, in regard to this matter, while I am asking nothing at the hands of the House, and do not ask it to vacate the record for me, I only want it to be understood that I was discharging my duty toward this House and toward the committee. In other words, I was working somewhat overtime in discharging the double duty of a committeeman and of a Member of this House. Under those circumstances I feel like I was simply the victim of a mistake. [Loud applause.]

Now, as to the rapidly changing customs and practices of the other side of the House, its inauguration of new and its revival of old methods, I think it might be in the mood this morning to repeat to itself the words of Oliver Wendell Holmes, to wit:

> If I change with the winds that blow,
> It is only because they made me so,
> And the people would think it wondrous strange
> If I, a weathercock, should not change.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. FITZGERALD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it in order now to move that the record of these arrests be expunged?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it in order, if the gentleman would yield for this purpose, to make a motion to amend the Journal by expunging these arrests? I ask the gentleman if he will yield for that purpose, in order to have that motion made?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I will consider that later.

Mr. Speaker, it will not be denied that it is the duty of every Member of the House to be present in his seat from the time the House meets until it adjourns. That is what we are here for—our primary duties; and that has been the idea of Congress from time immemorial. Why, it has been enacted by statute that every Member who is absent shall forfeit his day's pay pro rata for his day's absence; and I can remember the time when this rule was enforced, and that some Members forfeited as much as $100 and $600 of pay. A number of Members were fined those amounts, and fined by the operation of the law itself.

Now, early in the history of Congress, a rule was adopted for bringing in absent Members, and I desire to read it to the House, because of the fact that many Members do not take the time to read the rules of the House for themselves. I desire to read the old rule under which a quorum was secured:

> In the absence of a quorum, fifteen Members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured and retained; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged. Members who voluntarily appear shall, unless the House otherwise direct, be immediately admitted to the Hall of the House, and they shall report their names to the Clerk to be entered upon the Journal as present.

Now, under that rule——

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. PAYNE. I can not be interrupted just now; I will yield to the gentleman later. Under that rule older Members of the House have seen many Members brought in here and brought to the bar of the House and heard them arraigned by the Speaker, saying, "You were absent from the House during the sittings of the House, without leave of the House. What excuse have you to offer?" The gentleman was heard as to whatever excuse he might make, and they were generally discharged from arrest; but they were compelled to remain in attendance, with the doors closed, until the House adjourned. That was the operation under the old rule.

But in the Fifty-fourth Congress the House adopted an additional rule for the attendance of Members. I introduced a rule to that effect in the Fifty-first Congress, but the first suggestion of it came from an eminent Democrat from the State of Virginia, who first proposed something like this method of obtaining a quorum; and the rule was, from this suggestion, drawn out and adopted as clause 4 of Rule XV, and it was under this clause 4 that the House was acting last evening. A vote had been reached upon the final passage of a bill. It developed that no quorum was present; whereupon the Speaker proceeded under this rule, as he is authorized by the vote of the House to do, as the House had directed him by this rule to do:

4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each Member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote and his vote shall be recorded. If those voting on the question and those who are present and decline to vote shall together make a majority of the House, the Speaker shall declare that a quorum is constituted, and the pending question shall be decided as the majority of those voting shall appear. And thereupon further proceedings under the call shall be considered as dispensed with.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. If the rule authorized the proceedings to which you have referred, why is it that only 4 or 5 out of 250 were made examples of and these others excused?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, when we had reached a vote upon that bill, and it had been determined that no quorum was present, in order to relieve those who had stayed here all day performing their duty and not to compel them to wait until gentlemen who were absent had gotten their dinners, I moved to adjourn the House. The motion was defeated by a majority vote. Then there was no other way for the Speaker to perform his duty than the way in which he performed it.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Why arrest 5 out of 250?

Mr. PAYNE. Will you let me speak?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. As soon as you answer that.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not propose to answer your question until I get to it. Does the gentleman understand that?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Not perfectly, but partially.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad it is permeating. The Speaker promptly did his duty. He ordered a call of the House; he ordered the doors closed; he directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring in absent Members, and they were brought in. The gentleman from Missouri, who has made a census of the matter, says there were eight brought in—five Democrats and three Republicans. The first two that came in were a pair of twins—the gentleman from Missouri, a Democrat, and also with him a Republican—showing that the Sergeant-at-Arms in that instance was not using any favoritism. One Republican, he said, was brought in by himself. In that instance he was using no favoritism. It is very easy for gentlemen to get up here in their mortification and pitch into the Sergeant-at-Arms and the officer of this House who has no voice here to defend himself. It is very easy for gentlemen to go out there in the corridor and denounce an officer of the House while that officer is at a disadvantage because he is an officer or an employee appointed by the House. But the Sergeant-at-Arms was directed to do his duty. The gentleman from Missouri says he will not say the Speaker directed the officer to arrest Democrats and not Republicans when he confesses that the Sergeant-at-Arms brought in both Republicans and Democrats. And if he suspects or has the faintest suspicion that the Speaker of the House of Representatives directed, hinted, or connived at in any way any favoritism in bringing gentlemen into the House he is the only man in the sound of my voice that is unworthy enough even to harbor any such thought or suspicion. [Applause.]

If these gentlemen had been here doing their duty, they would not have been arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms. If they had been here voting on the proposition and staying here, they would not have been arrested or even invited to come to the Chamber by the Sergeant-at-Arms. We have had some little experience in getting a quorum ever since the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] adopted what seems to him to be some means to secure an end, and which every other gentleman in the Hall believes a means that will not have the slightest effect toward securing the end that he announces he has in mind. When the point of no quorum has been raised from day to day, and sometimes half a dozen times in a day, the Sergeant-at-Arms has invited men to come in here. The Sergeant-at-Arms did his full duty yesterday when he arrested men who did not come in here when he was inviting them to come. He exactly carried out the rule of the House. If he neglected to carry out the rule of the House in arresting Members who did not come in on his invitation, then he did not do his full duty. Yesterday he did and some gentlemen came in here. They were put in the same category with many an honored Member of the House in times that are past that was brought in under the first rule I have read—brought up to the bar of the House and arraigned by the Speaker because they had not performed their duty, but had stayed away from the House.

Now, that is the record they have made, one by one. They come in and make an excuse and that has gone into the RECORD, and the excuse goes with the offense against the rules of the House, against the integrity of the House, against the interruption of the proceedings of the House because of their absence when they are needed here upon a vote.

I suppose they are content with the excuses they put upon the RECORD. So far as mutilating the Journal is concerned, it does not concern me one way or the other. You may expunge it, and, like the expunging at the other end of the Capitol so many years ago when the expunging did not expunge, it is there on the records to-day. You may expunge this proceeding, you may take it out of the RECORD; it does not matter to me one way or the other—it is there. The attention of the House has been called to this fact, that certain Members were absent and were brought into the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I do not think it will be a lasting disgrace to these gentlemen; I think they will outlive it. I think my friend from Missouri, who is so fearful that he will be humiliated, will recover from what occurred yesterday. It will answer a useful purpose if it calls the attention of the Members of the House to this rule, if it calls the attention of the Members of the House to the importance of their being present to do the business of the House. Some Members are asking every day when we are going to take a final adjournment. Well, our final adjournment is not hastened any by having to stop every few minutes and send out for absentees to get a quorum to vote on questions. It is important that Members should be here and perform their duty. Their first place is here in the House, and the rules are inaugurated for that purpose. I have no doubt that the Sergeant-at-Arms and the officers of the House did their full duty under this rule in arresting such Members as they ought to have arrested, without regard to whether they were Republicans or Democrats. It is said that two more Democrats were brought in than there were Republicans brought in. Well, naturally the Republicans ought to desire to dispatch the business of the House; they ought to come here more readily, and to come on a telephone call, than the Democratic Members of the House. The Republicans were not filibustering. Why, Mr. Speaker, I would not have been surprised if the officers going out to perform their full duty impartially and judicially had caught nine Democrats out of ten Members from the ranks who I understand signed a paper agreeing to support the leader of the minority of the House in the filibustering tactics in the House. [Applause on the Republican side.] These officers have performed their duty here now for nine years, every one of them, and I have never before heard any complaint or criticism from any Member of this House, on either side of it, as to the manner in which they have performed their duty. Of course, when a man is in fault he wants to lay it on to somebody else; when a man is in the wrong he wants to put the wrong on other shoulders. Here are these gentlemen absent without an excuse, and the only excuse they seem to have is to try to raise a quarrel with the officers of the House who have no voice on this floor. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the approval of the Journal.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put, I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that at the time I rose for the purpose of moving to amend the Journal the previous question had not been demanded, and under the precedents it was held that a motion to amend was not in order, because the previous question had been demanded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York had the floor.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asked me a while ago for the privilege of making a motion to strike out this matter, and I will withhold the demand for the previous question and yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before that is done, inasmuch as the gentleman from New York has referred to me in his talk, I hope he will yield to me.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I do not think the gentleman is called upon to make a speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, but the gentleman made a speech at my expense. However, I will get in later.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out in the Journal all reference to the arrest and the arraignment of the Members of the House before the bar at yesterday's session.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, upon the amendment and upon the motion to approve the Journal I now demand the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in the Journal all reference to the arrest of absentees at yesterday's session.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does that also strike it out of the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. The RECORD is under the control of the House and is not now under consideration.

Mr. OLMSTED. If it is proper, Mr. Speaker, I would include it now.

Mr. PAYNE. That would not be germane to the motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not germane to the Journal. The House has full control of the RECORD. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, on ordering the previous question on the motion to approve the Journal, with the amendment thereto offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. OLMSTED.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 202, noes 69.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 177, nays 77, answered "present" 18, not voting 109, as follows:

COLLECTION DISTRICT IN THE STATE OF TEXAS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas presents the following privileged report, the title of which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:
A bill (H. R. 10715) to establish a collection district in the State of Texas, and for other purposes.
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I want to make the point of order that is not privileged.
The SPEAKER. In any event, the Chair supposes it would go to the Committee of the Whole House.
Mr. PAYNE. I suppose it would.
The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York reserves the point of order.
Mr. PAYNE. Yes; I reserve the point of order.
The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker——
The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?
Mr. MURPHY. To a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening some time after 5 o'clock, I left this House and went to my home and shortly thereafter there apeared a deputy, I presume, or an Assistant Sergeant-at-Arms, who told me that, under the direction of the Speaker, he was ordered to arrest me and bring me before the House. He presented to me this paper, a portion of which I want to read:

FIFTY-NINTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION,
CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
In the House of Representatives.

To HENRY CASSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, or his deputies:

Whereas clause 4 of Rule XV of the House of Representatives provides as follows.

Then it recites clause 4 of Rule XV.

And whereas the conditions specified in the said rule have arisen and the following-named persons are absent, to wit, ARTHUR P. MURPHY (and fifty-nine others who are named), now, therefore, I, J. G. CANNON, Speaker of the House of Representatives, by virtue of the power vested in me by the House, hereby command you to execute the said order of the House by taking into custody and bringing to the bar of the House the said above-named Members who are so absent; hereof fail not, and make due return in what manner you execute the same.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States this 28th day of May, 1906.

J. G. CANNON, Speaker.

Attest:

A. MCDOWELL, Clerk.

With the seal of the House of Representatives thereon.

I fail to find, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, any authority whatever under law or under the rules of the House or under the Constitution for the issuance of such a paper, which purports to be a warrant. Section 5 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States provides:

SEC. 5. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, in such manner, and under such penalties as each House may provide.

That provides the House may do that. I find that under Rule I of the House, clause 4, in relation to the duties of the Speaker:

SEC. 4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any Member, on which appeal no Member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

I find in clause 3 of Rule III, in relation to the duties of the Clerk, as follows:

Attest and affix the seal of the House to all writs, warrants, and subpœnas issued by order of the House, certify to the passage of all bills and joint resolutions.

I find in Rule IV, clause 1, that the duties of the Sergeant-at-Arms are as follows:

1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House and the Committee of the Whole during their sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker or Chairman, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House, and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker.

Then I find under Rule XV, in clause 2, it provides:

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen Members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent Members, and in all calls of the House the doors shall be closed, the names of the Members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found.

Then we find in clause 4 of Rule XV—and this warrant under which the Sergeant-at-Arms was acting especially states upon its face that it was under clause 4 of Rule XV—this:

4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause, unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members.

There is not a single provision in that rule that authorizes the Speaker of the House of Representatives to issue a warrant. There is no authority in that rule or in any other rule of this House that authorizes the Speaker of the House of Representatives to issue a warrant except upon the order of the House. Rule XV is on the subject of "Calls of the roll and House," and, under all of the rules of construction of law, all of these sections would be considered together. If you take clause 4 and construe it alone, it would be ambiguous, but, in construing ambiguity, it is not in favor of arrest, but more in the opposite direction.

I looked over the RECORD this morning, and the Journal, and there is not a single entry directing, ordering, or authorizing the Speaker of the House of Representatives to issue a warrant, a rule, an order, or any other process to bring a single Member before the bar of this House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman sits down I would like to ask him a question. I understood you to read that warrant, and to say that you and fifty-nine other Members were out. Is that correct?

Mr. MURPHY. It is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe the RECORD shows there were 160 absent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Two hundred and sixty.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Two hundred and sixty, I am informed.

Mr. PAYNE. Four warrants.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If there were that many absent Members, I do not understand why only fifty-nine were sent for.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say——

Mr. PAYNE. How does the gentleman get that information?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi to the fact that several warrants were issued.

Mr. MURPHY. I was going to call his attention to the fact that there were three or four issued.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did they all contain the same language?

Mr. MURPHY. They did, except the names.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand that part of it.

Mr. MURPHY. Now, I want to call attention to the closing words of the warrant:

Now, therefore, I, J. G. CANNON, Speaker of the House of Representatives, by virtue of the power vested in me by the House.

I do not understand what authority you would get, unless it would be by a vote of the majority of the Members present.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MURPHY. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I simply desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the rule which he had read—clause 4 of Rule XV—contemplates an arrest. That is a rule adopted by the House. It is the authorization of the House. If an arrest requires or involves the warrant of the Speaker, which would seem to be the only tangible evidence of authority the Sergeant-at-Arms could present or exhibit, the rule seems clearly to authorize the warrant, particularly when read in connection with clause 4 of Rule I and clause 1 of Rule IV.

Mr. MURPHY. Upon that I take issue with the gentleman. It provides for no warrant. The only place in the rules that it does provide for a warrant is upon authority of a majority of the Members present, and not upon the direction of the Speaker himself, in the case of arrest.

Mr. DALZELL. The propriety of arrest is determined by the manner in which the paper was written.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state, and can only do it by unanimous consent of the House, because there is nothing before the House——

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER (continuing). For the Chair to rule upon. Is there objection to a very brief statement by the Chair? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair examined with some care, and caused to be examined with some care, the propriety of issuing the warrant referred to. Clause 4 of Rule XV is a rule that was adopted in the Fifty-fourth Congress; and in the absence of a quorum, shown upon a vote taken, the rule provides what the Sergeant-at-Arms shall do. The Chair is inclined to believe that, on such a fact arising, the Sergeant-at-Arms, without a warrant, would be legally authorized, upon the order of the Speaker verbally given, as the rule provides, to bring in absent Members. Such was the old practice of Parliament. The Chair is quite well aware that no act that he performs as Representative or Speaker should be performed or can be performed properly or legally except under the Constitution, under the law, or under the rules of the House which the House adopts, not only from necessity, but by express provision.

Clause 4 was adopted, the Chair stated, in the Fifty-fourth Congress. Prior to that the House had proceeded under clause 2 of the same Rule XV, which was a provision that has dwelt in the rules, perhaps, almost from the organization of the House, but that was a proceeding for the House to get a quorum in all cases, and not especially upon the passage of a bill, as is provided for in clause 4.

Now, the gentleman from Missouri has read the authority from Rule I for the Speaker issuing subpœnas, warrants, orders, etc. There is not now, and never has been any rule, so far as the Chair can find out, that authorizes in express terms the Speaker to issue a warrant, and the Chair has caused to be examined the practice of the House under clauses 1 and 2 of Rule XV prior to the Fifty-fourth Congress and has found that uniformly on a call of the House those present gave authority in form, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its Members as are absent without leave.

That resolution is in substance the authority that is given by terms of the rule in cases arising under clause 4 of Rule XV, and the Chair, on inquiry, finds it was the invariable practice of substantially all the Speakers prior to the Fifty-fourth Congress on the strength of the resolution and without further authority to issue a warrant.

The Chair is still of opinion that under the practice in the House he is authorized to issue the warrant, although, as stated before, the Chair is inclined to be of the opinion that when the fact arises under clause 4 of Rule XV the Sergeant-at-Arms, on the verbal direction of the Speaker, as that rule provides, can bring in absent Members. If he can under the verbal direction, much more he can under the written direction.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Speaker, will you pardon me——

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. Does clause 4 provide for the Speaker to direct it, either verbally or in writing? Can not the Sergeant-at-Arms do it without any direction?

The SPEAKER. There should be a call of the House:

4. Whenever a quorum fails to vote on any question, and a quorum is not present and objection is made for that cause—

Which was this case—

unless the House shall adjourn, there shall be a call of the House, and the Sergeant-at-Arms shall forthwith proceed to bring in absent Members, and the yeas and nays on the pending question shall at the same time be considered as ordered. The Clerk shall call the roll, and each Member as he answers to his name may vote on the pending question, and, after the roll call is completed, each Member arrested shall be brought by the Sergeant-at-Arms before the House, whereupon he shall be noted as present, discharged from arrest, and given an opportunity to vote and his vote shall be recorded.

Now——

Mr. MURPHY. That does not provide that the Speaker shall direct, or that he shall issue a warrant.

The SPEAKER. No; nor has the resolution, so far as the Chair can find, usually adopted by the House under the old rule, provided that the Speaker should issue the warrant. That authority is inferred from Rule I and other rules; but especially is derived from the old practice of the House as well as the ancient usage of the courts and Parliament.

Now, the Chair has no doubt but that under the rule and under the warrant the gentleman was legally arrested, and the question as to whether the Chair had the right to issue the warrant is a barren question, in the opinion of the Chair, because the gentleman was lawfully and legally arrested under the rules of the House without or with the warrant. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 14513) to prevent the giving of false alarms of fires in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had excused Mr. NEWLANDS from further service as a member of the conference committee on the bill (H. R. 12707) to enable the people of Oklahoma and of the Indian Territory to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to enable the people of New Mexico and of Arizona to form a constitution and State government and be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and had appointed Mr. PATTERSON in his place.

ADJOURNMENT OVER MEMORIAL DAY.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, as to-morrow is Decoration Day and many Members of the House have requested that an adjournment be made over until Thursday, and as the business of the House seems to be in a condition to warrant it, I yield to the eminent gentleman from Ohio, a distinguished soldier, statesman, and orator, General GROSVENOR, to make the motion. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I suppose I ought to recognize the very high and unmerited compliment paid to me; but I desire to move, and I now do move, that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Thursday at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907.

The question being taken,

Mr. WILLIAMS demanded a division.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 214, nays 15, answered "present" 16, not voting 136, as follows:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WHARTON). The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. RUCKER, and he answered "present," as above recorded.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. CURTIS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SALARIES OF SECRETARIES OF EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

Secretaries of embassies to Austria-Hungary, Brazil, Great Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Japan, Mexico, and Russia, at $3,000 each, $27,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph. I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes, as I desire to discuss the distribution, by the appointing power, of the diplomatic and consular offices provided for in this bill between the various sections of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, for six years I was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. During the time of my services upon that great committee my association with the distinguished gentlemen who constitute its membership was at all times thoroughly pleasant. And what I shall now say will not be directed against any action of theirs, and, of course, can in no sense be construed as a criticism of the bill now under consideration.

My intercourse and dealings with the officials of the State Department at all times during that period were just what I would have desired them to be. During all this time I did not upon any occasion ask for the appointment of any person to a diplomatic or consular position. Recently a highly esteemed constituent of mine, an accomplished German-American, asked that I present certain letters and papers to the State Department in support of an application which he had theretofore filed for an appointment as a consular officer. I did so, and while rendering this service for my Republican constituent I took advantage of the opportunity to ascertain the exact number of persons who are engaged in our diplomatic and consular service, and at the same time I also learned the number appointed from the various sections of our country. I now state, and when I have concluded my remarks I do not think there is a man on this floor who will attempt to controvert the statement, that these appointments, in so far as their distribution over our country is concerned, are inequitable, unfair, and sectional. In a monarchial form of government the diplomatic officer represents the person of his sovereign as well as the State from which he comes. In a republican form of government the diplomatic officer is the representative of his country, and is in no sense the personal representative of the Chief Executive. Such being the case I do not believe there is a man within the sound of my voice who would contend for one moment that the appointment of our diplomatic officers should not be equitably and fairly distributed between the various sections of our country.

In order to be sure that the remarks I might make on this subject would do no one an injustice and would be absolutely correct, on yesterday I asked the officials of the State Department to furnish me a detailed statement of the number of our diplomatic and consular officers and the States from which they were appointed. I have this memorandum in my hand, and what I say will be based on the data furnished by the State Department. Later I will embody it in my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, this memorandum shows that we have 96 persons representing this country abroad in the diplomatic service, and preliminary to what I have to say I desire to state that I acquit the distinguished gentleman who presides over the State Department and his very able first assistant, Mr. Bacon, who is charged with the immediate control and direction of our diplomatic officers, of any responsibility for the condition of affairs to which I now invite the attention of the House. Of the 96 diplomatic positions filled under appointment by the President of the United States we have from the State of New York 19, one-fifth of the entire number. This might strike one at first blush as a few more than that State is entitled to. Now let us see how other States fare in this particular. We have from the State of Virginia not one resident citizen in the diplomatic service, from North Carolina only 1, from South Carolina none, from Georgia none, from Florida none, from Alabama none, from Louisiana none, from Mississippi 1, from Arkansas none, from Tennessee 1, from Texas none, in all 3—11 sovereign States of this Union represented in the diplomatic service of our country by 3 persons who seem in some way to have found favor with the appointing power.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, it is customary to say that Ohio gets most of the high offices, yet Ohio with her 21 Representatives in Congress has not a single diplomatic officer.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman is mistaken; Ohio has two of her residents in the diplomatic service, and later I shall call attention to the voracious appetite of the State of Ohio when it comes to the division of the pie as represented by the consular service of our country.

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman will take the State of New York he will discover that the pie is largely centered there.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, yes; admitted; but Ohio, when it comes to clamoring for pie, whether it be at the counter of the State Department or of any other department, Ohio is always a close second to New York, if she is not first in the van. I will give the figures before I conclude my remarks; and remember, every statement that I make I base upon the memorandum furnished me by the State Department. The 11 Southern States I have just enumerated are represented upon this floor by 98 representatives, and only three persons residing within that vast territory have been selected by this Administration to act for our country as ministers abroad; yet in the one State, New York, 19 have been thus favored.

Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to make complaint about the indecent discrimination which has been practiced against the South in this particular. We are accustomed to it, and have been for nearly a half century with only slight interruption. What I want to do is to direct attention to the unjust and unfair treatment that other sections of our country are being subjected to in the matter of appointing diplomatic and also consular officers.

Mr. KLEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how the States mentioned awhile ago were represented under the last Democratic administration.

Mr. BURLESON. Ah, Mr. Chairman, I contend, and I now here assert, that never in the history of this Government has there been such sectionalism displayed in the selection of our diplomatic and consular officers as has been shown by the present occupant of the White House. I affirm that and I invite the gentleman from Missouri or any other gentleman upon the other side to an effort to controvert the statement.

Mr. Chairman, look to another great section of our country and see how it has fared at the hands of an Executive who has frequently expressed himself as being especially partial to that section; let us see how his words square with his acts in appointing residents of that section in our diplomatic corps. As a basis for comparison I will first direct attention to the fact that from this memorandum it is shown that from the State of Massachusetts, with the aid of her two Senators, the President has been able to find eight persons, residents of the old Bay State, who are at present acting for great America in some capacity in our diplomatic service. Now, of course we all know that Harvard University is situated in that grand old State, and no one will be so simple as to deny that that splendid institution has prepared many citizens who would reflect credit on our country when given places in our consular and diplomatic service, and it is said that a careful examination of the list will disclose that the appointing power has a keen appreciation of this fact. However this may be, Massachusetts, with the aid of her two Senators, has eight representatives acting for our country abroad. The eight Rocky Mountain States, with 16 Senators, have not been able to do quite so well. This memorandum discloses that these States have the following representatives in foreign countires acting for us as ambassadors and ministers: From Wyoming, none; from Colorado, none; from Utah, none; from Idaho, none; from North Dakota, none; from South Dakota, none; from Nevada, none; from Montana, none.

Mr. PAYNE. I understood from the gentleman a moment ago that he looked upon this as pie, to be passed around, and he thought New York was getting too much pie. Is that the gentleman's conception of a foreign appointment for ambassador or minister—a passing around of pie?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly not, and, Mr. Chairman, I deprecate the fact that the gentlemen who represent New York either in this end of the Capitol or the other have been so insistent in their demands upon the Chief Executive of this nation that appointments to the diplomatic service have been brought down to the low level of spoils.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that those Representatives——

Mr. BURLESON. The reason I insinuate it is because the facts justify me in the statement.

Mr. PAYNE. That those Representatives appointed from the State of New York are not fully able and capable of performing their duties?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no; I do not question that. I do not question and no man on this floor can truthfully take the position that there can not be found in every State of this Union an American citizen who will reflect credit upon his country as a diplomatic representative of our country abroad. That is exactly what I am protesting against now, that not only has one of the greatest sections of our country been for years persistently ignored by the powers that be, but that other sections are being unfairly and unjustly treated in the selection of our diplomatic officers. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to interruptions, but I fear my time will expire and that some one may object to an extension and I have some figures here which I want to submit to this House for its consideration. I would prefer to proceed for a few minutes without interruption. In the Central Eastern States, embracing New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and West Virginia, we have, by Executive appointment, 33 citizens who are acting abroad for our country in a diplomatic capacity, more than one-third of all the appointments he has at his disposal. From the New England States—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, and Massachusettts—we have 14 of our citizens serving us in some diplomatic capacity.

From the eleven Southern States that I have named—and to them you may add the States of Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and Delaware—and these fifteen States furnish only ten citizens to our diplomatic service. Consider the fact that Maryland has four and Kentucky three of these, making seven of the ten, and it will be seen that thirteen States of our country are represented abroad in the person of only three American citizens, when the little State of Rhode Island alone is represented by four.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for five minutes.

Mr. BURLESON. May I supplement that request by asking that it be made ten minutes?

Mr. MANN. Oh, let it be made for five minutes; further time will be granted if it is needed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard that the number of diplomatic representatives abroad from any particular State depends upon the measure of that State's Senatorial influence. If that is so, then the Senator from the State of Rhode Island must be indeed potential with the powers that be when he can wrest from the Chief Executive four appointments for that small State. It has four more places than the eight Rocky Mountain States have been able to secure, one more than thirteen Southern States have been given, and a number equal to the whole number given by the President to the entire Pacific slope.

I say four from the entire Pacific slope notwithstanding the fact that the memorandum furnished me would indicate that California has six, Oregon one, and Washington one. I take issue with that statement. Not that I want to be understood as saying it is not true. I feel sure it was not intended to mislead me, but I thought it was passing strange that a State so far removed as California should have six representatives in the diplomatic service of our country and the remarkable circumstance that this memorandum indicated that number excited my curiosity to such an extent that a moment ago I ran through this printed list which gives the names of all the diplomatic officers and employees and I find that three of these places are held by the same individual who represents our country as minister to Costa Rica, Nicaragua, and Salvador, and that another is only a student interpreter in China and still another one of them, an interpreter at the legation in Pekin, consequently I say that Rhode Island—little Rhode Island—and surely it must in this instance include the Providence plantation, through some potential influence has obtained as many representatives in the diplomatic service of our country as the entire Pacific slope, and all the Rocky Mountain States combined.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform the committee what diplomatic appointments are credited to the States west of the Mississippi?

Mr. BURLESON. I will give that information to the gentleman before I conclude. Now, permit me to direct attention to how the great Middle West has fared in the distribution of diplomatic appointments. Understand, now, that the Central Eastern States and New England have between them 47 representatives in the diplomatic service, yet the great Middle West, embracing the States of Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Iowa, Michigan, Minnesota, and Wisconsin, have—how many do you suppose? Twenty-two. Only 22, and yet we hear constant mouthings about this being one country; that our Chief Executive is the Chief Executive of the entire country; that he knows no North, no East, no West, no South. Such mouthings are mere froth, found wholly lacking in the substance of fact when the sunlight of truth is turned upon such Executive actions as these. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WATSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I want to ask my friend from Texas whether or not he believes that when the Republican party is in power that men should be selected for these foreign places from ambassadors down to consuls of the lowest classes without any reference to political affiliations?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no; I make and have made no such contention. Has it reached the point where the defenders of the grand old party make the confession to the country that in the great Middle West it is so poorly equipped; that in the very section from which the gentleman hails it is so poorly equipped in material to represent this country abroad that that section shall be discriminated against to the extent of giving 33 representatives in the diplomatic service to the central eastern section, 14 to the New England section, and only 22 to the great section in part represented by the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. Chairman, the course of the great Mississippi River is north and south, and it so divides our country as to throw approximately three-fifths of its area in the West. From this memorandum, furnished me by the State Department, I have ascertained that of the appointments made by the President in the diplomatic service he has given to this vast section a little less than 20 per cent of the places at his disposal, more than 80 per cent going to the section east of that great boundary. More outrageous still, if you take the territory east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, including West Virginia and the District of Columbia, you will find that 68 of the 96 diplomatic positions have been given to persons residing within that section. I submit to any fair-minded man, can such action be justified?

Mr. LONGWORTH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. BURLESON. With pleasure.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman believe that a much worse form of discrimination than he has mentioned, either sectional or political, exists in the discrimination which is now exercised against men of moderate fortunes in all these high diplomatic posts? Under our system is it not impossible for men, no matter how able, to take these positions unless they have very large private fortunes?

Mr. BURLESON. In response to the suggestion from the distinguished gentleman from Ohio I desire to give my approval to what was said upon this floor the other day by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that for an American citizen, if he has a mind to live simply, as the representative of a great republic should live when acting in such capacity abroad, I believe the compensation that is now allowed is adequate—is fully and thoroughly adequate to meet his requirements.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman specify whether he thinks that the compensation existing now in any of the capitols except the capitol of Mexico——

Mr. BURLESON. I understand what the gentleman has in mind and I desire to say that I approve the suggestion he has made in reference to the United States Government owning its diplomatic residences. I think it should own them in every capitol of every first-class power in the world, and I stand ready to vote an appropriation to purchase official residences for the use of our ambassadors and ministers, but——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to abuse the patience of the committee——

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Considering the very extended general debate that has been held on this bill and a desire to finish it this afternoon, I will, with regret, have to object.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already made that motion.

Mr. BURLESON. I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not do that, the Chair understands, except by unanimous consent. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretaries of legations to the Argentine Republic, China, the Netherlands and Luxemburg, and Turkey, at $2,625 each, $10,500.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "ten thousand five hundred dollars."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present. There are not enough Members here to do business.

Mr. BURLESON. This is not coming out of my time, as I understand, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] There are 115 Members—a quorum—present.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I want to especially address myself to the distribution, made by the Executive, between the different sections of appointments of our consular officers, consequently I hurry on, but before I leave the discussion of the distribution of our diplomatic appointments I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the District of Columbia has more persons in our diplomatic service than the eleven Southern States I have named, four more than the Rocky Mountain States, and a number equal to the entire representation allowed to the Pacific slope.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does that result from the influence of the Senators from the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. I know not, Mr. Chairman, from whence the influence comes that secured this number for the District of Columbia, but I understand that these appointments are claimed for the one "who cuts the pie."

Now, Mr. Chairman, with reference to our consular officers, we all understand that persons with imperialistic leanings might think that the diplomatic appointments are, in a measure, personal, and the Executive should be accorded the widest latitude in their selection, but every intelligent man knows that a consular officer is only the commercial agent of our country abroad—a commercial agent charged with the duty of promoting the commercial interest of the country, and charged especially—if you look in the dictionary you will see—to looking after the commercial interests of the individual citizens of that country.

Now, let me call your attention to the distribution of our consular officers, and before I proceed to do this I want to invite the attention of the committee to the fact that the 11 Southern States I have named furnish the export articles that turn the balance of trade in favor of this country. If you did not know this, or if the fact had escaped your attention, I announce it as an economic truth and invite some statistician upon this floor to controvert it if he can. And yet, in the face of this condition, which I think should be given some consideration, Mr. Chairman, we have of consular officers from the State of New York, 37; from the State of Pennsylvania, 22; from the State of New Jersey, 9; from the State of West Virginia, 6; and the States that I have named, the 11 Southern States, which have 98 Representatives upon this floor, compared with 84 Representatives from these other States, have only 14 consular officers.

Mr. MANN. How did you get so many?

Mr. BURLESON. That is one of the mysteries that ought to be explained. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that the service of each of our consular officers, regardless of the State from which he is appointed, belongs alike to all the States, but in all fairness I submit that each section is entitled to a just and fair proportion of appointments in order that we may have those in our consular service who are thoroughly familiar with the resources and business interests of the various sections of our country.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to make one suggestion to the gentleman. Many of these diplomatic appointments are made on account of campaign contributions in each Presidential election.

Mr. BURLESON. I will permit that statement to go in my remarks, and it can be considered for what it is worth. I do not know any facts bearing upon it, although I am prepared to believe it.

Mr. KLEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether he knows how the Lone Star State has been treated in the appointment of consuls?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; two consular officers have been appointed from my State.

Mr. KLEPPER. I will ask the gentleman if he knows——

Mr. BURLESON. Texas has fared very nearly as well as Missouri. The gentleman is now defending this practice of discrimination which has given the great State of Missouri out of nearly 300 consular appointments only three. And how it is, Mr. Chairman, that any man upon this floor pretending to represent the interests of his constituency can stand here and defend this system, surpasses my understanding. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to go on because I want these figures compiled from this memorandum in the RECORD.

Mr. KLEPPER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KLEPPER].

Mr. BURLESON. I will yield with pleasure if the committee will consent to give me five minutes additional time. I ask that I may be permitted to continue from now for five minutes in addition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that he may continue his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has had ten minutes, and in addition an extension——

Mr. BURLESON. I decline to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS]. Mr. Chairman, I persist in declining to permit the gentleman by interruption to consume my time.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Then I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. I was under the impression I had just secured additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr BURLESON] will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary of legation to Nicaragua, Costa Rica, and San Salvador, $2,800.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make this motion for the purpose of calling the attention of the House of Representatives at this time to the merits and the urgent necessity for the enactment into law of my bill (H. R. 18712) "to regulate the price of mileage tickets on railway transportation companies doing an interstate-commerce business, and for other purposes," introduced by me on April 27, 1906. The bill is a very short one, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to regulate the price of mileage tickets on railway transportation companies doing an interstate-commerce business, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all railway companies doing an interstate-commerce business shall sell mileage books, good for 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, and 5,000 miles, on their respective lines or constituent lines or connecting lines, traversing two or more States or Territories of the United States, at a price not exceeding 2 cents per mile for said mileage books, between points of destination over any railway line or branches or connecting lines of the same doing an interstate-commerce business, which said mileage books shall be good to pay for transportation between all places of destination on said railway lines, and that said mileage books shall be in the denominations hereinbefore designated, and shall be for sale by all of said railway companies at their respective offices or branch offices to any person or persons desiring to purchase the same; and said mileage books shall be good until used, and transferable by the purchaser or owner of the same; and that said mileage books shall be made out for the number of miles herein specified, namely, 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, and 5,000 miles; and the said mileage books shall be so printed that they shall contain mileage tickets or coupons for 1 mile, 5 miles, 10 miles, 25 miles, 50 miles, and 100 miles, in order that the conductor taking up said tickets or coupons can take up the exact fare per mile, not exceeding 2 cents a mile, for the distance traveled by the passenger or passengers between destinations.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for any railway transportation company doing an interstate-commerce business to charge or collect for said mileage books more than 2 cents per mile or to give any rebate thereon; that is to say, to charge for said mileage more than 2 cents per mile, with the understanding, express or implied, that the excess over said 2 cents per mile shall be returned to the purchaser when the purchaser shall return to the railway transportation company the said mileage book with the mileage tickets therein contained used, the purpose of this act being that said railway companies doing an interstate-commerce business shall sell mileage tickets at a flat and specified rate not exceeding 2 cents per mile between all points of destination on their respective lines or branch lines or connecting lines, without any overcharge to be subsequently returned to the purchaser in the nature of a rebate.

SEC. 3. That any violation of this act by any railway transportation company doing an interstate-commerce business in and between any of the States or Territories of the United States shall be a misdemeanor, and the officers and directors of said railway transportation company guilty of the same shall be punishable by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by a fine not exceeding $10,000, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect immediately.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, the bill speaks for itself, and was introduced by me to prevent the practice now in vogue by some of the railway companies of the country of charging the purchaser of mileage-ticket books an extra $10 for each book, with the understanding that this excess sum of $10 is to be refunded on the return of the covers of the book. The great trunk lines of the country, as a general thing, now sell a thousand-mile ticket book, which is not interchangeable and nontransferable, for $20, being 2 cents a mile, but they charge an excess of $10, making $30 in all, and withhold the $10 until the covers of the book are returned. This is unjust and practically amounts to the taking of private property without just compensation or due process of law. There is no just warrant for this inequitable discrimination and it must be abolished.

It is generally known that the commercial travelers of the country have been fighting for years for a transferable mileage-ticket book that shall be good on all lines of railroads doing an interstate-commerce business. These commercial travelers are among our most deserving and industrious citizens. They are entitled to their rights and to fair treatment from the railroads. They are honest, earnest, sincere, and intelligent business men compelled by their occupations to travel from one end of the country to the other during all seasons of the year. They must be economical to make both ends meet. They are delightful companions and welcome always wherever they go. They are an essential part of our business and commercial life. I know them and I like them. I am now, always have been, and always will be their friend. They are entitled to our protection against unjust discriminations by the transportation corporations of the land, and we should legislate immediately to prevent further imposition on them by the railways, who take their money by these excess rates and give them nothing for it in return. I am with them in their demand for an interchangeable mileage-ticket book, to be good on all railroads, and good until used, and to be transferable from one person to another. This is only just and honest and fair, and sooner or later they will win their fight because they are right.

Now, I want to say that I am reliably informed that the Pennsylvania Railroad alone sells on an average 18,000 of these 1,000-mile ticket books every month, and charges the purchasers of them $20 for each book, being at the rate of 2 cents a mile, and an excess of $10, which the railroad company agrees to refund whenever the covers are returned; but often the covers of the books are lost and can not be returned, and the $10 is a total loss to the purchaser and a clear gain to the railroad company. Whenever the railway companies sell a thousand-mile ticket book at the rate of 2 cents a mile it is simply a fair excursion or wholesale rate and a good stroke of business on the part of the railway company, because they get $20 cash in advance, and they should not be permitted to limit the use of the ticket by unjust and unreasonable requirements nor to discriminate by an excess charge of $10. To do so is nothing more nor less than extortion. My bill will effectually remedy this gross imposition on the traveling public, and I sincerely hope the bill will soon be reported to the House and passed. This legislation is just as important to the passengers on interstate commerce transportation corporations as the railway rate bill is to the shippers of the country, and both bills must soon become laws in the interest of the people.

The number of these mileage books sold monthly by the railroads of the country is estimated to be in the neighborhood of 50,000, and the railroads, by this excess charge of $10 for each one of these books, takes out of the pockets of the people a sum of money without any warrant whatever equal to about $500,000 a month, or at least $6,000,000 a year, and the interest on this great sum, to say nothing of other losses, amounts to over $300,000 annually. This is an outrageous imposition on the traveling public, and practically amounts to the confiscation of their property; and I say this extortion must cease in the interest of justice and honesty and fair play to the commercial and other travelers of the country.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion the bill which has just been read at the Clerk's desk, if it is enacted into law, will immediately stop and effectually end any railroad company making the purchaser of a mileage ticket book pay more for it than the actual price, and the bill provides that in no case shall the actual price be more than the rate of 2 cents per mile. It can be as much less as the railway company wants to charge. It seems to me that it would be a good business proposition for these railroads to sell these mileage books as provided by the terms of this bill. The railway statistics of the country demonstrate most conclusively that on the great trunk lines 2 cents a mile is ample compensation for railway tickets, and no railroad in the country doing an interstate-commerce business should be permitted to charge the traveling public more than 2 cents a mile. Many of the railroads, according to their own statements of their passenger earnings, can afford to carry the people to-day at a rate much less than 2 cents a mile. I believe the railroads exist for the benefit of the people and not the people for the benefit of the railroads. I would not confiscate the property of either. But, sir, whenever the railroads of the country—the great trunk lines doing an interstate-commerce business—become oppressive, unjust, and tyrannical in any particular direction it is the duty of Congress, having jurisdiction in the matter, to correct the abuse and enact necessary laws to remedy the evil.

It will be observed that my bill provides that these mileage ticket books are to be interchangeable and transferable and shall be good until used. The purchaser of one of these mileage ticket books will not sell it if he wants to use it himself, neither will he transfer it to another; and if he does not need it himself, why should he not have the right to sell it or transfer it to another or lend it to a member of his family? It is his property; he has paid for it, and paid all that it is worth, and he should be allowed to use it as he sees fit, or to dispose of it in case he has no further use for it.

The railway company loses nothing through the use of a railway mileage ticket book by some person other than the purchaser. It costs no more to transport one man than it does to carry another; and from a merely common-sense point of view it would seem to me to be good business judgment for the railway companies to promote the transfer of these mileage ticket books rather than to oppose their transfer, for the reason that the more the availability of such books is extended the more rapidly the transportation which they accommodate will be consumed. [Applause.]

Now, sir, that is all I desire to say at this inopportune time concerning this important bill. My purpose in presenting this matter to the House to-day is to get printed in the RECORD the full text of the bill and to briefly give the reasons why, in my opinion, it should speedily be enacted into law. It was necessary to do this because I am informed at the Clerk's office that copies of the bill can no longer be procured. The popular demand for copies of this bill from people all over the country has exceeded anything I have every known before, and I have been unable to comply with half the requests I have received since the bill was introduced.

Mr. Chairman, this morning the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom the bill was referred, were good enough to grant me a courteous hearing on this measure. I appeared before the committee and urged an early favorable report for substantially the same reasons I have voiced here. I believe the committee will report the bill favorably at a very near day. I believe the committee is aware of the popular demand for, and the urgent necessity of legislation of this character, and I indulge the hope—shared in by so many worthy citizens—that the bill will soon be reported favorably and passed before this session of Congress adjourns. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD in connection with my remarks some data in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting certain data. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NEW YORK, May 1, 1906.

Hon. WM. SULZER, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Commercial travelers' organizations throughout the country fought for a long time for an interchangeable mileage book good on all railroads.

Commercial travelers have to travel on many railroads, and to get their transportation at 2 cents a mile they had to buy a 1,000-mile book from each road over which they traveled, costing $20 each, filling their pockets with books and wrapping up a good deal of money. They made a fight through their various organizations for an interchangeable mileage book to be good on all railroads. After a great struggle the Trunk Line Mileage Bureau finally concluded to sell a 1,000-mile book good on their roads for $30, with the understanding that the extra $10 would be refunded on return of the cover.

George W. Boyd, general passenger agent Pennsylvania Railroad Company, stated in a letter, dated February 5, 1906, to a commercial traveler friend of mine, S. M. Williams, of Pittsburg, that the Pennsylvania Railroad sells on an average of 18,000 of $30 mileage books per month, which shows the vast number who travel and are being imposed upon by this system of mileage issued under the $10 contract by the Trunk Line Mileage Bureau. The amount of commercial-traveler money now held by the railroads because of this is conservatively estimated to be:

Trunk Lines Association	$450,000
Central Passenger Association	1,500,000
Pennsylvania Railroad, Pittsburg	350,000
Total	2,300,000

The interest on which, at current rates, would be nearly $70,000.

When the railroad companies sell a 1,000-mile book at $20 it is simply a fair excursion or wholesale rate, and whenever they sell a 1,000-mile book at that rate it is a good stroke of business. They get paid $20 cash in advance. Then, why should they throw around it requirements that, in the estimation of the majority of the people who travel, are unreasonable and not required by many large railroads operating under just the same conditions as the Pennsylvania Railroad, Erie Railroad, Delaware and Lackawanna Railroad, etc.? The interchangeable mileage ticket was urgently requested by committees representing various traveling salesmen's associations, but in granting this mileage ticket these railroads tacked on the conditions regarding the $10 excess and forfeiture of books in case of theft or loss. The Trunk Line Mileage Bureau claim they were compelled to throw these safeguards around their mileage contracts requiring a deposit of $10, but railroads such as the New York Central; New York, New Haven and Hartford; Boston and Albany; Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, and Philadelphia and Reading do not find it necessary.

I believe your bill will effectually remedy the existing evil and imposition by doing away with this $10 excess payment, whereby thousands of dollars are withheld from the pockets of commercial travelers for the use of illegal pooling combinations.

Yours, faithfully,

WILLIAM HOGE.

Hon. WILLIAM SULZER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have noted with a great deal of interest and pleasure the efforts you are putting forth toward securing for the commercial travelers of the United States an interchangeable mileage book at a flat rate of $20 per 1,000 miles. The traveling men of this country, who do so much toward upbuilding its commercial interests, and especially toward the prosperity and dividend-paying power of the railroads, are certainly entitled to this consideration at the hands of the railroad management.

We feel that in you we have a champion who will surely bring about some actual results so that these longed-for benefits will accrue to the commercial travelers, as we believe they so thoroughly deserve. We write this not only to pledge you our hearty support in this effort, but also to ask that you will kindly advise us as to what progress the matter is making in your hands and also as to whether there is any specific thing which we can do to further it along so that it may become an actual fact at an early date.

Again thanking you cordially for your interest and awaiting a reply at your earliest convenience, we are,

Very sincerely, yours,

URGES TRAVELERS TO WORK FOR SULZER MILEAGE BILL—NEW YORK SILK MERCHANT CALLS RAILROADS' TREATMENT OF COMMERCIAL SALESMEN AT PRESENT UNJUST.

EDITOR NEW YORK COMMERCIAL.

SIR: I see by your paper that Representative WILLIAM SULZER has introduced a bill regulating the price of mileage tickets on railways doing an interstate-commerce business. This is a matter in which commercial travelers, buyers and their employers, as well as all other people who travel considerably on railway trains and who buy mileage books, are greatly interested.

Commercial travelers' organizations throughout the country fought for a long time for an interchangeable mileage book, good on all railroads. Commercial travelers have to travel on many railroads, and to get their transportation at 2 cents a mile they had to buy a 1,000-mile book from each road over which they traveled, costing $20 each, filling their pockets with books and wrapping up a good deal of money. They made a fight through their various organizations for an interchangeable mileage book to be good on all railroads. After a great struggle the Trunk Line Mileage Bureau finally concluded to sell a 1,000-mile book good on their roads for $30, with the understanding that the extra $10 would be refunded on return of the cover.

George W. Boyd, general passenger agent of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, stated in a letter, dated February 5, 1906, to a commercial traveler friend of mine—S. M. Williams, of Pittsburg—that the Pennsylvania sells on an average 18,000 of $30 mileage books a month, which shows the vast number who travel and are being imposed upon by this system of mileage issued under the $10 contract by the Trunk Line Mileage Bureau. The amount of commercial traveler money now held by the railroads because of this is conservatively estimated to be—

Trunk Lines Association	$450,000
Central Passenger Association	1,500,000
Pennsylvania Railroad, Pittsburg	350,000
Total	2,300,000

The interest on this amount at current rates would be nearly $70,000. When the railroad companies sell a 1,000-mile book at $20, it is simply a fair excursion or wholesale rate, and whenever they sell a 1,000-mile book at that rate it is a good stroke of business; they get $20 cash in advance. Then why should they throw around it requirements that in the estimation of the majority of the people who travel are unreasonable and not required by many large railroads operating under just the same conditions as the Pennsylvania, Erie, Lackawanna, and other roads?

The interchangeable mileage ticket was urgently requested by committees representing various traveling salesmen's associations, but in granting this mileage ticket these railroads tacked on the conditions regarding the $10 excess, and forfeiture of books in case of theft or loss. The trunk-line mileage bureau claims it was compelled to throw these safeguards around the mileage contracts requiring a deposit of $10, but railroads such as the New York Central, the New Haven, the Boston and Albany, the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg, the Reading, do not find it necessary.

I travel selling goods, and the firm (Eastmond & Sinclair), of which I am a member, also employs commercial travelers. I am, therefore, in a position to understand how this bill of Mr. SULZER'S is going to affect a great many thousands of business men. I think the traveling men's organizations all over the country ought to pass resolutions in favor of it.

A. H. EASTMOND.

NEW YORK, May 2, 1906.

[Editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

TO STOP THE MILEAGE-BOOK EXTORTION.

Every Pennsylvania Congressman will be expected by his constituents to do all he can to promote the passage of the bill which has been introduced by Representative SULZER, of New York, prohibiting railroad companies engaged in interstate transportation from charging more for the mileage books issued by them than a flat 2 cents per mile rate. It is the present practice of some of the roads, and notably of the Pennsylvania, to require the deposit of $10 on every 1,000-mile book. This deposit is returned to the purchaser upon the surrender of the covers, provided that he has not allowed the use of the book by any third party. If he has been guilty of that enormity, the deposit is liable to forfeiture. The Sulzer bill changes all that. It not only declares that no deposit shall be exacted, but it expressly provides that mileage books shall be transferable at the option of the purchaser.

This is no more than fair and just and reasonable and right. The railroad company loses nothing through the use of a mileage book by some person other than the buyer. It costs no more to transport one man than it does to carry another, and from a merely common-sense point of view it might be supposed that the companies would be more inclined to promote the transfer of mileage books than to oppose it, for the reason that the more the availability of such books is extended the more rapidly the transportation which they cover will be consumed. The owner of a mileage book is not going to lend it to anyone else when he expects to need it himself. He will only transfer it for use during a period when it would otherwise be idle, and thus the sale of the commodity in which the carrier deals is stimulated and increased. This is too plain for argument, and it is surprising to find the companies pursuing a course which is manifestly prejudicial to their own interests.

Either they make money out of the use of mileage books or they do not. If they do not, why they should issue them at all is unaccountable, seeing that the railroads never have been accused of doing business on a philanthropic basis; but if they do, then it stands to reason that the more rapidly these books are used up the better it is for them. Possibly the explanation of this anomaly is to be found in the circumstance that there would be no excuse for the $10 deposit extortion if the books were transferable, and there is no doubt that this extortion is the source of considerable profit. The people who buy mileage books use them all the time. As soon as one book is exhausted they purchase another, and so the company is left in possession of the deposit continuously. In the aggregate these deposits amount to a considerable sum, on which the interest is so much clear gain.

The Sulzer bill ought to be enacted into law, and as it only applies to interstate commerce, it will be the duty of the legislature at its next session to establish a flat rate of 2 cents per mile throughout the State. That will settle the mileage-book question all right.

[Editorial from the Scranton Republican.]

A MILEAGE BOOK BILL.

Representative SULZER, of New York, has introduced a bill in the House "to regulate the price of mileage ticket transportation by companies doing an interstate-commerce business, and for other purposes." It provides that all such companies "shall sell mileage books, good for 1,000, 2,000, 3,000, 4,000, and 5,000 miles, on their respective lines or connecting lines traversing two or more States of the United States, at a price not exceeding 2 cents per mile for said mileage books."

The bill further provides that such mileage books shall be good until used and shall be transferable—that is, may be lawfully sold by the purchaser, if for any reason he cares to dispose of the same to another. It also forbids any railway transportation company doing interstate-commerce businesss to collect for a mileage book more than 2 cents a mile or to give any rebate thereon—that is, no railway company may, as some of them are now doing, require the purchaser of a mileage book to deposit a sum largely in excess of the price of the book, the excess to be returned to him on presentation of the covers of the book after the mileage has been used.

The penalty clause of the bill provides that any violation of the act shall constitute a misdemeanor and that the officers and directors of the offending company may be punished by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or by fine not exceeding $10,000, or both if the court deems it best to punish to the limit of the law.

There are some good points about this bill. Certain railroads have given great offense to the traveling public by requiring extra deposits from all purchasers of mileage books and the abuse should be corrected. The railroads exist for the benefit of the people, not the people for the benefit of the railroads, and when the latter become too tyrannical in any particular direction it is entirely proper that Congress or any other legislative body having juridiction over the matter should correct the abuse by such enactments as may be necessary for that purpose.

Mr. SULZER. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON].

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not yield his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. He was standing on his feet and is recognized in his own right.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman shall have time to conclude his remarks, but this method of concluding remarks previously made is in violation of the rule. While I am perfectly willing to yield, and to let the gentleman have such time as he wants to speak on the subject, I am not willing that it shall be done contrary to the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is that he must confine himself to the amendment. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Texas have such time as he says he might want. He said at first that all he wanted was ten minutes, and he has had half an hour.

Mr. BURLESON. But I submitted to interruptions.

Mr. MANN. I am not complaining about that; but let it be determined how much time he is to have. How much more time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BURLESON. About ten minutes.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Texas be extended for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to direct attention to the fact that these States that I have mentioned—these eleven Southern States—and you may add thereto Kentucky, Maryland, Missouri, and Delaware, have 132 Representatives upon this floor. I mention that in order to indicate the population, because it will also convey to the mind approximately the amount of business transacted in that section. These States, as I have stated, have in the consular service, representing the business interests of that section in the development of their foreign trade and at the same time that of the entire United States, only 24 consular officers; and yet the District of Columbia alone has 18 of her residents in this important service. I submit now, in all candor, is there a man on the other side of this Chamber who has the effrontery to get up here and say that this is fair.

Mr. Chairman, in all the Pacific slope only eleven persons have received consular appointment, and in the eight Rocky Mountain States only ten citizens have been thus honored.

I again submit, can there be a man found in this body who will say this is equitable and just, when you consider the fact that taxes are laid upon all the people of the United States to defray the expense incurred by keeping these commercial agents abroad.

Mr. Chairman, speaking for these sections, I protest against such discrimination.

I submit that unless this is a sectional Government, unless it is the purpose of some one to favor one section of our country as against all other sections, that it is not fair that this great section with 132 Representatives on this floor should have only 24 appointees in the consular service, when the District of Columbia has 18, and when the New England States, with only 29 Representatives, have 56 appointees in the consular service of our Government. Can any man here contend that such action is not sectional?

Mr. Chairman, the Pacific Slope, furnishing her quota of products exported abroad to make up the balance of trade in our favor, has 13 Representatives upon this floor, and yet she has only 11 appointees in the consular service, two less than the States of New Hampshire and Vermont, with only four Representatives on this floor.

As I have shown, the entire Rocky Mountain region has only 10 persons in the consular service, and by way of contrast I direct attention to the fact that the stony soil and rigid climate of the Old Bay State has furnished 19 of her citizens for this service, all of whom are at present on the pay roll, enjoying the emoluments of their offices—splendid consular officers, I do not doubt, watching at all times for chances to promote the interest of the business men of that great Commonwealth and of the country.

But, Mr. Chairman, is it fair that one section of our country should in this unjust way be permitted to dominate and control the appointment of these commercial agents which have so much to do with the upbuilding of our trade with foreign countries. I charge, sir, that this unfair discrimination against the great western section of our country is wholly indefensible. Shall the opportunity for securing a wider market for their resources in the Orient be denied to the Pacific slope and the great western section of our country? Are the business men of that section to be denied the chance to get their share of foreign trade and foreign business by an Executive who is apparently blind to their interest—who has ignored their claims to a fair proportion of the public agents who are sent abroad to foster our commercial interests?

Mr. Chairman, recently one of our consular officers died—and, by the way, it is a very rare thing that they die.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Or resign, either.

Mr. BURLESON. Or resign, either, as suggested by my friend. This gentleman who departed hence was from the State of Ohio. I invite the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, General GROSVENOR, who interrupted me a moment ago, to these facts. An effort was made, so stated by the newspapers, by the gentleman in charge of the State Department, in the person of the Secretary of State, and the Assistant Secretary of State, who, in my deliberate judgment, if they could have their way, would speedily change the unfair, unjust, and sectional practice which controls these appointments—an effort was made to appoint a Tennesseean. Of course I do not know whether it was true or not, but the newspapers stated that the junior Senator from the great State of Ohio promptly put forth the claim that that place belonged to Ohio and aggressively insisted that an Ohio man be given the appointment. Mr. Chairman, has the system of spoils reached the point where these commercial agents, who should be carefully selected so as to conserve the business interest of every section of our country, are now set apart to certain States, to be doled out to them year after year in total disregard of the interests of the other sections of our country? That is a question that each man here in his own conscience can answer for himself.

Mr. Chairman, east of the Mississippi River we have 240 persons who are holding positions abroad in our consular service, while the great stretch of our country west of the Father of Waters furnishes only 54 citizens who have received consular appointments. In that section of our country east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio, including West Virginia and the District of Columbia, 223 places have been given, leaving remaining for all other sections only 71 appointments.

I now desire to direct attention to the fact that the Central Eastern States have 74 citizens in the consular service, and the great Middle West, in part represented by my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], with 102 Representatives upon this floor, has only 91 citizens in the consular service.

Mr. MANN. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I think there have been several appointments to the consular service made from my district since I have been in Congress, but who got them I do not know, and I am very sure they were not made on political influence, and I do not believe on merit. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURLESON. If the appointments were not made on merit nor because of political influence, for conscience sake tell me the source of the influence that brought about their selection.

Mr. MANN. That is a mystery that never has been solved.

Mr. BURLESON. I agree with the gentleman that it is a mystery, but no deeper or more unfathomable than the reasons for the contention of certain people in this country for asserting that we have at the head of our Government a nonsectional Executive, when, in the light of the facts I have detailed, any candid, honest, fair-minded man must inevitably be driven to the conclusion that he has been not only partisan but sectional in naming the diplomatic and consular officers of our country.

Mr. Chairman, if it is too much to expect an abandonment of the indecent discrimination which has been practiced against the South for so many years, and I suppose it is, is it too much to hope that the unfair discrimination against the Pacific slope and the Middle West, and the unjust and indefensible discrimination now being practiced against the Rocky Mountain States will soon be brought to an end?

Mr. Chairman, in the recent past certain investigations of the business methods which have obtained in the conduct of the affairs of our great insurance and railroad corporations disclosed conditions highly discreditable to those in charge, if it did not prove them to be actually dishonest and violators of the law.

As a result of these investigations and disclosures the public conscience has been quickened, and there is a promise of a return of those higher standards of business probity which characterized the fathers in their dealings and transactions with each other. Is it too much to hope that, having directed attention to the gross discriminations which have been practiced against other sections of our country in addition to the South in the appointment of diplomatic and consular officers, that there will result at least a measure of correction for this persistent wrong which has been and is now being done the commercial interests of those sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. I submit the memorandum upon which I have based my remarks.

Number of diplomatic and consular appointments, etc.—Continued.

The Clerk read as follows:

Secretary of legation to Siam and consul-general at Bankok, $2,000.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to inquire if the Clerk has read section 2, on page 4?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has just read lines 6 and 7, on page 4.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not hear the second paragraph on that page, beginning with line 3, read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. That was read before the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] was recognized.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent to return to that section for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman what his amendment is?

Mr. SCOTT. The amendment which I desire to offer is to insert after the word "to" the word "Liberia;" and if that amendment is agreed to then I want, in order to make the bill consistent, to return to the preceding section to strike out "Liberia," the purpose of my amendment being to increase the salary of the secretary of legation at Liberia from $2,000 to $2,800.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I shall have to object, because that item was very carefully considered by the committee after several hearings from interested parties, and I should not be carrying out the judgment or will of the committee if I permitted a return to the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For ten student interpreters at the legation to China, who shall be citizens of the United States, and whose duty it shall be to study the Chinese language with a view to supplying interpreters to the legations and consulates in China, at $1,000 each, $10,000: Provided, That said student interpreters shall be chosen in such manner as will make the selections nonpartisan: And provided further, That upon receiving such appointment each student interpreter shall sign an agreement to continue in the service as interpreter to the legations and consulates in China so long as his said services may be required within a period of ten years.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on this section. I wish some information from the gentleman in charge of the bill about these interpreters. How many are there? What good do they do? Why this expenditure of money?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. There is no change in the existing law.

Mr. SULZER. How many of these interpreters are there there, and what are they for?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The whole number.

Mr. SULZER. That is an intelligent answer. How long have they been there?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Ever since the act was passed.

Mr. SULZER. When was the act passed?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. That I can not tell the gentleman. It was the old provision in the act and has been there for a good many years.

Mr. SULZER. Well, these interpreters must have long gray beards by this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman that ten of them were commissioned, some in 1902 and some in 1903.

Mr. SULZER. Have they been there all this time?

Mr. COUSINS. Yes; some are now vice or deputy consuls.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will explain that the obligation rests upon the students to remain in the service ten years in consideration of the education they receive. After that they are free to go, and as they pass out their places are filled by new applicants.

Mr. SULZER. What is the object of having these interpreters?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. There are so few Americans speak the Chinese language that these students are there for the purpose of learning the language, and they aid the consuls in developing the trade of our country.

Mr. SULZER. Is it for the purpose of letting down the barriers put up against the Chinese to keep them from coming in here?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. We have no barrier against the Chinese, except what is agreed to by the Chinese treaty—that is, against the coolies, to keep them out. Under the law to-day the other Chinese are admitted—bankers, students, travelers, etc.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I would like to have some more information. Thus far I have received little on the subject. Who appoints these interpreters?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The President of the United States. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Chair rule on the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. I withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to get a little more information. How does the President appoint them? It says here that they shall be nonpartisan; what does that mean?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It means that they shall be selected from likely young men who have ability or some talent for languages, and shall be chosen for nonpartisan purposes.

Mr. SULZER. How much pay do they get?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. One thousand dollars a year.

Mr. SULZER. So we have been expending $10,000 a year for a dozen years or more for these ten interpreters—an unnecessary waste of money, in my opinion.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Now, I ask for a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. This is a queer provision, it seems to me, to be in this bill. Why should we pay $10,000 a year for the purpose of sending ten young men over to China to learn the Chinese language, when, as a matter of fact, these young men may live in China all their lives and not be able to learn the Chinese alphabet? What service are they to this country?

Mr. MANN. Does it take that long to learn it?

Mr. SULZER. Very few Chinamen know their own alphabet, and I doubt if these young men know much about it. [Laughter.] It seems to me this is a waste of the public money. This is an era of strict economy, especially in regard to matters at home.

Here are $10,000 being thrown away every year on ten young men over in China, whose names we know not. Perhaps they are sent there to have a good time. I don't see any sense in it, I do not see any good in it, I do not see any return that it is going to bring to the Government, and the provision ought to be stricken out and thus save to the taxpayers of this country this $10,000 every year. Quite an item. I undertake to say that if the taxpayers knew about this waste, they would rise up and object. Oh, yes; the Republicans laugh; they always do when they are spending the people's money without giving any reason for it. I undertake to say that this provision of $10,000 a year can do no possible good to anybody except, perhaps, these ten young men, and we do not know one of them. [Laughter.]

I would like to know who they are. Perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows who they are. My friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a little while ago made an eloquent speech regarding the injustice and discriminations in diplomatic and consular appointments, and here are ten diplomatic appointments that some member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to shed a little light upon. They are ten little $1,000 a year sinecures. A little pap to some ten little favorites. We should stop, or at least know more about it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two clerks at the embassy to Great Britain; one at the rate of $1,800 per annum, and one at the rate of $1,200 per annum, $3,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I would like to have an explanation of this. What new thing has occurred to make it necessary to have two more clerks at the embassy at Great Britain?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will state in reply to the gentleman that the Secretary of State appeared before our committee and urged this increase in the clerical force at the embassy at London for the following reason: The Secretary proposes to introduce a new scheme for gathering and disseminating knowledge among the various diplomatic posts abroad. There has not been sufficient intercommunication between the several embassies and legations to keep them informed of all that is going on at the different posts so that they may have a general knowledge of all negotiations and all doings carried on. The scheme as submitted to the committee by the Secretary of State was this: When instructions are sent out now to our various ministers and ambassadors it takes a great number of cablegrams in order to reach them all. This proposition is to send one cablegram with instructions to London and then to have those instructions transmitted by post to the various representatives, which would cost very much less, as nearly every embassy and legation is within twenty-four hours, mail time, of London. The House can readily see that this will be a saving as well as an influence in distributing knowledge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order. I see in one place in the bill, on page 6, a lump sum for clerks in embassies and legations. I would like to know of the gentleman the necessity for making a specific appropriation for clerks at London when a lump sum covers precisely the same thing?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state that, as this is new legislation and put in for a specific purpose, it could hardly come under the head of the general appropriation for clerk hire which is distributed, in the discretion of the Secretary of State, to all the different posts. The Secretary was frank to submit his scheme to the committee. It met with universal approval, and the necessity for these clerks at the embassy at London is for the increased work that will be put upon that embassy in the gathering and distribution of this information. Hence the necessity for the separate item.

Mr. MANN. Under the original item in the bill, on page 6, the Secretary can employ as many clerks as he pleases, at such salaries as he pleases to pay, provided he does not exceed the sum of $65,000. I really do not see the point of making a specific appropriation for two clerks, segregating those from the original number included in the $65,000. I have no objection to the item.

Mr. FLOOD. These two clerks represent the State Department, and are not to do any of the work of the embassy at London. They represent the State Department for the purpose of sending out this information by mail.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in the bill to that effect at all. This is for clerks at the embassy, and nothing is said about the State Department. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 18, after the word "dollars," insert "That the consular agency at Cardenas, Cuba, be raised to a consulate, at $1,500 per annum."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not do that. I have offered this to a very vulnerable paragraph in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Not now. It is not vulnerable now.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Why not?

Mr. MANN. Because it has been discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he will make any additional appropriation or give the consul a better office or headquarters in London than he has had heretofore?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. We increase the clerk hire, their allowance for clerk hire, because the salary of the consul has been cut in half under the bill that passed the House a few days ago.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Who is consul there now?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. General Wynne.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not know so much about the salaries for the clerks, nor do I know how many clerks they have. My recollection is that all the clerks were employed for which there was room in which to work, and the purpose of my saying anything here just now is this: I think it is a perfect shame that we have a trifling little box of an office for the use of this our London consul. It is a little bit of a concern, I dare say the gentleman has seen it. It is enough almost to make an American citizen pull his hat down at least a little bit over his face when he looks at it. When Consular-General Evans was there he and I talked about it. He was our former consul, and he said that he did not have room in which to work. I do not know about the clerk hire or about the number of clerks, but I do think that the committee ought to look into the matter further, and if they have not provided for a better office at that place it should be done.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. They have looked into it, and I will say, under the bill for the reorganization of the consular service, London will get an increase, and we have also allowed an increase in this bill. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will that enlarge the office any; I mean the little box in which they at present work?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I believe the more rent allowance you have the bigger place you can rent.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I hope we will have a better place, for while Mr. Evans was consul there I saw a lot of American women, some from my own State, some from Pennsylvania, and our people from all over the United States, who went there to call on the consul on business, and there was often not room enough for them all to get in to wait their turn, and part of them were hanging around the door, all waiting for an audience with the consul.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is a shame this office should be in that fix.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, FOREIGN MISSIONS.

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, compensation of kavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of embassies and legations, and for printing in the Department of State, and for loss on bills of exchange to and from embassies and legations, $225,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is an increase in this item of $67,500. I reserve the point of order to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to be heard on that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I reserve the point of order for the present that the gentleman may explain. I desire the gentleman to explain the necessity for this increase of $67,500. I reserve the point of order in order that he may do so in the meanwhile. If his explanation is satisfactory, I may withdraw it.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state for the information of the gentleman, in the first place, the increase is $35,000. Last year it was $190,000. This year it is $225,000, which makes an increase of $35,000.

Mr. FLOOD. Can I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Certainly.

Mr. FLOOD. The amount last year was $190,000?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I so stated.

Mr. FLOOD. But out of that was supposed to be taken about $32,500 for clerk hire. Now, there has been a specific appropriation for clerk hire, so that does not come out, and that $32,000 will have to be added to this $35,000, making the increase $67,500.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will further say to the gentleman that we have put a provision in this bill allowing transportation at 5 cents a mile, which will have to come out of the contingent fund for the transportation of diplomatic officers to their posts, and that will use a great deal of it. I will also state that there was a deficit last year of nearly $30,000 in the contingent fund, and the Committee on Appropriations have served notice on the Departments that this habit which has grown up between the Departments and Congress of putting in estimates below what they know their cost is going to be and then coming in annually with the deficit has got to cease, and we have raised the appropriations in these bills, allowing for the deficiencies of last year and adding that to be somewhere near the actual expenses of the Department. Furthermore, the gentleman must realize that as our intercourse with other nations extends and as business increases the expenses of all representatives abroad, both consular and diplomatic, also increase.

Furthermore, the cost of clerk hire abroad is increasing all the time, and under those circumstances, when the Department asked for $340,000, we thought we had cut them down and held them in very well. After careful hearing of the Secretary of State we had the fiscal agent of the Department before the committee, and we had the head of the Consular Bureau and gave them all careful hearings. I have never known, since I have served on the committee, the Secretary of State to come before the committee before. It has always been considered, perhaps, a little below the dignity of the high office, but so earnest is the present Secretary to reform our foreign service and to make it efficient in every way that he laid aside whatever great dignity may attach to his office and came before us in full, frank, and free conference, as did the other officers of the Department. And so convincing were their statements in what they urged that the committee unanimously agreed on the sum mentioned here as a fair one.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there was last year provided out of this contingent fund $32,500 to be paid for clerks. Clerks were paid out of it. This year the clerks are put upon salaries specifically provided for in the balance of the bill, so that instead of there being an increase in this fund there ought to have been a decrease. In addition to that, not long ago, I do not remember how long ago, but I believe it was at this Congress—it may have been at the last Congress—we passed a bill here providing certain traveling consuls who would act as inspectors. Now, all that inspecting work hitherto had been done out of this fund. That is another reason why this fund might have been decreased instead of being increased.

Now, counting the $32,500 that used to be paid out of it for clerk hire—and that will not now have to be paid out of it—and the absolute increase of $35,000, there is an increase of $67,500 upon an original basis of $190,000—the total appropriation for the last fiscal year.

As to the promise that hereafter there shall be no deficit, of course those of us who do not believe in Santa Claus as a real, living, visiting sort of an entity, do not take much stock in that. The House has been trying for a long time to get executive officers to keep within the limit of the amounts of appropriations for definite purposes made by the legislative branch of the Government. They have not done it, and they are not going to do it after this. They come in very frequently and get an increase here and there upon the plea that their deficit thereafter will not be so great, but in my experience here I have never found the deficits thereafter were less than they were theretofore. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the increase ought to be made, and for that reason, and not merely because I can make the point of order, I shall insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I was going to ask the gentleman if he had fully considered the necessity of an increase of the amount so as to provide more kavasses.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What is a kavass?

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the cost of cablegrams will be less, but I apprehend that the reason this is increased sixty or seventy thousand dollars is in order to provide additional compensation for kavasses.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that kavasses come very high.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Telegrams are decreased and inspecting services decreased, and I reckon it must go to kavasses or dragomans—one or the other.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. A kavass is a messenger.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A sort of a man—the same as a dragoman. One interprets and guides and the other just messengers.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. In reply to the gentleman I would like to read from the letter of the Secretary of State, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury, relating to the contingent expenses of foreign missions in consulates, in which he says:

Owing to the peculiar nature of the foreign service it is impracticable to fix or apportion the amount to be used by embassies, legations, and consulates and adhere to such apportionment for the reason that the cost of telegrams, charges for postage, and other items can not be regulated.

Rents are increasing annually. It is observed that increased rates are made for lights and fuel. Increased wages are demanded for clerical, messenger, and janitor service. The demands on the Department for furniture, typewriters, carpets, stoves, fixtures, etc., for embassies, legations, and consulates can not be estimated. Unforeseen emergencies, which the Department can not control, are constantly arising in the foreign service which necessitate the immediate expenditure of large sums of money.

I would state, for the information of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], that the service in the consular service to-day is practically paralyzed for the reason that the contingent fund is exhausted, and that they have not the money with which to pay postage on their letters, and if they wish to make reports which the Department demands shall be made in regard to our foreign commerce it must be done out of their own pocket. I do not wish to repeat, but, as I said before, as the country grows and as our trade expands so do the expenses of our foreign department expand. And for this reason we must expect the contingent expenses to grow from year to year. And it will be a very mistaken policy, Mr. Chairman, if any lack of liberality is extended to this most important branch of the service, for when you think of it there is but $2,000,000 a year expended on this great department of our Government which holds in its hands almost war or peace, and which protects our citizens abroad from injury and recovers damages for such injuries, and which at the end of the Boxer rebellion in China got $20,000,000 damages for injury to our citizens there. Think of a department recovering $20,000,000 at a cost of $2,000,000 a year to run it.

The money is expended by the State Department, affecting the very life and welfare of our country; and when we think of the able men of our country who, in a spirit of patriotism, are willing to go abroad and not receive adequate compensation for their services—not only that, but do not receive money upon which to live in the manner which is imposed upon them—when we know these facts, it seems to me a mistaken policy to undertake to cut down the small contingent fund which is intended to meet the various expenditures that are necessarily incurred in the running of this efficient and important department of our Government. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman from Mississippi on the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point of order is that it is a change of existing law, not a limitation, and is new legislation to the extent of the increase.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to submit this statement: The contingent fund is necessarily a continuing appropriation from year to year to meet the necessities of the State Department. It can not be limited, for its very name "contingent" implies that it can not be absolutely estimated. Therefore the very fact of it, and its necessity from year to year, implies a change of amount and is not a change of the existing law, for the law consists in the appropriation that establishes a contingent fund, and the amount is to be made in accordance with the estimates that are furnished by the Department.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point made by the gentleman from Mississippi wholly applies to the increase in the amount, the Chair will overrule the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point of order necessarily is applied to all of it that is not specifically set forth. The point is made to all the paragraph, because the increase makes it new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

STEAM LAUNCH FOR LEGATION AT CONSTANTINOPLE.

Hiring of steam launch for use of the legation at Constantinople, $1,800.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I think it is new legislation.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of order?

Mr. SULZER. I want to know the warrant of law for this appropriation—the authority for paying $1,800 a year rent for a steam launch for the legation at Constantinople?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It is the same as last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SULZER. Not so fast; but very well; then I move to strike out the last word. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I can find no warrant of law for this continuing appropriation, to hire a steam launch for the legation at Constantinople, and to pay every year for this steam launch $1,800 rental. You can buy a pretty good steam launch for $1,800; and to-day, according to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, we have been paying from year to year without any warrant of law whatever $1,800 in rent for a steam launch. I would like to ask the gentleman, if he knows, how long we have been paying this?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I do not know.

Mr. SULZER. You ought to know, being the chairman of the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will simply say to the gentleman that I know enough to knock out the point of order; and being in charge of the bill, it is not necessary to know any more.

Mr. SULZER. That is not clever. The Chairman overruled the point of order, and he did so in error, without any more authority for it than you had to put in this bill this grafting appropriation of $1,800 a year rental for a launch.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. SULZER. It looks queer to me. I would like, if the gentleman can give the information, to know how long this steam launch renting of $1,800 a year has been going on?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I do not know how old the boat is, but I know that it was passed the first time in 1892, and it has existed there ever since. I suppose the gentleman knows that this is on the Bosphorus, and a steam launch is necessary to visit the incoming vessels.

Mr. SULZER. Then we have paid twenty-odd thousand dollars rent for the use of this steam launch. Quite an item.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It is not owned by the Government.

Mr. SULZER. I said we paid that in rent. We could buy a steam launch for something like $2,000. We can buy a pretty good steam launch for $2,000. I know where there are new steam launches for sale at that price, and they are very fine launches. They last for twenty or thirty years. I would like to know why we do not buy a launch?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if we had an item in this bill for the purchase of a steam launch, and the gentleman had the economic turn of mind he has now, I would like to know what he would do with that?

Mr. SULZER. A launch, if necessary, should have been bought in the first instance. It is economy to do it now.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I was not here in 1892, or probably I would have suggested buying a boat at that time.

Mr. SULZER. Now, think of that going on, Mr. Chairman, for the next twenty or thirty years paying out every year $1,800 for the rent of a steam launch. It seems to me to be a great waste of money. It seems to me that it is poor economy. Why, instead of hiring a launch, we ought to buy one. It certainly seems to me to be extortionate to pay $1,800 a year rent for a little steam launch. Something must be wrong with such a system of administration. It should be looked into, I think, just a bit. In my opinion money can be saved here, and if it can it is our duty to save it for the taxpayers. I understand that things are very cheap in Constantinople. In my judgment, $800 a year would be plenty of money to appropriate for hiring a steam launch to sail out on a hot evening over the Bosphorus. It seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the committee, ought to have investigated this matter a little. He made up this bill apparently according to any old way. So I move to amend by striking out "eighteen hundred dollars" and inserting "eight hundred dollars," thus saving the taxpayers of the country $1,000 every year.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to amend by striking out the words "one thousand."

The question being taken, the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SULZER. Division. Let us stand up for economy.

The commitee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 62.

Mr. SULZER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I regret to note the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and twenty-five—a quorum present.

Mr. SULZER. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused, 19 Members, not a sufficient number, rising in support of the demand.

The Clerk read as follows:

GROUND RENT OF LEGATION AT TOKYO, JAPAN.

Annual ground rent of the legation at Tokyo, Japan, for the year ending March 15, 1907, $250, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert a new section after line 16, page 9:

"For the acquisition in foreign capitals of proper sites and buildings for the embassies and legations of the United States and for the residences of the ambassadors and envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary of the United States to foreign countries, $1,000,000."

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I have already addressed this House laboriously, lengthily, and, I fear, somewhat boringly upon this subject upon two previous occasions. I would not, if I could under the rules, take up any long time in the discussion of this question now. I desire merely to say that there is a bill in this House which has the unanimous approval of all the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, including its acting chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ADAMS], appropriating for this purpose the sum of $5,000,000. I have simply taken from that bill $1,000,000 and propose it as an amendment to this appropriation bill. If we pass this amendment, we will then be taking the first step to relieve the condition under which this Government is now laboring, of being represented at every great embassy and every great mission in Europe and in the Far East by men whose necessary qualification is that they have the price.

Mr. RUCKER. What does the gentleman mean by that? Does he mean that they have paid a price?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Oh, certainly not. I mean what everybody knows is true, that under our system no one can accept an important diplomatic position under our Government unless he has a large private fortune to enable him to meet his expenses abroad.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman, does he think that under present conditions there is the slightest chance on earth for a poor man ever to get one of these places?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I do not think it is conceivable.

Mr. RUCKER. Even although your amendment should be adopted, would there still be any chance?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The adoption of my amendment would not aboslutely relieve the condition, but it would, however, serve notice that this Congress is going to consider the question of ameliorating this condition of affairs.

Mr. RUCKER. Would it not simply serve notice that Congress was going to pour a little more wealth into the laps of rich men?

Mr. LONGWORTH. On the contrary this money would be expended by the Government to provide residences abroad where poor men appointed to these positions could live.

Mr. RUCKER. Where a poor man could live, but where rich men will continue to live until we get a change in this country.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Where a rich man must of necessity live if appointed, and therefore be on the same basis as a poor man appointed there. At present the amount which an ambassador pays for his official residence is limited only by what he is willing to pay out of his own private means.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I fully appreciate what the gentleman has stated, from a historical standpoint, and I dare say he has given the matter a thorough investigation. Will he tell the committee whether or not our ministers previous to the civil war, were rich men, or when this rich-man era began? I ask the question seriously, because I want to know.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it has certainly been in existence since 1892, when we passed the act elevating our ministers to be ambassadors. I think it was in existence long before that, certainly in London and the great European posts.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Did our ministers, ambassadors, and foreign officers forty years ago have to be millionaires to serve the Government?

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; they did not.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What has brought about the changed conditions?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The fact that they are now ambassadors in some cases has brought about a changed condition. The fact that the cost of living has largely increased is also another element, and, above all, the fact that this country has now a position in the world's politics hardly dreamed of by our statesmen forty years ago.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman must know that our foreign officials in years past had, through their ability——

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will answer the gentleman. The original act of Congress, when Benjamin Franklin was sent abroad, gave him unlimited means to live in a style proper to represent the country. After that, before these salaries were fixed, our ministers when they went abroad were given large sums for an outfit.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman has cited one case.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. MANN. Five minutes at a time, Mr. Chairman; I object to ten minutes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman is talking about a very important matter.

Mr. MANN. We have discussed this matter several times, and we want to get through with this bill some time. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to recite any particular date that occurred so long ago as the gentleman from Tennessee can remember but which I can not. [Laughter.] But, under our system, frequently men of great distinction from this country have been submitted to great humiliation from the way they were compelled to live in comparison with the way that representatives from other countries of the same position were living. The fact is that to-day in no great European capital can a proper residence be acquired for at least the amount that is paid to our ambassadors in salaries. If this country adopts the system of owning residences which shall be used, which must be used, by our ambassadors and ministers, then immediately this condition, under which men of wealth going to represent us abroad vie with each other in lavishness of expenditure of their immense wealth, will disappear. I would like to call the attention of this House to the fact that the act which raised our ministers to the rank of ambassadors was subject to a point of order, because it was an amendment to this bill. The point of order was not raised here or in the Senate; it was passed unanimously. Just before that act passed the Secretary of State refused to recommend that our ministers should be raised to the rank of ambassadors unless Congress would in some way, directly or indirectly, increase their compensation. Congress proceeded to do by unanimous consent exactly what the Secretary of State recommended should not be done.

It seems to me that the gentleman from Pennsylvania might very well withhold his point of order. It is impossible in this session of Congress to secure consideration of this bill. I will say that I had intended, if this bill could have been considered, to have amended it so that the Secretary of State should be authorized to expend an amount not to exceed $1,000,000 a year for five years. I believe that this appropriation for suitable residence—and I do not advocate the buying of a palace or anything except the sort of a house that the gentleman from Mississippi would say was proper for a gentleman to live in representing this country—would bring about a condition under which our representatives could be chosen on account of their learning and ability and intellectual fitness, regardless of what their worldly possessions may be. It seems to me the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who is in sympathy with this bill, might very well withhold the point of order upon this amendment.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, the reserving of a point of order to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio illustrates the absurd rules that prevail in this House in regard to legislation. Only committees can legislate. Now, the vast majority of this House is in favor of some such provision as that contained in the bill that has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio and favorably reported by this very committee, and yet under a rule that has absolutely destroyed the value of the individual Member this amendment, embodying the principle of that bill, will be ruled out. No amendment can be offered to any legislation, no matter how germane it may be to the subject, if it be not absolutely within a narrow rule that we have created, and the result has been that the House of Representatives has lost its influence and its power. But I do not want to discuss rules. I want to speak to the merits of the amendment. I favor the amendment not only because I believe that we ought to have homes for our legations abroad, but because I believe it would do something to stop the shameful extravagance, the outrageous and un-American method of living of some of our representatives abroad.

I think that when a representative of America pays $40,000 for his house rent in London, and several times that in maintaining it, he is not representing but misrepresenting the country that honors him. Of all men in the world, I have the most supreme contempt for that man who would pander to the poor by an abuse of the rich. There is not in my whole make-up one single bit of envy of any man because of his wealth. I submit, however, to this House that the extravagant living which has been indulged in by some of our representatives abroad is un-American; that it does not represent the spirit of the Republic; that it does not represent the best life of the people of this Republic.

The American people believe in good living. They believe in decent living; but they do not believe in all the ostentation which has been indulged in in recent years, and the wrong is not only a wrong while a man is in office, but it is a continuing wrong that involves every man who follows him at that particular post. Every man succeeding one of these men who spends thousands and thousands of dollars in a show of their wealth is expected to carry on the same establishment, equally large, to make the same expenditure, and the result is that instead of American legations representing the democracy for which our country stands they represent as much of aristocracy, as much of exclusion, as much of vulgar display of recently acquired wealth as can be found the world over. [Applause.] For that reason I hope to see the amendment adopted or some similar legislation had. If we had men whose wealth had been of a little longer standing, there would perhaps be less display of it. No man can justify an expenditure for the maintaining of an establishment such as we have seen in two or three capitals in Europe as being necessary to uphold the dignity of the office. There is a dignity that demands a proper dwelling place; that demands a decent living; an ability to entertain properly the representatives of other governments and American citizens who may be abroad; but that dignity is violated the moment you step across the line of refinement into unseemly display and ostentation, and no worse example of it can be given to the people of America than this display of wealth that has resulted in a man having to be a multimillionaire, or some member of his family being one, in order for him to accept the post at the Court of St. James, at Paris, at Berlin, or at St. Petersburg. I hope there will be proper provision made for our representatives, and then I should like to see a restriction of such extravagances and remedy applied now, while we are waiting for proper legations. When they are once created, then the outward appearance at least of our embassies will always be the same, but in the meanwhile I would like to see some man who vulgarly, snobbishly is flaunting his money in the face of the world called home because of that fact and because it is undemocratic and not in keeping with the spirit of our people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist on his point of order?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, as chairman one often has to do things that his individual desires would incline him not to do. I must insist on the point of order, because I desire to get through with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleague will reserve his point of order for five minutes.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Oh, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, my colleague, can speak for five minutes.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the last paragraph.

Mr. MANN. But the last paragraph has been ruled out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. But it was not an amendment to any paragraph in the bill.

Mr. SIBLEY. Then I shall try to get a similar amendment in by changing the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for five minutes.

Mr. SIBLEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] has voiced, I think, a sentiment that is in the mind of every Member of this body; yet at the same time I admit to some modification of my views as to the wisdom of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], for I have a few weeks since finished the reading of the autobiography of the Hon. Andrew D. White, for many years our diplomatic representative abroad. He was thought of so highly that President Cleveland retained him for several years at his diplomatic post.

Now, if there is one thing in all that autobiography which Mr. White emphasizes it is that we should own our own buildings at these foreign capitals, and that, by failing to do so, we not only belittle in the eyes of other nations our accredited representatives, but we eliminate in many cases from our diplomatic service the very best brains and the very best talent that the nation boasts, simply because the demands upon the individual pocket of the diplomat are so great as to preclude the services of such men. I am sure that if each Representative in this body, without prejudice, would read Mr. White's recommendations, we would all agree with him. Mr. White is a man who is now retired forever from the public arena. He is speaking to his countrymen as a distinguished educator and diplomat. He has been an honor to his nation, and all citizens justly honor him. In all his two volumes that is the one point that he makes most emphatic. I should like very much indeed, had the Chairman not ruled it out on a point of order, to see the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio prevail, although I am frank to say that until I had read Doctor White's autobiography I should have entertained an entirely different opinion. It is not unknown to Members whose faces I see on the other side of this Chamber that Mr. Cleveland sent an ambassador to Russia, a distinguished Democratic Member of Congress, who was our colleague, who came away from there, I have been led to believe, very much chagrined and much impoverished, merely because he could not afford to hold the post which his talents so eminently qualified him to fill—the Hon. Clifton Breckinridge, of Arkansas.

Now, I want to see the wealth qualification eliminated. I want to see the ambassadors of a nation which is foremost in the commercial progress of the world, which has gone to the very front rank of nations, which is now the financial center and the industrial center of the globe, properly provided for. The expenses of a diplomat are greater now than in the days of which my friend speaks, because our interests have so tremendously multiplied that the ambassador must touch a hundred points to-day which were uncalled to his attention in a generation or two gone by; and, therefore, I hope some day, before I shall have passed off the scene of action—not political action, but while I still remain a citizen to watch events—to see suitable mansions belong to the United States as the British own one here, that shall be American soil, and which, in all the tumults and upheavals that occur in foreign capitals, if they should occur, will be recognized as soil of the United States and not subject to the riots or assaults of a mob. [Loud applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

REERECTION OF CONSULAR BUILDING AT TAHITI, SOCIETY ISLANDS.

For the reerection of the American consular building at Tahiti, Society Islands, $5,071.45.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will have to make a point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make his point of order or reserve it?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Well, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I would like to state for the information of the gentleman, and I am sure he will withdraw his point of order when he hears it, that this is for the reerection of the American consulate building at Tahiti, Society Islands. This building was absolutely destroyed by a cyclone a year ago, and it is necessary that it should be put up again. The Secretary of State wrote to our chairman [Mr. HITT] as follows:

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that a cyclone and high sea which swept over Tahiti, Society Islands, on February 8 last, caused the total destruction of the American consular building there. The building destroyed was the property of this Government. It stood on ground which is quite the finest in the town of Papeeti and which can not be used by the terms of the original deed for other purposes than a consulate.

The building which it is desired to build on the present Government property will cost $5,071.45, the estimate therefor being itemized as follows.

It is essential that this be reerected for the use of the consul, and more than that, the land, which is owned by the Government, is under such restrictions that it can not be used for any other purpose. I feel sure the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his point of order with this information from the Secretary of State.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman inform us whether it is the policy of the Government to provide consular buildings for all the consuls of the Government? We have information here to the effect that we ought to provide buildings for all ambassadors—with which I am not in sympathy, I will say to the gentleman, at present—and I would like to know whether the Government intends to provide buildings for all consuls and consular agents, or whether it is an exception in this case?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state to the gentleman, the policy of the Government has not been to provide consulates with buildings; but in such out-of-the-way countries where it is impossible to get a habitable place for the use of the American representative, in some such places the Government has erected houses for the consuls, and this happens to be one of them. There is probably no house on the island that would be of sufficient size and proper to house the American consul and his family; hence the original erection of the building, and hence the necessity for its reerection, and I feel sure——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I am not certain whether the item is subject to the point of order, but I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I think the item plainly is not subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. PERKINS. As I understand the facts, Mr. Chairman, the Government of the United States owns the site upon which it has erected a building to use for consular purposes at Tahiti, Society Islands—that is to say, the purchase of that building, the erection of that building, and use of that building, as I understand, is established law. Now, surely, Mr. Chairman, if by some accident a building belonging to the Government is subject to injury, it is not enacting new law to make the necessary appropriation for the repairs to that building, whether they are more or whether they are less.

Take the building owned by the Government mentioned here; surely the necessary repairs on any property owned by the Government, and to which the Government has acquired a legal title or proper use, then becomes an established branch of the property, and the necessary repair, like the necessary care——

The CHAIRMAN. Can the gentleman answer one question for the Chair?

Mr. PERKINS. I will if possible.

The CHAIRMAN. Was this building completely destroyed, and is this appropriation to rebuild the building, or was it simply damaged, and is this item to repair it?

Mr. PERKINS. Of course, the foundation remains. I suppose the superstructure has been rendered uninhabitable.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In connection with the question of the Chair, the language of the provision settles it.

The CHAIRMAN. That is why the Chair asked the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The language of the provision settles it. It does not say "repair;" it says "reerection."

Mr. PERKINS. I think it is not the language of the bill that settles the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman wants to be heard further. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist upon the point of order?

Mr. MANN. If the committee will excuse me for a second, I will say that this consul is enjoying a thousand-dollar salary now. This bill proposes to give him $2,000 salary. The consul at this place has not a thing on earth to do but live. [Laughter.]

Mr. OTJEN. May I ask the gentleman a question? Would you go down there for $2,000?

Mr. MANN. I may be glad of the opportunity some day. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I hope not.

Mr. MANN. I have plenty of constituents who would be glad to go there to-day for $2,000, or probably less. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. DENBY. Will the gentleman yield for a little data concerning business in that office?

Mr. MANN. Very gladly.

Mr. DENBY. The gentleman asserted that there is no business there. The exports from that port to the United States for the last fiscal year were $314,000. The official fees amounted to $330.50; the notarial fees to $44; all of which indicate a very considerable amount of business done at the consulate. Vessels cleared for the United States, 11; seamanship, 2; seamen discharged, 2; letters received and answered, 300; expenses of living, high. So the consul has manifestly something more to do than live.

Mr. MANN. He had three vessels to attend to in three hundred and sixty-five days. That is coming near to doing nothing.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Eleven vessels.

Mr. MANN. Eleven vessels.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Thirteen vessels.

Mr. MANN. Well, call it thirteen; that is an unlucky number for him.

Mr. DENBY. He had to prepare manifests for $314,000.

Mr. MANN. For how many vessels?

Mr. DENBY. It is immaterial as to the number of vessels. It is the amount of exports that make the business of the consul. There were eleven vessels of the United States.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman understands very well that the consul does not prepare the manifests.

Mr. DENBY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I do not so understand. The consul generally does prepare the manifests, and also writes letters and signs checks.

Mr. MANN. He examines the manifests. The manifests are not prepared by the consuls. Eleven vessels mean eleven days' work, possibly, in the year's time. I think he is exceedingly well paid at $2,000. He has a thousand dollars extra because he lost the building, and the building probably was not worth very much.

Mr. OLMSTED rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule on the point of order, unless the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to address the Chair.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was simply going to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that in the Fifty-sixth Congress, as referred to on page 346 of the Manual, it was held that the rebuilding of a bridge in the District of Columbia was a continuation of Government work in progress, and upon the argument of the present Speaker of the House. That may or may not have a bearing on this question. I have not been paying close enough attention to know precisely the question at issue here, but it seems to me it might have a bearing.

The CHAIRMAN. What page is that?

Mr. OLMSTED. Page 346 of the Manual. I had occasion recently to examine that in the RECORD, and found that the point of order in that case was overruled on the argument of the present distinguished Speaker of the House, then chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. It was a case where a bridge, once constructed by the Government, had gone away. The paragraph against which the point was urged contained an appropriation for the construction of a new bridge in place of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania the question if that was not a part of the park system of the District of Columbia?

Mr. OLMSTED. If I mistake not, the bridge was or had been across a stream running through the Zoological Garden.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the paragraph under consideration by striking out of line 9 the word "reerection" and substitute the word "repairs."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will sustain the point of order, and will recognize the gentleman to offer an amendment.

Mr. DENBY. I offer an amendment to make the paragraph read as follows:

For the repair of the American consular building at Tahiti, Society Islands, $5,071.45.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to take the language of the amendment, and unless the gentleman from Illinois desires to be heard, the Chair is ready to rule. [Cries of "Rule!"]

Mr. MANN. I have no desire whatever to prevent the construction of the building, so far as that is concerned. The point that I am making was the relation to the ruling of the Chair. Here is an admission that the building is destroyed and can not be repaired. The Chair is required to act upon facts that are before it, and I doubt very much whether the Chair could entertain the amendment with the admission made to the Chair as to what the facts are.

Mr. PERKINS. What admission is made to the Chair?

Mr. MANN. That the building has been destroyed, and could not be repaired.

Mr. PERKINS. I know of no such admission.

Mr. MANN. That is what I understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state to the gentleman that when the Chair ruled upon the point of order before he ruled according to the language, although the gentleman from New York said that the appropriation was "for repairs" and not "rebuilding" the building.

Mr. MANN. Now, I am frank to say that I think the ruling is correct in both cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Chairman, there should be a change in the title of the paragraph, changing it from "reerection" to "repair."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the change will be made by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANNUAL EXPENSES OF CAPE SPARTEL LIGHT, COAST OF MOROCCO.

Annual proportion of the expenses of Cape Spartel and Tangiers Light on the coast of Morocco, including loss by exchange——

Mr. WILLIAMS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is the duty of the Clerk to read the bill, and he read "Annual proportion of the expenses of Cape Spartel and Tangiers Light on the coast of Morocco, including loss by exchange, $325."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that he had just reached the total of the paragraph.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Chair's pardon. The Clerk read "Annual proportion of the expenses of Cape Spartel and Tangiers Light on the coast of Morocco," and then went on to the next thing.

Mr. OLMSTED. No; he did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the gentleman from Mississippi must not have heard him. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought I heard the gentleman read "bringing."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

three hundred and twenty-five dollars.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill, as follows:

EMERGENCIES ARISING IN THE DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE.

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $90,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The Secretary of State is authorized to apply in his discretion such portions of the appropriation for "Contingent expenses, foreign missions," for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, to the maintenance, driving, and operating such carriages or vehicles as may be necessary for the use of the Assistant Secretaries of the Department of State in the duties officially devolving upon them, and further to apply upon the order of the President such proportion of any fund which may properly be applied to the entertainment of visiting functionaries of foreign governments to such temporary hire of carriages as may be required for the use of such Assistant Secretaries in emergencies arising in connection with the necessary entertainment of such functionaries of foreign governments in the United States, or in such other emergencies as may require such expenditures to be made.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to make a point of order against the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman please call the Chair's attention to the line?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. To that part of line 5, page 11, after the word "seven," down to and including the word "them," in line 9 of the same page. The point of order includes the provision authorizing carriages and vehicles for Assistant Secretaries of the Department of State. I know that it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order upon all the paragraph after the word "necessary," in line 2 of page 11.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of the gentleman from Illinois will be reserved until that of the gentleman from Indiana is disposed of.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. A few years ago a law was passed prohibiting the use of public money for the purchase and maintenance of carriages and vehicles for assistants of the various Departments of the Government. I think the limitation expressly was for the maintenance of horses and carriages for the heads of Departments alone. My point of order simply includes that part of the paragraph that authorizes the expenditure of any appropriation carried in the bill for the purchase and maintenance of horses and vehicles for the use of Assistant Secretaries of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that this is existing law, and it has been enacted since the passage of the act to which the gentleman refers. Therefore it stands as the law to-day, and was passed in contravention of that law, to show that in the judgment of the legislative body it was not applied to the Department of State. And, Mr. Chairman, to go from the legal point to the merit of the case, very properly so. We all know the functions of the Department of State differ from those of any of the other Departments. They necessarily have to do with foreign representatives and foreigners and distinguished people who come here. It is necessary under the comity of nations that certain attentions and certain entertainments should be given to foreigners, the same as are extended by them to our representatives when abroad.

For this reason it is quite necessary that the Department of State should have these carriages, and particularly that their use should be extended to the assistant secretaries, because they are the officers who are generally assigned to extend these courtesies to the visiting representatives of foreign governments and to go around with them. That is the necessity of this, and both on the point of order and on the merits I submit that the point of order is not well taken

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania where the law is that authorizes the carriages and horses for the use of assistant secretaries of the Department of State? It is simply a provision carried in the annual diplomatic appropriation bill, is it not?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Yes; but under the rules of the House that has been held to be existing law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Under the rules of the House it has been held that it is not existing law, and in relation to the merits of the case I desire to say that a subsequent provision in the same paragraph authorizes the use of public funds in the employment of carriages and vehicles for the entertainment of foreign guests. The provision included in my point of order does not include that part of the paragraph that authorizes the employment of vehicles in the entertainment of foreign guests.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. In reply to that, I again assert that it is existing law. Further than that, it is necessary that these secretaries should have the carriages in attending to their duties. It is necessary in going about from one portion of Washington to another. This has been described as the city of magnificent distances, and we know how far places in this city are from one another. They have to come up to the Capitol, even the Secretary of State, and in the proper performance of their duties it is necessary that they should have the use of these carriages. That has been so through many years of experience. It is nothing new. It has been in the bill for years, and it is one of the recognized necessities for the efficient service of the State Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the item itself shows that it is not existing law, because it provides for the expenditure of part of the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and confines itself to that specific appropriation, indicating on its face that it is not existing law. It could not be existing law in the language itself in the bill. A similar item was in the appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, referring to the appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906. Now, it will be perfectly plain to everybody that an item providing for the expenditure of the appropriation for the current fiscal year is not existing law when confined to the current fiscal year, if it is desired to apply to the ensuing fiscal year. It is not only not existing law, but it is contrary to the provision that was put in the bill some years ago, over my protest, forbidding the use of carriages, and I can see no more excuse for providing carriages for the Assistant Secretaries of State, as is done under this item, than for providing carriages for other assistant secretaries. As far as I am personally concerned, I have never seen any objection to the Government providing carriages for many of the Government officials here in Washington, who are so ill paid; but I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the Chair sustain a point of order to the entire paragraph, after the second line?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. To all after the word "necessary," in line 2, page 11, all the remainder of that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL (WATER) BOUNDARY COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO.

To enable the Commission to continue its work under the treaties of 1884 and 1889, $15,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there has been an increase here of $10,000 to the International Water Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico. I should like to have some explanation from the chairman of the committee of the cause of that increase.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will reply to the gentleman by stating that this is a restoration, not an increase. The determination of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, delimiting the course of the Rio Grande River, has been proceeding under an agreement between this country and Mexico. The sum appropriated in some years has been as high as $67,000. Awaiting the confirmation of the treaty by the Senate last year, we reduced the amount from $15,000 to $5,000. This year we have the information that the bancos are being destroyed, and the boundary line is becoming uncertain on that account. The engineers have demanded the sum of $15,000 to carry on the preliminary work again, the same amount they had before.

This must be done, so that if the treaty is confirmed by the Senate this preliminary work that is necessary will be provided for. It is under the agreement that exists between Mexico and the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the terms of the treaty have been agreed upon.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. They have been agreed upon, but not confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the gentleman any idea what the life of this commission will be? When will it terminate its existence?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I can not tell the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What was it originally created to do, if the gentleman can tell me, so that I may arrive at a guess as to when it may come to an end?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It was created to study the flow of the waters of the Rio Grande, which are continually shifting. The treaty between Mexico and the United States in regard to the line between those countries was settled as the middle of the Rio Grande River. That is a shifting stream, like many shallow streams, and this commission was established so that if the river was going to change continually some definite boundary might be fixed independent of the bed of the river.

Mr. WILLIAMS. To prescribe a boundary which by mutual agreement would become the boundary regardless of the Rio Grande? Now, then, how many years has that work been going on?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. This commission was established under the protocol of May, 1896, for the equitable distribution of the waters of the Rio Grande, and it has been going on ever since, from time to time. It also involves a plan for damming the waters of the Rio Grande in its upper part and distributing them for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is the commission to do all that?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The Commission is investigating all that and is doing the preliminary work. It can be done together, as the gentleman can see very well, because they are studying the flow of the waters and the shifting of the bed of the Rio Grande River for a double purpose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The reason I asked the gentleman the question is this: We are creating a great many commissions, commissions of every description, and a commission seems to be endowed with perpetual life. A commission never dies unless Congress at some time gets angry and takes a cudgel and hits the commission over the head. I didn't know but that this Commission was of that sort, but from the explanation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania this Commission seems to have some little work to do.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The Commission is composed of United States engineers who do not draw any extra salary, and I will say to the gentleman that the treaty under consideration before the Senate will bring this thing to a termination.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is possible to finish this bill to-night, and I therefore move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the committee determined to rise, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill and had instructed him to report that it had come to no resolution thereon.

INTRODUCTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS.

Mr. LODGE. In accordance with the notice I gave day before yesterday, I call up the resolution to amend the rules.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

Mr. LODGE. Let the amendment in the nature of a substitute be read. That is all that is necessary.

The SECRETARY. A resolution to amend Rule VII of the Senate rules. Strike out the remainder of the resolution after the word "following," in line 2, and substitute——

Mr. CULBERSON. I should be glad to have the entire resolution read as it would stand if amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution as proposed to be amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Senators having petitions, memorials, pension bills, bills for the payment of private claims or for the correction of naval or military records to present after the morning hour may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their name and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions, memorials, and bills shall, with the approval of the presiding officer, be entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators presenting them as having been read twice and referred to the appropriate committees, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the Official Reporter of Debates for publication in the RECORD.

"It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have been unable to gather the full meaning of the resolution by hearing it read, and so far I have not been able to secure a copy of it. Is it to be merely optional with a Senator that he can introduce measures in this way or will there be after this time two ways by which bills, resolutions, etc., may be introduced?

Mr. LODGE. It permits a Senator after the morning hour to introduce pension bills, private claims bills, bills to amend military and naval records, and petitions, by merely handing them to the Secretary. It is permissive simply.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is merely permissive?

Mr. LODGE. Merely permissive.

Mr. CULBERSON. In addition to the present method?

Mr. LODGE. In addition to the present method.

Mr. BACON. And is limited to the particular class of matter specified?

Mr. LODGE. It is limited to the classes of routine business which are mentioned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Rules, which has been read.

Mr. BURROWS. I ask that it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the report from the Committee on Rules.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto the following:

"Senators having petitions, memorials, pension bills, bills for the payment of private claims or for the correction of naval or military records to present after the morning hour may deliver them to the Secretary of the Senate, indorsing upon them their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof, and said petitions, memorials, and bills shall, with the approval of the presiding officer, be entered on the Journal with the names of the Senators presenting them as having been read twice and referred to the appropriate committees, and the Secretary of the Senate shall furnish a transcript of such entries to the official reporter of debates for publication in the RECORD.

"It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor, for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Rules, inserting the matter which has been read, after the word "following," in line 2.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. KNOX addressed the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Pennsylvania after the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I rose to call up what is rather an important bill to dispose of at this time. I am obliged to leave on Monday next. It is the bill (H. R. 19432) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment. There is no need of reading it for the information of the Senate, because it is the ordinary omnibus bill for light-houses, light-ships, fog signals, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading may be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. MONEY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if the bill contains any legislation?

Mr. FRYE. It does not.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 18, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 10, to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty-five" and insert "forty;" and in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the clause read:

The limit of cost of tender for inspector, heretofore authorized, is hereby increased by the sum of $10,000, so as to make the total limit of cost $140,000 instead of $130,000, as heretofore authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 15, to insert:

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 7, line 7, I move to strike out "light-house inspector" and insert "engineer service."

The SECRETARY. In the proposed amendment, page 7, line 7, strike out the words "light-house inspector" and insert "engineer service;" so as to read:

A steam tender for the use of the engineer service of the twelfth light-house district, at a cost not to exceed $150,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 9, to insert:

A light and fog-signal station on Red Rock, upper part of San Francisco Bay, California, at a cost not to exceed $30,000.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senate to disagree to that amendment and insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the amendment of the committee will be disagreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Instead of the amendment on page 7, lines 10, 11, and 12, I move to insert:

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 12, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, after line 5——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not like to be disagreeable, but it does strike me that this is not exactly the proper way in which we should consider this bill. It practically amounts to the bill being considered and passed by the committee. The Senate certainly has no opportunity to know anything about the bill.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator please allow me one minute?

Mr. BACON. I will, with pleasure.

Mr. FRYE. There is not an amendment in the bill which has not already passed the Senate. The Senate passed about twenty-five or thirty of these bills, and when the pending bill came from the House of Representatives, the Committee on Commerce selected about half of those that were the most meritorious, those that certainly should be passed now, and offered them as amendments to this bill; and the Chief of the Light-House Board approved that selection. So all these items have passed the Senate before.

Mr. BACON. The latter part of the Senator's statement is something that I do not recognize the correctness of. It is something we hear frequently in the Senate. When any question is raised as to the propriety of any proposed legislation, we are referred to what meets with the approval or disapproval of some executive officer. I do not think that that is the proper criterion by which we should be guided as to whether or not a law should be passed or an appropriation made.

I make that remark generally, not particularly as to this measure, except so far as it may be properly included within the general objection. I do think, however, that it is a matter worthy of the attention not only of the Senate, but of Congress. We are drifting too much into the habit of legislating according to the wishes of the executive department. When I say the executive department I do not mean the President any more than I mean the lowest officer of the executive department.

But that is aside from what I was about to say. The Senator by his interruption to some extent anticipates the matter upon which I intended to say a word, that I thought some explanation was due to the Senate from the chairman of the committee as to these items. The Senator now makes the explanation, but in the absence of the performance of this very unpleasant duty by me we would not have had the explanation that these amendments are representative of the former action of the Senate in the passage of bills. That of course is an important piece of information for us, and relieves the matter of much of the ground of criticism that I made on the action of the Senate. With that information now given to the Senate I am content. I only regret that it was not given before objection was made by me.

But, Mr. President, this bill has never been read to the Senate. I am speaking now generally as to the propriety of certain methods of procedure in legislation. It seems to me that especially in matters of appropriations, where the large body of the Senate have not the opportunity to be informed and must rely largely upon committees, we should have the information given in the Senate by the committee, and we should no more legislate simply upon the judgment of a committee without explanation from the committee than Congress should legislate according to the wish or desire or the objection of executive officers.

Mr. President, I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Maine. I will suspend until Senators cease conversing with him.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia will kindly suspend. The Chair must appeal to Senators to refrain from interfering by audible conversation with the Senator occupying the floor.

Mr. BACON. I wanted to have the attention of the Senator from Maine. I was proceeding to say that I think when a bill is presented to the Senate we should proceed with some degree of orderly method to have the bill read and that the Senate should be informed of the propriety of the proposed legislation, and especially of a proposed appropriation, in order that we may have the benefit of the information upon which the committees act, and that we should not proceed without any information whatever to the passage of a bill, as we were proceeding in this case, without any Senator knowing the important fact, which has since been stated by the chairman of the committee, that these matters had previously been considered by the Senate in separate bills.

That is an important matter for us to know, and relieves us of much of the ground of the objection. But the time when I made the objection not only were we proceeding without the bill ever having been read, and without the important information which has since been given, but with important amendments being offered by the chairman, which have not been in print, which we could not hear from the desk, and had no opportunity to judge of whatever.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. It is extremely unpleasant to say it, but I think we ought to proceed in a different manner in these important matters of legislation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. If the Senator wishes to ask me a question.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Maine, not the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me, if that is what he wishes to ask. Does the Senator wish to ask it in my time?

Mr. LODGE. No; I will wait until the Senator has concluded.

Mr. BACON. I have not quite concluded what I have to say. I note two sections in this bill, aside from the matters of amendment, which carry more than a million dollars, and the entire bill carries about $3,000,000, as to the necessity and propriety of which expenditures no Senator here can possibly know anything, and as to the necessity and propriety of which they must rely entirely and exclusively upon the view of the committee, and unfortunately also upon the view of some executive officer. I understood the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] to inquire of the Senator from Maine whether there are any matters of legislation in the bill. I may have misunderstood the Senator from Maine, because there was great confusion in the Chamber at the time, but I understood him to say there was not. Yet I find on pages 8 and 9, sections 2 and 3, what appear to me to be quite important matters of legislation, especially section 3, which is more general than section 2.

But I will not anticipate the Senator. I simply desire to express the hope that when we get to that point we will have the opportunity of getting an explanation from the Senator as to the necessity and propriety of this proposed legislation. But I do think, Mr. President, that not only as to this bill, but as to other bills of importance, this habit should not prevail of asking unanimous consent that the reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that we then proceed in this hop, skip, and jump manner to take up amendments which we have had no opportunity to judge of whatever, and have the simple announcement made by the Chair in correspondence to the wish of the committee that the amendment is agreed to.

I think, Mr. President, we should pursue a different plan. We certainly have time at least to have the bill read in the hearing of the Senate; and while of course we all of us have a right and the opportunity to enforce that by an objection, at the same time we ought not to be put in the position of having to make an objection. There is ample time, it seems to me, for the consideration of these matters in an orderly manner without any undue consumption of time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had supposed that the bill was being read when the Senator from Georgia stopped it. But the question I wanted to ask the Senator from Maine is whether it is not true that every amendment proposed by the Senate to this bill represents a bill which was urged upon the Committee on Commerce by the Senators representing the State or region, and which passed the Senate after due report?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; and about a dozen more.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Maine had already stated the fact which the Senator from Massachusetts now inquires of him about.

Mr. LODGE. I desired to have it made as emphatic as possible, because it seems to me that we might as well abolish the Committee on Commerce if the Senate supposes that those of us who live in a distant part of the country—for instance, in New England—are expected to pass on the need of a light-ship on the coast of Oregon. We must trust to the committee to deal with those questions scattered all over the country. We can not undertake to pass on light-ships on the Lakes, in one part of the country, and a light-house somewhere else in another part of the country. They have to be presented to a committee, and the Committee on Commerce have done it, as they do all work, with the utmost thoroughness.

Mr. BACON. In reply to the criticism of the Senator from Massachusetts—I do not know whether the Senator heard what I had previously said or not, because there was great confusion in the Chamber at the time—I will say that the information which the chairman gave, after the suggestion made by me and about which the Senator from Massachusetts now makes inquiry, was stated by me to be important information which we theretofore had not had, and which was satisfactory information.

Mr. LODGE. I asked the question because from what the Senator from Georgia was saying I gathered that he had not heard the reply of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BACON. No; by no means. On the contrary, I had said that the Senator from Maine had now made a statement which was satisfactory, and which I regretted we had not had in the beginning. But the Senator from Massachusetts still insists upon emphasizing, as he says, what I had already sufficiently recognized as a proper course on the part of the Senator from Maine. I only desire that we shall proceed in an orderly method in the passage of bills, and that Senators may have information which may guide them in voting on the same, and especially in voting on appropriation bills.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the amendment moved by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce relative to the Superior pierhead range lights be again stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be again stated.

The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Eleventh light-house district," on page 6, after line 15, the committee reported to insert:

For removing the Superior pierhead range lights, Wisconsin, from the south pier to the north pier, Duluth Harbor, Lake Superior, Wisconsin, $28,000.

That is now amended by substituting the following:

Establishing the Superior pierhead range light on the south pier, Duluth Harbor, Lake Superior, Wisconsin, at a cost not to exceed $28,000.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to insert the word "For" before the word "establishing."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce made a report on this bill, giving the reasons for every amendment contained in it. I have been in the Senate for some time, and I have learned that it is much easier to get a bill through the Senate without opening up a discussion when no discussion is needed, simply for talk's sake, and I undertake always, with as little talk as possible, to pass through the Senate any bills which are reported from the Senate Committee on Commerce. I could have explained, as a matter of course, each one of those items if it had been necessary, but it was not necessary, because the Senate had already passed upon the whole of them. There is a report from the Committee on Commerce, which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. That is an important fact to state to the Senate—that the Senate had already passed upon these matters.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. For a question merely. I desire to ask if the Senator from Maine is informed—I have not had the opportunity of reading the report—as to how much this appropriation is increased over the House bill? I make it $1,183,000.

Mr. FRYE. The House bill appropriated $1,313,500. The House included in the bill items aggregating $329,000, included in bills which had been passed by the Senate, but did not include items aggregating $1,736,000, which had been appropriated in bills passed by the Senate. The total increase by the Senate committee has been $1,083,200; and the total amount of the bill is $2,819,200.

Mr. CULBERSON. I have not had the benefit of the report, but I ran over the figures here rapidly, and running them up I estimate that the Senate has increased the amount $1,183,000.

Mr. FRYE. The House bill, as I have stated, aggregated $1,313,500, and the Senate has increased that amount by $1,083,200, so that the total is now $2,819,200. Therefore the Senator is approximately correct in running up the figures.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to interrupt the Senator from Maine to ask why the committee did not include all the bills which the Senate passed?

Mr. FRYE. Because, in the opinion of the committee, the amount of $2,819,200 was about as much as ought to be appropriated this year for these purposes.

Mr. TELLER. The Senate seems to have had a different opinion, judging from the number of bills they have passed. It seems to me the Senate, and not the committee, ought to determine what should be the amount appropriated.

Mr. President, I do not mean to find any fault with the amount appropriated or with the class of appropriations contained in the bill. I only want to say that I believe there are a great many places on our coasts where we have not light-houses, where they should be placed; but it seems to me that the committee should either have adhered to the House bill or inserted all the bills which the Senate has passed as amendments to this bill.

Mr. FRYE. The committee instructed its chairman to take those which appear as amendments to this bill.

The next amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, on page 8, after line 5, to insert:

A steel steam light vessel, equipped with the latest improved light and fog signals, to be anchored upon Swiftsure Bank, off the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait, at a point at or near 13 miles north, 74° west, magnetic, from Cape Flattery, Washington, at a cost not to exceed $150,000.

Mr. FRYE. That is where the Valencia was wrecked a short time ago, with great loss of life.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, after line 11, to insert:

A light and fog-signal station on Cape Hinchinbrook, Hinchinbrook Island, Prince William Sound, Alaska, at a cost not to exceed $75,000.

Mr. FRYE. I said to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] that there was no general legislation in this bill. The legislation referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] in section 2 simply provides for draftsmen for making charts of the light vessels which are included in this bill; and section 3 is simply to prevent anybody or any corporation from establishing lights on their own account, because, as a matter of course, none but United States lights appear on the charts, and great confusion is sometimes caused by private lights being raised the existence of which there is nothing on any chart to indicate.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. FRYE. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Maine to the fact that section 3 prohibits municipalities, cities, and towns from erecting lights. * *

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. CULBERSON. That is general legislation, or it is additional legislation to that now on the statute books.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; it is legislation, but not general legislation. It is limited to the light-house business. It would not do to have a municipality, a corporation, or a private individual putting up lights. It would be misleading. It would lead ships into danger instead of keeping them in safety.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee, which has been stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the report of the committee may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate Report No. 3810, Fifty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 19432) to authorize additional aids to navigation in the Light-House Establishment, having considered the same, report it with an amendment, and as amended recommend its passage.

The bill as it came from the House authorized work to the amount of $1,313,500. Of this amount items aggregating $329,000 had been included in Senate bills which had passed the Senate, but received no action in the House. The aggregate of bills which have passed the Senate and were not included in the House bill is $1,736,000. Your committee has selected from these the following items, for which there seemed to be pressing necessity:

Light-ship, Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts	$115,000
Keeper's dwelling, Stonington Breakwater, Connecticut	6,000
Light and fog signal, New London Harbor, Connecticut	55,000
Light and fog signal, Greenville, N. J	75,000
Light and fog signal, Horseshoe Shoal, Delaware River	75,000
Light and fog signal, Joe Flogger Shoal, Delaware River	75,000
Ambrose channel, New York Harbor	94,200
Light and fog signal, Red Rock, San Francisco Bay	30,000
Tender for light-house inspector, California	150,000
Light vessel, Juan de Fuca Strait, Washington	150,000
Light-house tender, Hawaiian and Pacific islands	150,000
Light and fog signal, Cape Hinchinbrook, Alaska	75,000
Removing pierhead lights, Superior, Wis	28,000
Increased limit of cost, tender sixth district	5,000
Making a total increase of	1,083,200
And a grand total, as reported to the Senate	2,819,200

The limit of cost of the light-ship at Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts, is increased from $90,000 in the Senate bill to $115,000, as the committee is assured by the Light-House Board that the increased cost of materials and labor necessitates the change. For the same reason the limit of cost of the tender for the light-house inspector of the twelfth district is increased from $130,000 to $150,000.

The apparent increase of $5,000 in limit of cost of tender for inspector in the sixth district over the amount named in the House bill is to correct typographical errors.

Following are extracts from Senate reports on the Senate bills covering items inserted in the bill under consideration by your committee:

NEW LIGHT-SHIP AT ENTRANCE TO BUZZARDS BAY, MASSACHUSETTS.

Following is an extract from the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for 1905.

"Hen and Chickens light vessel, No. 2, entrance to Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts.—This wooden ship was built in 1849; she is of about 120 tons burden, new measurement, and has a bell for a fog signal. On September 20, 1904, she was relieved by light vessel No. 9 and brought into New Bedford, where she was repaired. She resumed her station on October 3, when relief light vessel No. 9 was withdrawn. On February 23, 1905, she was dragged by ice about a half mile from her station, but was replaced by the tender Azalea on the following day. During the year she received needed fitments, supplies, and repairs.

"The following is a copy of a letter, dated February 20, 1905, from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"'This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter of February 14, 1905, from your committee, inclosing a copy of H. R. No. 18966, "To construct and place a new light-ship at the entrance of Buzzards Bay, Massachusetts, to replace the one now known as the Hen and Chickens light-ship," on which suggestions are asked touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

"'In reply this Department begs leave to state that the Light-House Board, to which the matter was referred for examination and report, states that the present light vessel at that station is small and old and is practically incapable of being fitted with the boiler and machinery needed to operate a steam fog signal.

"'This Department states that the Board recommends the passage of the bill in question, but suggests, and in that suggestion this Department concurs, that $90,000 is sufficient with which to build a new light vessel, with the modern improvements, including a steam fog signal.'"

KEEPER'S DWELLING AT STONINGTON BREAKWATER, CONNECTICUT.

The following is an extract from the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for 1905:

"Stonington Breakwater, Connecticut.—The following recommendation made in the Board's last three annual reports is renewed:

"The following is a copy of a letter dated December 7, 1901, from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

"'This Department has the honor to state, at the instance of the Light-House Board, that a recent inspection of the Stonington Breakwater, Connecticut, light station has shown that its keeper's dwelling is in a condition so unhealthful as to menace the lives of its occupants, there having been more or less sickness in every family residing therein during the past twenty years. The house is very old, no work has been done on it for a long time, it is past economical repair, and it is in such a condition of deterioration as to make it almost uninhabitable. The Board at its session on November 4, 1901, considered the question of remedying this insanitary condition, and concluded that the dwelling is past economical repair and that the erection of a small modern dwelling for the keeper is therefore an urgent necessity. It is estimated that such a dwelling can be built for a cost not exceeding $6,000.

"'This Department concurs with the Light-House Board as to the necessity for providing this keeper's dwelling at the Stonington Breakwater, Connecticut, light station, and recommends that an appropriation of $6,000 be made therefor.'"

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL STATION, NEW LONDON HARBOR.

The item has the approval of the Commerce and Labor Department, as will appear by the following letter, the amendment suggested therein being required to the title only:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, January 12, 1906.

SIR: Referring to the committee's letter of January 7, 1906, inclosing for the consideration of this Department and for report thereon a copy of Senate bill No. 2771, "to establish a light and fog-signal station on Southwest Ledge, entrance to New London Harbor, Connecticut," I have the honor to invite your attention to the following statement, made on page 49 of the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for 1905, wherein authority is asked to establish a light and fog-signal station on Southwest Ledge, Connecticut, instead of on Black Ledge, as previously authorized, and permission is asked to use the $60,000 appropriated for a light-house on Black Ledge with an additional $55,000 for the construction of a light and fog-signal station on Southwest Ledge, Long Island Sound, Connecticut:

"—. Black Ledge light and fog-signal station, Connecticut.—The act approved on April 28, 1904, appropriated $60,000 for establishing a light and fog signal at or near Black Ledge entrance to New London Harbor, Connecticut. The proper location for this station is on Southwest Ledge, about one-fourth mile west of Black Ledge. A light and fog signal on Black Ledge would still leave Southwest Ledge and Frank Ledge as dangerous obstructions, while with the light and fog signal on Southwest Ledge the channel to the westward leading into New London Harbor would be free and unobstructed. The estimate of $60,000 was for the Black Ledge site, and to change the site to Southwest Ledge will necessitate an increase of $55,000 in the above figures on account of the difficult foundation. As there might be some question as to whether the term "at or near" in the original act would permit of occupying a site one-fourth of a mile away and having a distinctive name of its own, the Board recommends that it be authorized to use the $60,000 appropriated for building a light-house and fog signal at Black Rock toward building a light-house and fog signal at or near Southwest Ledge, and it also recommends that in addition thereto a further appropriation of $55,000 be made for this purpose and that the Board be authorized to expend not exceeding $115,000 in the establishment of a light and fog signal at or near Southwest Ledge."

This appropriation is also recommended on page 202 of the current Book of Estimates.

These views of the Light-House Board meet with the approval of this Department, and it is therefore recommended that this bill be passed, after it is so amended as to provide for the establishment of the light and fog-signal station "at or near" Southwest Ledge, Connecticut, instead of "on" Southwest Ledge, as stated in the bill.

Respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

LIGHT AND FOG SIGNAL IN NEW YORK BAY, NEAR GREENVILLE, N. J.

The item has the approval of the Department of Commerce and Labor, as will appear by the following letter of the Secretary in reference to a House bill identical in terms:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, March 13, 1906.

CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE,
House of Representatives.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the committee's letter of March 7, 1906, inclosing, for consideration and report thereon, a copy of H. R. 16127, "To establish a light and fog signal in New York Bay at the entrance to the dredged channel at Greenville, N. J.," at a cost not to exceed $75,000 in all.

In reply this Department begs to state that the docks in the vicinity of the channel dredged off Greenville, N. J., are used for the transfer of freight from New England and Long Island points. They are also used in the lighterage delivery for exporting steel products, the total movement now amounting to about 150 tows daily. A stake boat has been moored here by private parties to mark the entrance to the dredged cut, but it is stated that it is found to be difficult, if not almost impossible, to maintain it in position, and consequently it does not afford the desired protection. The amount named in the bill seems to be sufficient for the purpose indicated.

For these reasons the Light-House Board recommends, and in that recommendation this Department concurs, the passage of the bill in question.

Respectfully, V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

LIGHTS, HORSESHOE AND JOE FLOGGER SHOALS, DELAWARE RIVER.

Following is an extract from the last annual report of the Light-House Board:

"The Board now, after further but not exhaustive study of the subject, recommends that specified aids to navigation be authorized at the following-named places, in the order named, and appropriations be made for the establishment of them on the basis of the amounts set opposite to each name, viz:

Light-house and fog signal on Brown Shoal	$80,000
Light-house and fog signal on Miah Maul Shoal	75,000
Light-house and fog signal on Elbow of Cross Ledge	75,000
Light-house and fog signal on Joe Flogger Shoal	75,000
Light-house and fog signal on Arnolds Point Shoal	85,000
Light-house and fog signal on Goose Island Flats	85,000
Range lights on Old Mans Point	40,000
Range lights on Seventeen-Foot Knoll and Marcus Hook	70,000
Light-house and fog signal on Horseshoe Shoal	50,000
Total	635,000

The two items inserted by the Senate committee were especially urged by the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange through its secretary.

REMOVING PIERHEAD LIGHTS, SUPERIOR, WIS.

This item was recommended by the Light-House Board as of pressing necessity. Following is an extract from their annual report:

"It is proposed that the lights of this range be changed from the south pier to the north pier, as the light-house depot is to be located on the south end of Minnesota Point, which is on the north side of Superior entry. It is estimated that the cost of moving and reestablishing this range will be as follows:

Rebuilding front and rear structures	$11,500
Two fourth-order flash lenses	1,600
Rebuilding fog-signal house and repairing and installing machinery	5,500
Contingencies	1,400
	20,000
Transferring light to north pier to be added for keepers' double dwelling and oil house	8,000
Total	28,000

"The Board recommends that an appropriation of $28,000 be made therefor."

The following is a copy of a letter, dated December 10, 1904, from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the Secretary of the Treasury:

"The lights on the docks and in the streets of the town of East Superior, Douglas County, Wis., back of Superior Entrance, are confusing to mariners. Some change is needed which will render the range lights of the harbor more conspicuous and more easily distinguished by vessels desiring to enter from Lake Superior.

"The War Department, in the progress of river and harbor improvements, is now engaged in building a concrete pier to the south of the old timber pier upon which the fog signal and range lights now stand. After the construction of the concrete pier it is proposed to remove the crib pier, and this will of itself compel the removal of the present structures.

"It is proposed to replace the present lights with two fixed fourth-order white lights varied by flashes, which will overcome the objection to the present lights.

"It is estimated that it will cost $20,000 to reconstruct the range lights and fog-signal house on the permanent concrete pier now being built and for the changing of the lens apparatus of both beacons, and it is recommended by the Light-House Board, and in this recommendation this Department concurs, that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor."

AMBROSE CHANNEL, NEW YORK HARBOR.

The items inserted by the Senate committee were recommended by the Light-House Board as of urgent necessity in view of the approaching completion of this important channel.

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., RED ROCK, SAN FRANCISCO BAY, CALIFORNIA.

The following is a copy of a letter, dated December 24, 1904, from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to the Senate Committee on Commerce:

"This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter, dated December 17, 1904, from your committee inclosing a copy of Senate bill 6182, 'To establish a light-house and fog signal on Red Rock, upper part of San Francisco Bay, California,' on which suggestions are asked touching the merits of the bill and the propriety of its passage.

"In reply this Department begs leave to state that the Light-House Board, to whom the matter was referred, reports that in its last annual report it recommended that an appropriation of $30,000 be made for this purpose, and that it is still of opinion that this appropriation should be made. It is also recommended on page 255 of the Book of Estimates for 1906.

"The following is an extract from pages 158–159 of the Board's annual report for 1904:

"'This rock is an island about 169 feet high and contains about 7½ acres. It stands near the eastern shore of the bay, 9½ miles above Market street, San Francisco, and is passed close to by vessels bound for Port Costa, Benicia, Mare Island, and the rivers emptying into Suisun Bay. It is believed that with the establishment of a light at Southampton Shoal, Red Rock would be a better place than Quarry Point for a light and fog signal. With this station vessels bound up the bay could make Southampton Shoal, giving Quarry Point, Angel Island, a wide berth, and from thence shape their course to Red Rock, on either side of which they could pass. This rock, or island, formerly known as Molate Island, is a military reservation, but does not enter into the adopted project for the defenses of San Francisco, and hence no difficulty is expected in obtaining authority to occupy it for light-house purposes. It is estimated that the cost of a light and fog-signal station at Red Rock will be $30,000, and the Board recommends that an appropriation for that amount be made therefor.'

"This Department concurs in the recommendation of the Light-House Board in this case."

TENDER FOR TWELFTH LIGHT-HOUSE DISTRICT.

Following is an extract from the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for 1905:

"New tender for the use of the light-house inspector.—The twelfth light-house district includes the whole coast line of California from Cape Orford to the Mexican line, including 56 light-houses, 3 light vessels, 107 buoys, and 30 fog signals. Owing to the extent of coast line and the increase of work required of the light-house tender Madroño, another tender is urgently needed for the use of the inspector. The work is now too much for one steamer. There will be an increase in the number of light stations, and also one new light vessel. The inspector is now unable to keep the work up to date, as it should be done. Buoys get adrift, and it is some time before they can be replaced. At several stations supplies are landed on the beach, and this can only be done when the weather is good. Often the tender is obliged to wait several days before she can make a landing, and sometimes she is obliged to leave the vicinity without landing, thus causing delay and making another trip or two necessary before her work is completed. Coaling the San Francisco light vessel is also uncertain work. This takes three or more days, not counting the time consumed in bagging coal and taking it on board the tender. Now that the light vessel for Blunts Reef is established, this adds to the duties of the tender, as the light vessel is stationed 195 miles from San Francisco, and the weather is always uncertain in that vicinity.

"Many inspectors have undergone severe experiences on their northern trips; arriving off St. George Reef light-house, lying there for days waiting opportunity to land, and leaving without landing, and also being unsuccessful in landing at Crescent City, as the conditions there are about as bad as at St. George Reef in rough weather. In the winter these northern trips are liable to be unsuccessful, and when so large expense is incurred without results. If a second tender were allowed, the inspector could keep her at Eureka in the winter and have her attend the northern part of the district, taking advantage of good spells of weather to run out and do the work. This can not be done from San Francisco, as the northern stations are too remote. The inspector might leave San Francisco under the most favorable circumstances of weather and sea, but on reaching the northern light stations the conditions might be and probably would be different. The inspector could now keep two tenders at work almost constantly. And as more aids to navigation are being added an additional tender will before long be almost absolutely necessary. The light vessel now stationed off Cape Mendocino could be more readily supplied in winter by a tender from Eureka. The Light-House Board is of opinion that the light-houses, the light vessels, the fog signals, and the buoys in the twelfth light-house district can not be kept in proper condition—such condition as is required for the safety of commerce and navigation—without the aid of another light-house tender. It is estimated that such a tender can be provided for $130,000, and the Board recommends that an appropriation of this amount be made therefor."

As stated heretofore a more recent recommendation of the Board calls for an increase of the above limit to $150,000.

LIGHT-SHIP OFF ENTRANCE TO STRAITS OF JUAN DE FUCA.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, May 5, 1906.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of the committee's letter dated May 3, 1906, inclosing for consideration and report thereon a copy of Senate bill 6003, "To construct and place a steel light-ship on 'Forty-Fathom Bank,' so called, off the entrance to the Straits of Juan de Fuca."

This bill meets with the qualified approval of this Department, but it recommends that it be amended so as to stand as follows:

"A bill to construct and place a steel light vessel on Swiftsure Bank, so called, off the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait.

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have constructed and anchored upon Swiftsure Bank, off the entrance to Juan de Fuca Strait, at a point at or near 13 miles north, 74 degrees west, magnetic, from Cape Flattery, a steel steam light vessel equipped with the latest improved light and fog signals, at a cost not to exceed $150,000."

Swiftsure Bank is better known under that name than under the name of Forty-Fathom Bank, and it is to be so noted on the Coast and Geodetic Survey charts. Juan de Fuca Strait is the proper and legal name for this strait, rather than the Straits of Juan de Fuca. The location of this light vessel at or near a point 13 miles north, 74° west, magnetic, from Cape Flattery, instead of 14 miles from Cape Flattery north, 60° west, magnetic, as provided in the bill, will, in the opinion of the Light-House Board, afford more protection to navigation than at the point named in the bill. The amount provided in the bill, $175,000, is thought to be in excess of what it will cost to build such a light vessel, and $150,000 is deemed to be sufficient for this purpose.

The Board further states that as it can use for this light vessel the plans recently completed for another vessel, no provision need be made in the appropriation bill, as is usual, for the employment of draftsmen to make her plans. But appropriation should be made for the full amount of the cost of the light vessel—$150,000—as it is expected that she can be built within a year, or maybe ten months from the time the contract papers are signed.

Respectfully,

LAWRENCE O. MURRAY,
Assistant Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

On February 7, 1906, a commission, consisting of Lawrence O. Murray, Assistant Secretary of Commerce and Labor, Herbert Knox Smith, Deputy Commissioner of Corporations, and Capt. William T. Burwell, United States Navy, was appointed by the President to investigate the circumstances attending the wreck of the steamer Valencia, on the southwest coast of Vancouver Island, on January 22, 1906, when 136 persons perished.

This commission, after thorough examination, made its report to the President April 14, 1906, concluding with certain recommendations. The following extract relates to the establishing of a light-ship such as is provided for in the bill under consideration:

"(3) There should be established a light-ship to be anchored on the so-called 'Forty-Fathom Bank' off the entrance to the Straits, at a point about 14 miles from Cape Flattery, north 60° west, magnetic. The light should be of the first order, with corresponding fog signal."

The following statement, signed by two members of the commission, not having been presented to the third for lack of time, was received by the committe on the day of its date. It is an amplification of the reasons given in the printed report of the commission:

"As members of the Federal commission on the wreck of the Valencia, we strongly urge the establishment of a light-ship on the Swiftsure Bank (Forty-Fathom Bank) at the entrance of the Straits of Juan de Fuca and Puget Sound, for the following reasons:

"(1) Conformation of the coast.—It will be observed from the chart that all vessels approaching this entrance, whether coming from up the coast or from the Orient (except those coming down from the north) must head directly toward the shore of Vancouver Island until they get within from 12 to 25 miles thereof, and must then make a decided turn to the eastward to enter the straits. The entrance to the straits is 12 miles wide. It thus appears that substantially all vessels coming in here must correctly locate this 12-mile entrance and make this turn within a comparatively short space or else go ashore on Vancouver Island. The coast conformation, therefore, makes this spot one of peculiar danger.

"(2) Currents.—There exist in this locality varying currents of great force and generally little-known direction which constitute a peculiar danger to navigation. The so-called 'Davidson inshore current' is an occasional phenomenon running northward at from 1 to 3 knots an hour along the coast of Oregon and Washington and the coast of Vancouver, its existence and force depending considerably upon the winds, and being peculiarly incalculable because it may be governed by winds far out at sea and totally different from the winds at the location where a given vessel may be. Sometimes this current disappears entirely, and even at times goes in an opposite direction.

"It is further complicated by the strong tides flowing in and out of the entrance of these straits where the rise and fall of the tide is about 8 feet. It was primarily due to a northward current of this sort that the Valencia went ashore. The log of the Valencia when she went ashore gave a distance run from San Francisco which would have placed her at about opposite Cape Flattery, although she was actually 25 miles north of that point, due to this current, which the log, of course, could not register. Prof. George Davidson, of San Francisco, for whom this current is named, and who is probably one of the highest experts on Pacific coast currents, stated emphatically that he nevertheless knew very little about this current, and that its force and direction were largely unknown.

"(3) Weather.—This locality is peculiarly subject to fog and haze. Such conditions, sufficient practically to obscure the lights, obtain throughout at least half the year at different times.

"A further very peculiar fact, which bears strongly on the need of a light-ship on the Swiftsure Bank, was brought out in the investigation of the Valencia matter, as follows: It will be observed that at the jaws of the straits, so called, are the two lights, Cape Flattery on the south and Carmanah due north, 12 miles away on Vancouver. These are both powerful, first-order lights, visible, in clear weather, each 19 miles. The lenses of each are over 150 feet above the water. On the night of the wreck, it appears from the log book of Carmanah light and from the testimony of the light keepers on Cape Flattery, that from 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, long before the Valencia came up to the entrance, until 7 o'clock Tuesday morning, seven hours after she struck, there was absolutely no haze or fog in the vicinity of either of these two lights. Neither light had its fog signal going during this period, and each light was plainly visible to the other all that night; yet the Valencia, whose approximate course is shown on the chart submitted herewith, must have passed within 12 miles of both of these lights, well within the radius of each of them. Her officers were anxiously looking for the lights, and yet they got no view of either light.

"In other words, it is clear that while the only two lights which guard the entrance, Flattery and Carmanah, were in absolutely clear weather, there was an offshore bank of haze or fog sufficiently near shore to be in the normal course of a vessel and sufficiently offshore to be unseen by the keepers of these lights. This is a condition of affairs which actually occurred with the Valencia and which frequently occurs at various seasons of the year.

"Now, if there were a light-ship on the Swiftsure Bank approximately at the point indicated on the said chart, this light-ship would not only add another point of light to be seen by incoming vessels, but it would be sufficiently offshore to be in the region of haze and fog and under the same weather conditions as incoming vessels, so that if a vessel approaching this entrance were in a fog, the light-ship would also be in a fog and would be sounding her fog signal.

"In general, also, it is perfectly obvious from the coast formation that a light-ship at the point indicated would be in the strategic position of a signal which could be picked up by vessels coming from any possible direction—either from the Orient, from down the coast, or from up the coast of Vancouver—and thus the triangle formed by the three lights, Flattery, Carmanah, and Swiftsure Bank, would cover substantially among them the dangerous area at the entrance to the straits.

"In general, also, it should be further noted that there are few harbors on the Pacific coast as compared with the number on the Atlantic; that the great Pacific coast trade must necessarily, therefore, concentrate on two or three important entrances, and that this entrance to Puget Sound is the most important of all on that coast in the tonnage of traffic that goes through it, and that the Government would be justified in very considerable expenditure for the purpose of making this entrance as safe as may be.

LIGHT-HOUSE SERVICE, HAWAIIAN AND PACIFIC WATERS.

Following is an extract from the Annual Report of the Light-House Board for 1905:

"Tender for Hawaiian and the Pacific island waters.—When the Light-House Board by Executive order was charged with the care and maintenance of the Hawaiian light-house establishment it placed its aids to navigation within the limits of the twelfth light-house district, which is the nearest light-house district, and under the charge of the inspector and engineer of the twelfth light-house district, at San Francisco, Cal. As these officers are stationed some 2,000 miles from Hawaii, an officer of the Navy was assigned to duty as assistant to the inspector of the twelfth light-house district, with headquarters at Honolulu, and an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, was asigned to act as assistant to the engineer of the twelfth light-house district, also with quarters at Honolulu, and on them devolved, under their superior officers, the maintenance and repair of the old Hawaiian aids to navigation and the construction of such new ones as might be ordered.

"The naval officer assigned to aid the light-house inspector happened to be the officer in command of the U. S. S. Iroquois; hence he had an opportunity, when his naval duties would permit, to visit the Hawaiian aids to navigation in the Iroquois. The engineer officer in charge of the construction and repair of these aids to navigation has no means of conveyance, other than those open to the general public, to visit the lights under his charge; and as those means are inadequate, it is difficult and expensive for those officers to do the work assigned to them. There is no vessel belonging to the Light-House Establishment stationed at Honolulu. It is not possible to send the one light-house tender assigned to the twelfth light-house district to do the work in Hawaiian waters, as she is now not quite able to keep the immense light-house work on the California coast up to a proper state of efficiency. The U. S. S. Iroquois has been used, by permission of the Navy Department, to take the assistant to the inspector on his tours of inspection. This vessel is not fitted for buoy work, nor has she enough storage capacity for carrying stores to the different stations. It is now necessary to make many changes in lights and buoys, and a light-house tender is needed to carry material and workmen to the sites where the material is to be used.

"The assistant to the inspector has been obliged, when traveling to a station by coasting vessels, to return from each station to Honolulu to start for the next station. This causes expense and delay, for coasting steamers will not go out of their prescribed routes of travel to enable the inspector to place or remove buoys. At present he is obliged to use makeshifts for all the work he is doing in Hawaiian buoyage. The services of the Iroquois can not always be had when required. It is necessary to have the use of a vessel directly under the Light-House Establishment, without having to consult the wishes of another Department of the Government, to do buoy work with the promptness that is requisite for the safety of commerce and navigation. One of the first requisites of the light-house service of the Hawaiian Islands is a steam light-house tender with which to establish and care for the numerous floating aids to navigation that the commerce of the islands demands, and also to transport the materials and supplies necessary to the construction and maintenance of such of these aids as are located on land.

"Since the foregoing was written the President has, through the Department of Commerce and Labor, placed the aids to navigation in the Midway Islands and the American Samoan Islands under the charge of the Light-House Board. These islands are hundreds of miles from each other and thousands of miles from the light-house inspector and light-house engineer who have charge of them and are stationed at San Francisco, Cal. The Board is now without any means of its own for communicating with these islands, and on this account more urgently asks that provision be made for building a light-house tender with which to perform these new duties recently devolved upon it by Executive order. It is estimated that a suitable steam tender can be built for $150,000, and the Light-House Board recommends that an appropriation of that amount be made therefor."

LIGHT-HOUSE, ETC., CAPE HINCHINBROOK, ALASKA.

The item has the approval of the Commerce and Labor Department, as will appear by the letters of the Secretary, which are annexed, together with other correspondence relating to the matter.

The following statement of facts submitted to the committee sufficiently indicate the necessity of the proposed aids to navigation:

"Except for the Sitka Harbor beacon, which is partially obscured by Kruzof Island, lying to the northwest of the harbor, there are no lights of any description visible from the open sea along the entire line of coast from the international boundary to Unimak Pass, in the Aleutian Islands, and none beyond that point. In Unimak Pass are two lights—on Scotch Cap and on Cape Sarichef.

"Cape Hinchinbrook, on Hinchinbrook Island, lying across the mouth of Prince William Sound, in the northwesterly part of the Gulf of Alaska, is, with the possible exception of Middleton Island, some distance out to sea, the first land sighted by vessels making the 'outside' run from San Francisco and Seattle to Valdez and other points on the sound.

"The ocean traffic past this cape is now very large and is constantly increasing. All boats following the inside passage from Seattle to the west leave the Alexander Archipelago at Sitka or through Cross Sound and run along the coast past Ocean Cape and Cape St. Elias, entering Prince William Sound by Cape Hinchinbrook, as do the direct boats. There are six or more large steamers in the regular Valdez service. The merchandise carried is consigned not only to Valdez, Ellamar, and other settlements reached directly by these steamers, but to Latouche Island, Seward—the new railroad town on Resurrection Bay—Kodiak, and ports to the south as far as Dutch Harbor. Shipments to points on Cook Inlet are also made by way of Valdez, which is an important junction point.

"All this traffic is through Hinchinbrook channel, a narrow pass not more than 5 miles in width, with a precipitous headland on one side and a dangerous group of rocks—the Seal Rocks—on the other. This channel is literally the key to the entire commerce of the Gulf of Alaska.

"Some point on Prince William Sound will undoubtedly be made the terminus shortly of a trans-Alaskan railroad. Two such railroads are now projected and under construction from Valdez and another has been surveyed from the upper end of Cordova Bay, an arm of the sound.

"Furthermore, Valdez, the terminus of the military trail across Alaska, is the dispatch point during the winter months for all mail to the interior, to Nome, St. Michael, Tanana, Fairbanks, Eagle, and other settlements west of Circle. Four thousand four hundred pounds will be sent in from Valdez each month during the present season, in addition to mail intended for Valdez and the other towns served throughout the year.

"Prince William Sound is open and free from ice during all months of the year. There is no possibility that a light-house and fog signal once established at Cape Hinchinbrook will become useless by reason of a falling off in traffic past that point, and the great increase in such traffic, inevitable because of extensive mining and railroad operations in the region tributary to Valdez, and even now apparent, makes the establishment of Hinchinbrook light an urgent necessity."

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, February 1, 1906.

SIR: Referring to the committee's letter of January 10, 1906, inclosing, for the consideration of this Department and for report thereon, a copy of Senate bill No. 2703, to establish a light-house and fog signal on Cape Hinchinbrook, Hinchinbrook Island, Prince William Sound, in the district of Alaska, I have the honor to state that upon investigation by the Light-House Board it is found that the commerce entering Prince William Sound is already considerable, and is rapidly increasing with the development of the adjacent and interior country, and that a light station on this cape would be a desirable aid to navigation.

In view of this report of the Light-House Board, this Department has the honor to recommend the passage of the bill in question.

Respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, December 26, 1905.

SIR: This Department has the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of December 21, 1905, asking to be advised as to what reports have been received from the officers of the thirteenth light-house district upon the subject of a light and fog-signal station on Cape Hinchinbrook, near the entrance to Prince William Sound, Alaska, and also what amount the said district officers estimated as needed for its construction.

In reply I inclose herewith a copy of a report to the Light-House Board, dated May 26, 1902, from the inspector and the engineer of the thirteenth light-house district, and its inclosure, recommending that Cape Hinchinbrook be included in the list of proposed sites for light and fog-signal stations in Alaska, and estimating that the cost of the station would not be less than $75,000.

In accordance with this joint report, the Light-House Board in its Annual Report for 1902 named Cape Hinchinbrook as one of the places where it was proposed to establish lights. Congress made several lump-sum appropriations for the erection of such of these light-houses as the Board should deem of most importance; but, as the money thus appropriated has been practically expended in the establishment of these lights, the building of a station at Cape Hinchinbrook has been delayed.

The Board has great difficulty now in properly looking after Alaskan lights, as they are all included in the thirteenth light-house district, with headquarters at Portland, Oreg.

Respectfully,

V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

Hon. HENRY E. BURNHAM,
United States Senate.

LIGHT-HOUSE ESTABLISHMENT,
OFFICE OF ENGINEER THIRTEENTH DISTRICT,
Portland, Oreg., May 26, 1902.

SIRS: In compliance with Board's letter of May 5, 1902, No. 274, referring to establishment of light and fog signal on Cape Hinchinbrook, we have the honor to submit the following report:

Under date of July 9, 1901, report was submitted by us on establishment of a station in this same locality. In that report we stated as follows: "We would therefore recommend that when the commerce of Valdez increases to such an extent as to justify the expenditure, a light and fog-signal station be established as requested."

Later information seems to indicate that commerce to and from Valdez is growing, and that development of mines on Copper River is likely to receive a large impetus in the next few years.

It is therefore recommended that Cape Hinchinbrook be included in proposed sites for light and fog-signal stations in Alaska.

The equipment should comprise a 10-inch steam or air whistle, a second-order light visible for 15 miles, and accommodations for three keepers.

From the inclosed copy of letter from J. C. Downing, master U. S. Army transport Seward, it would seem that the physical characteristics of the site are not the most favorable for the purpose, and it is recommended that the station be built for men unaccompanied by families.

It is not safe to estimate the cost of such a station at less than $75,000.

Respectfully, yours,

WM. P. DAY,
Commander, United States Navy,
Inspector Thirteenth Light-House District.
W. C. LANGFITT,
Captain, Corps of Engineers, United States Army,
Engineer Thirteenth Light-House District.

The LIGHT-HOUSE BOARD,
Washington, D. C.

QUARTERMASTER'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Seattle, Wash., May 22, 1902.

SIR: Referring to your communication of May 19, in my judgment the contemplated light-house and fog signal should be built on Cape Hinchinbrook proper. The elevation is about 75 to 100 feet on the point, the land rising abruptly some 2,500 feet. There is practically no level land in the immediate vicinity. Anchorage can be obtained in smooth weather in 15 to 30 fathoms off the cape. Port Etches, 8 miles distant, is a safe harbor. A rock awash at low water lies about 2 miles east of the cape and 1 mile offshore, with deep water inside. Building material can be landed with no difficulty in smooth weather.

Respectfully, yours,

J. C. DOWNING,
Captain U. S. Army Transport Seward.

Capt. W. C. LANGFITT,
Engineer Thirteenth Light-House District, Portland, Oreg.

MARY J. BLAISDELL.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask that an order be made to withdraw from the files of the Senate the papers of Mary J. Blaisdell accompanying Senate bill 5218, in order that they may be sent to the House of Representatives.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, under the new rule, which was adopted this morning, I ask if that request is in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is in order. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

The order was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, That the papers of Mary J. Blaisdell (S. 5218) be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin, Mr. CRUMPACKER, and Mr. ZENOR managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LITTAUER, Mr. BINGHAM, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 17507) to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations, in Oklahoma Territory; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

IMMUNITY OF WITNESSES.

Mr. KNOX. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 5769.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 5769) to declare the true intent and meaning of parts of the act entitled "An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission," and so forth, approved February 11, 1893, and an act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and an act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1903.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, may I inquire from what committee that bill comes?

Mr. KNOX. From the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DANIEL. May I suggest an amendment to the bill?

Mr. TELLER. I dislike to criticise the Committee on the Judiciary, but it seems to me it is hardly proper to proceed with the consideration of a bill in this way.

Mr. BACON. The Senator has not heard the bill read as the committee proposes to amend it.

Mr. TELLER. I have heard something read.

Mr. BACON. That is the original bill as introduced. The Secretary has not yet read the very material amendments reported by the committee. The Senator has not heard those.

Mr. TELLER. I supposed that I had heard all of the bill. If the committee has reported amendments to it, perhaps they have avoided what I think must be an objection to it on the part of every lawyer here.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the amendments reported by the committee stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments which have been reported.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on the Judiciary reported to amend that bill, on page 2, line 3, after the first word "That," by striking out "agreeably to the true intent and meaning of" and inserting the word "under;" and in line 17, after the word "shall," by striking out "be extended under the said provisions of said acts" and inserting the word "extend;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That under the immunity provisions in the act entitled "An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission," and so forth, approved February 11, 1893, in section 6 of the act entitled "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903, and in the act entitled "An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States," approved February 19, 1903, and in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes," approved February 25, 1903, immunity shall extend only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpœna, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill which has just been read?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, which have been stated.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am not going to make any objection to the bill if it is so amended as that it is now a reasonable bill. I am willing that it shall pass; but I am not willing that Congress shall attempt to declare what a law means.

Mr. SPOONER. That is stricken out.

Mr. TELLER. That, I understand, is stricken out. It is something of a modern notion that we may construe what a law means and how the courts should construe it. If the courts have construed an act improperly, we may pass a law that will make clear what we intend. But, knowing the legal ability of the members of the committee who reported the bill, I do not make any special objection to its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to hear the amendments again read.

The Secretary again read the amendments.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I only desire to say that the objection which was first suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] suggested itself to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the bill has been amended so as to relieve it of the objection suggested by the Senator—the very objection which he has presented. So that, instead of declaring the Congressional meaning of an act which has been passed, this bill proposes to enact an amendment of the existing law operative hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. Has the bill been passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has not been passed. It has been reported from the Committee of the Whole to the Senate, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole have been concurred in.

Mr. TELLER. I do not like the title of the bill, and I think it should be amended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The title will be acted upon after the passage of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. If the title be properly amended, I shall have no objection to the bill.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, the immunity statute has been one of unfortunate effect in the courts. It has resulted, at least according to public sentiment, in protecting men who ought to have been prosecuted. It is of the utmost importance that when Congress shall act upon this subject, it shall act with thorough enlightenment as to the steps it is taking.

I suppose that the bill under consideration as it reads now applies only to persons who testify in a judicial proceeding or to those who are responding to some body such as a Congressional committee that has the right to enforce an answer from a witness. If this be true, I do not know that I should offer any amendment.

It may be doubtful, Mr. President, whether or not any good has resulted from our legislation on this subject. It has certainly resulted in the protection of persons who, according to public sentiment, should have been prosecuted.

I should like very much to hear from the patron of this bill some statement as to the present state of the law and as to the benefits to be derived from the bill. I should like also to hear from gentlemen who are upon the committee which has been examining this subject whether or not it might not be better to repeal all immunity statutes and to let all persons stand upon the right which they have under the law as a whole not to answer questions which criminate them.

I myself do not know, for I have never had opportunity nor occasion to investigate the present status of the law with any sedulous care, but as I feel on this subject rather than think—using the term "feel" from the impression that I have derived from the general discussions in the press—I am disposed to think we had better repeal all immunity whatsoever to people who testify, and leave them to defend themselves, they having now ample methods for the defense of their personality under the common law and under the general statutes of this country.

This is to me a subject to be dealt with with the utmost enlightenment as to what we are doing, and I therefore hope that the Senator from Pennsylvania, before any vote is asked on this bill, will explain to the Senate what is now the status of the law, what good is being derived from the immunity statute, and whether or not, in his opinion as a very experienced lawyer, it might not be better to abolish all immunity statutes and let men stand on their rights under the Constitution and the laws of the country to defend themselves.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is clear, and its range is not very broad. It is not intended to cover all disputed provisions as to the rights of witnesses under any circumstances, except those enumerated in the bill itself. Senators are fully aware that under the interstate-commerce act and under the act creating the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the first instance, and the Commissioner of Corporations, in the second instance, are authorized by the law to compel witnesses to appear before the Commission and the Commissioner, respectively, to disclose their books and papers, and to give evidence in relation to transportation companies and concerns engaged in interstate commerce whether or not the testimony which they disclose incriminates them. In order that that law might be made effectual under the Constitution the statute gave witnesses so appearing and testifying or producing books and papers complete immunity from prosecution by reason of anything that they might disclose or because of any of the transactions with which their testimony might be concerned.

As the law originally stood, the Supreme Court of the United States declared that the immunity clauses were not broad enough; that the original statute limiting it to the particular transaction was not as broad as the constitutional right of the witnesses. So that on the 11th of February, 1893, there was an act passed which in part reads:

But no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said Commission, or in obedience to its subpœna, or the subpœna of either of them, or in any such case or proceeding: Provided, That no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

On the 14th of February, 1903, Congress passed an act establishing the Department of Commerce and Labor. In that act the Bureau of Corporations was created and a Commissioner of Corporations. Under the provisions of that act he was given "power and authority to make, under the direction and control of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States."

In order to accomplish the purpose of this act, he was given "the right to subpœna and compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of documentary evidence and to administer oaths."

The language of the act continues:

All the requirements, obligations, liabilities, and immunities imposed or conferred by said act to regulate commerce—

To which I have just referred—and by an act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission—

Which I have just read—

shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

That completed the scheme of law so far as the Interstate Commerce Commission was concerned and so far as the Department of Commerce and Labor was concerned; namely, that the Commission in the one case and the Commissioner of Corporations, acting under the control of the head of his Department, in the other, could compel the attendance of witnesses, could compel the production of books and papers, and those witnesses had to attend, had to testify, and had to produce their books and papers whether or not the production of such books and papers or the giving of that testimony incriminated them.

It was supposed that there was no possible doubt about the meaning of the language that the immunity provisions of the acts referred to:

Shall also apply to all persons who may be subpœnaed to testify as witnesses or—

And I interpolate the word "subpœnaed" in the following extract in order to bring out clearly the meaning—or "subpœnaed" to produce documentary evidence in pursuance of the authority conferred by this section.

I say it seems there could be no doubt as to the meaning of that language, that when it says "the immunity shall extend to all persons subpœnaed to give testimony and subpœnaed to produce books and papers," it would be essential that a subpœna should be issued; but it so turned out that in the prosecution of the great beef trust in Chicago, Commissioner Garfield had had some conversations with different members of the beef trust, and some of them had produced books and papers voluntarily or at his request, and, notwithstanding the language that the immunity provision was only to extend to persons "subpœnaed" to give testimony and "subpœnaed" to produce books and papers, the court in Chicago held that they had obtained the immunity by voluntarily disclosing the secrets of their business to Commissioner Garfield.

Mr. President, the whole purpose of this bill is to define the right of the witness as we thought it was defined in the statute which I have read, and to say, as the statute said, but to say it even more clearly and emphatically, that the immunity shall only extend to witnesses who have been subpœnaed to produce books and papers or subpœnaed to give testimony. The essence of the whole act is found in lines 18, 19, and 20, on page 2, which read that these immunity provisions—only the immunity provisions under the interstate commerce act and under the Commerce and Labor act, not the general immunity that the citizen enjoys in judicial proceedings, but merely in relation to the proceedings of these two great bureaus of the Government—"shall extend only to a natural person." That is, that a corporation is not to have the benefit of the immunity provisions, but they—shall extend only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpœna, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill defining the right of immunity of witnesses under the act entitled 'An act in relation to testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission,' and so forth, approved February 11, 1893, and an act entitled 'An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor,' approved February 14, 1903, and an act entitled 'An act to further regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States,' approved February 19, 1903, and an act entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for other purposes,' approved February 25, 1903."

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 239) relating to liability of common carriers by railroads in the District of Columbia and Territories and common carriers by railroads engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees.

Mr. STONE. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under the rule adopted by the Senate this morning the Chair can not accept morning business.

Mr. STONE. Under the rule, can not morning business be introduced or transacted at all at this time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The conclusion of the rule reads:

It shall not be in order to interrupt a Senator having the floor, for the purpose of introducing any memorial, petition, report of a committee, resolution, or bill. It shall be the duty of the Chair to enforce this rule without any point of order hereunder being made by a Senator.

Mr. STONE. The Senator does not rise——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator rise?

Mr. STONE. The Senator does not rise for the purpose of introducing a bill.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. STONE. Certainly, he has the floor.

Mr. SPOONER. And he can not yield it under the rule to enable another Senator to introduce a bill, resolution, or memorial, but the Senator from Missouri may, after the Senator from Wisconsin yields the floor, take the floor in his own right to introduce morning business by unanimous consent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should be glad to yield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator can not yield under the rule.

Mr. STONE. It is not important.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimuos consent for the present consideration of a bill which will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 239) relating to liability of common carriers by railroads in the District of Columbia and Territories and common carriers by railroads engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for information.

The Secretary read the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I do not object, but there are some amendments reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, section 1, page 1, it is proposed, after the word "carrier," to strike out the words "by railroad;" so as to read:

That every common carrier engaged in trade or commerce in the District of Columbia, or in any Territory of the United States, or between the several States, etc.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. I want to hear the amendments read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, section 1, page 1, after the word "carrier," strike out "by railroad;" so as to read:

That every common carrier engaged in trade or commerce in the District of Columbia, or in any Territory of the United States, or between the several States, etc.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have some amendments which I desire to offer to the bill, and I wish to inquire whether they should be offered now or I should wait until the committee amendments have been disposed of?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will first ascertain whether there is objection to the consideration of the bill. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has been stated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, on page 2, section 1, line 3, after the word "employees," to insert the words "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work;" so as to read:

That every common carrier * * * shall be liable to any of its employees, or, in the case of his death, to his personal representative, for the benefit of his widow and children, if any, if none, for his next of kin dependent upon him, for all damages which may result from the negligence of any of its officers, agents, or employees in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work, or by reason of any defect or insufficiency due to its negligence in its cars, engines, etc.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word to the Senate in opposition to this amendment. It will be observed that the words which have been added to the House bill by the Senate committee and reported to the Senate, namely, the words "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work" really destroy the effectiveness of the bill. If that amendment be adopted, there could be no recovery of damages caused by the negligence of any other employee, however gross the negligence of that employee, unless the injury or the death were caused by the negligence of some one in authority immediately over the person injured or killed.

If, for instance, the engineer, the fireman, and the brakeman of a train crew were all of them sacrificed in train collision resulting from the negligence of some member of the crew of the train with which they collided, there could be no recovery. I shall not take the time of the Senate to more than call attention to the character of this amendment and say that it destroys the value of the bill. I can not conceive that this body, after delaying this legislation for years, will enact a measure professedly for the protection of railway employees, but which, in fact, will afford them no protection at all if this amendment proposed by the committee is to remain in the bill.

I will ask the Senate to listen to a resolution adopted by the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, presented to the Senate by the Vice-President on Tuesday morning. It reads as follows:

[Telegram.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 25, 1906.

Hon. C. W. FAIRBANKS,
President of the Senate, Senate Chamber,
Washington, D. C.:

The International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers in convention assembled at Memphis, Tenn., this 25th day of May, 1906, by a unanimous vote earnestly protest against the amendment inserting the words, "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work," in section 1 of our employers' liability bill, H. R. 239, and we earnestly appeal to all Senators who are desirous of the passage of an effective bill upon this important subject to vote against the insertion of that amendment as above stated.

W. S. STONE.

Mr. President, it is not necessary to add one word to this appeal, which comes from the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Surely after these men have waited ten long years for some sort of legislation, they will not be given a law that is worthless and meaningless in its so-called protection.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I do not care to make a speech on this amendment, but only to say that I thoroughly agree with what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, like the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], it is not my purpose to address the Senate upon this amendment, but simply to state my thorough agreement with what has been said by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. The bill, with this amendment in it, will answer no good purpose whatever, Mr. President, but, on the contrary, it will, in my judgment, destroy the effectiveness of the bill. I sincerely trust that the amendment proposed by the committee in this particular will not be adopted.

Mr. MALLORY obtained the floor.

Mr. KEAN. I do not see present the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] who reported the bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. As a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, which reported the bill——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida has the floor.

Mr. MALLORY. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator from Texas to a question of complication that may arise out of this language, if inserted in the bill. Many of the States have laws on this subject which are in line with what the purpose of this bill was when it passed the House. Under the proposed committee amendment a suit brought in the United States court would be determined under it, and the result, in my judgment, would be entirely different from what it would be if the suit were brought in the State court. That also is a matter for the Senate to consider in connection with the proposition to insert these words.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, I am a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and I opposed this amendment in committee. I agree with what the Senator from Wisconsin said, that it utterly destroys the object of the bill, which is to give the employee of a railroad or his representatives damages for negligence, and I certainly shall vote to take the committee amendment out in the Senate, if we can get a yea-and-nay vote on it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when this bill was called up, and I was a little surprised to find that it was under consideration when I returned to the Chamber. The bill was reported out of the Interstate Commerce Committee by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. He came to me just as he was leaving, and said he was to be absent for a few days, and asked me if I would call up the bill during his absence and have it considered, if there came a necessity for it. But when he told me he would return next Monday, I think his statement was, it seemed to me that there was no necessity for my undertaking what had been assigned to him, and I declined and dismissed the matter from further consideration. I think the bill ought to go over until the Senator from Mississippi returns, because the amendment under consideration which is objected to was not my amendment, but his amendment, and it is an amendment about which there was difference of opinion in committee. I think it is due to the Senator from Mississippi that the matter be delayed until he can return. I base that simply on what he said to me at the time he left.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. I thought the Senator from Ohio was about to take his seat.

Mr. FORAKER. I was. I said about all I care to say. I do not desire to discuss the measure.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the pending bill. It is one introduced by my colleague, who is now absent, and his purpose was to do something for the benefit of the employees of railroads who may be injured by collision, accident, etc. As these people, the beneficiaries, have, as far as I can learn, universally repudiated the amendment as not effectuating the purpose of the bill, but to the contrary, I think it very well, if the Senate acts now, that it should reject the amendment, unless it intends to pervert the original intention of the bill. I hope, if voted on, the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. FORAKER. If I correctly understood the Senator from Mississippi, his statement was that his colleague will repudiate the amendment when he does return.

Mr. MONEY. No.

Mr. GALLINGER. He did not say that.

Mr. MONEY. I did not say my colleague would repudiate it, but if it does defeat the purpose of this bill, and as the people for whose benefit it was proposed have repudiated the amendment, so far as I can learn, and object to its adoption, I presume my colleague would object to it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the bill being considered now, if the Senate thinks it should be, after the statement I have made as to what the Senator from Mississippi said to me just before he left. But I think if it is to be considered in his absence, I ought to state that in the committee the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] offered amendments to other sections of this bill, about which proposed amendments there was a difference of opinion in committee and much discussion. He offered an amendment to section 2 of the bill, to which I was opposed, and which was finally rejected in committee. There was also objection in committee to section 3 of the bill. I did not sympathize with the objections to that. The result of it all was, as is frequently the case, that the bill was reported in the form in which it is now presented to the Senate, with this proposed amendment of the committee, as a sort of a compromise of the whole matter of difference.

The amendment having been agreed to in section 1, the amendments proposed as to section 2 and the other parts of the bill—I can not recall, in the absence of the minutes of the committee, just what they all were—the first was accepted and the others were waived. So it is not quite fair to say that the bill, if it should pass as reported from the committee, would entirely defeat the purposes of those who are seeking this legislation. The second section and the third section and the fifth section, I suppose—I do not know just what that provides—but two of the important features were the second and third sections. They were reported just as the representative of the labor interest who spoke to me on the subject and who appeared before the committee desired that they should be enacted. They could not have what they desired as to the first section.

It is my opinion that the amendment does not change the law as it now is; certainly it does not as it is in my State, for the provision of that amendment is but declaratory of the rule as to negligence and contributory negligence as we apply it there now. I have no disposition to oppose the passage of this measure; I sympathize with it; but we were compelled to do in the committee, as happens here every day in other committees—we had to compromise our differences, giving and taking, something being modified here that something else might be granted there.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FORAKER. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. In view of the statement just made by the Senator from Ohio, and out of courtesy to the Senator from Mississippi, who is not here, I call for the regular order and ask that this bill may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think the Senator from West Virginia will demand the regular order when I say to him that I made diligent inquiry with respect to the position of the Senator from Mississippi who reported this bill, and I was assured, and I think reliably—and the statement of the Senator from Ohio is confirmatory of what I heard upon the subject—that he did not expect this measure to be delayed until his return; and I understood from the Senator from Ohio that he was authorized to call up the bill for the Senator from Mississippi at some time before his return.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator pretty nearly accurately repeats what I said. I did not accept the honor of calling up the bill, because the Senator from Mississippi had taken much interest in it and seemed to have it especially in mind. He had charge of it by direction of the committee itself, and I did not think there was any necessity that I should take the work off his hands; I had a number of other bills I wanted to call up. So I said to him I thought it would be time enough to let it go over until he returned. I did not dream that the bill would be taken up in his absence.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. I think if the Senator from Mississippi had desired that the bill be called up during his absence, after he had talked with me, he would have gone to some other Senator on the committee of which he is a member, and asked him to call it up.

Mr. SCOTT. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MALLORY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MALLORY. What is the regular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar under Rule VIII is the regular order.

Mr. MALLORY. Has not the Senate agreed to take up this bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Bills are being considered by unanimous consent.

Mr. MALLORY. And consent was given for the consideration of this bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Yes; but under Rule VIII an objection may be interposed at any stage of the bill's consideration, notwithstanding the previous consent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, what then is the significance of the granting of consent on the part of the Senate for the consideration of a bill if it can be set aside by objection at any time?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will call attention to the rule. It needs no interpretation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be very glad to hear the rule read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Rule VIII provides that—

> At the conclusion of the morning business for each day, unless upon motion the Senate shall at any time otherwise order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar of Bills and Resolutions, and continue such consideration until 2 o'clock; and bills and resolutions that are not objected to shall be taken up in their order, and each Senator shall be entitled to speak once and for five minutes only upon any question; and the objection may be interposed at any stage of the proceedings——

Mr. SCOTT. I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. SCOTT. Did the Senator from Mississippi——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senators please suspend until the Chair concludes the reading of the rule? It continues:

> But upon motion the Senate may continue such consideration; and this order shall commence immediately after the call for "concurrent and other resolutions," and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to move that the Senate continue the consideration of this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That the Senator can do. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I should like to know whether the pending amendment under discussion was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN]. I do not know whether or not that was stated.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in lines 3 and 4, page 2.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have sent for a copy of the bill. I want to see if it is the amendment I have in mind.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. SCOTT. I want it to be distinctly understood that I am not opposing this bill. I desired to ask the Senator from Wisconsin whether the Senator from Mississippi had asked him to call up this bill during his absence. If he had answered my question, I should have withdrawn my objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had already stated, if the Senator from Colorado will yield——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Just to answer the question.

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I had already stated—perhaps before the Senator from West Virginia returned to the Chamber—that I had made inquiry with respect to the status of this bill, and had been informed that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] did not expect to have the bill laid over until his return; that he expected it to be taken up and passed in his absence; that he is likely to be gone for some ten days or more. The statement of the Senator from Ohio confirms the information upon which I acted in calling up the bill. The Senator from Mississippi expected it to be taken up.

I was not requested by the Senator from Mississippi to call it up in his absence.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wiscorsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I do not think I have trenched upon the prerogatives of the Senator from Mississippi at all. I certainly would not do that. But I was advised, and I believe correctly, that he expected this bill to be considered in his absence. Indeed, I am sure that he would not want the bill jeopardized by deferring its consideration until his return later in the session.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. PATTERSON. With pleasure.

Mr. FORAKER. I only wanted to state what I did not recall when I was on the floor a moment ago, but which is something that I think should be stated before Senators take action. When the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN] came to me he submitted a form of amendment which he intended to offer as a substitute for that amendment when the bill did come up, which he said had been prepared by representatives of labor organizations with whom he had been conferring. I declined to take charge of it. I said I had no objection to it; I looked it over and gave my assent to it, and said when he offered it he could say, so far as I was concerned as a member of the committee, that the amendment which he had agreed upon to be substituted for these words should be accepted. But beyond that I have nothing now to say about the matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I rose only for information. I should like to have the Secretary reread the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 3, after the word "employees," insert "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work."

Mr. PATTERSON. That amendment ought to be voted down.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as many Senators have returned to the Chamber since the telegram was read from the National Association of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, I will ask to have it read before the vote is taken.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will again read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 25, 1906.

Hon. C. W. FAIRBANKS,
President of the Senate, Senate Chamber,
Washington, D. C.:

The International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, in convention assembled at Memphis, Tenn., this 25th day of May, 1906, by a unanimous vote earnestly protest against the amendment inserting the words "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work" in section 1 of our employers' liability bill (H. R. 239), and we earnestly appeal to all Senators who are desirous of the passage of an effective bill upon this important subject to vote against the insertion of that amendment as above stated.

W. S. STONE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, as I understand it, the vote is on the whole of the words "in authority over him or engaged in a different kind of work."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the pending amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, just a few words.

I think it is important and thoroughly right and just that this amendment should be voted down. The negligence for which a carrier should be held responsible is not confined to that of the person who is the agent in authority over him. In the complex organization of society that now exists the old-time common law of master and servant has no longer fitting application to this subject. There is a new heaven and a new earth with respect to the organization of labor. If a man is killed or wounded upon a train by the negligence of an employee of the carrier, who missends a telegram, or who does anything by which the correct movement of a train is hindered or prevented, there is as much responsibility for the negligence of the dispatcher as if he were one in authority over the person who is hurt.

Neither is the second part of this phrase one that commends itself to the rationale and organization of our modern systems of common carriage:

Or engaged in a different kind of work.

What difference does that make? If a man is at a station in charge of a switch and a brakeman is killed upon a train by the switchman's negligence, why should the responsibility of the carrier be excused because the man at the switch "was engaged in a different kind of work?"

And so, Mr. President, you might take a thousand illustrations from the diversified branches of the great system of transportation now in vogue. The common carrier of to-day is as different from the common carrier of a hundred years ago as a grand hotel in New York—a sky scraper, which has two or three thousand servants and five or six thousand guests—is different from an old wayside inn. It becomes the business of a department to serve one dish or one portion of a dish in that modern metropolitan, or rather cosmopolitan, hotel.

What difference does it make upon the subject of negligence we are now considering whether the relations of the person upon a train are those of identical labor or similar labor or diversified labor? We can not apply or make fit the old ideas of a hundred or two hundred years ago, and this amendment is antiquated and totally out of unison and congeniality with the whole framework of the bill.

This reform, Mr. President, in the law of common service has moved all over the face of the earth where civilization exists. It has been retarded a little here or there. In our own State we have had contests for a year or two and then victory, and the same result will take place here as soon as this subject gets a full and fair hearing and is understood in the light of the just and wise and modern view.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 2, page 2, line 8, after the word "any," to strike out "such;" and in the same line, after the word "carriers," to strike out "by railroad;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That in all actions hereafter brought against any common carriers to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery where his contributory negligence was slight and that of the employer was gross in comparison, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 23, after the word "any," to strike out "such;" in the same line, after the word "carrier," to strike out "by railroad;" and on page 3, line 2, after the word "his," to strike out "heirs at law" and insert "personal representative;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, however, That upon the trial of such action against any common carrier the defendant may set off therein any sum it has contributed toward any such insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, page 3, line 4, after the word "within," to strike out "two years" and insert "one year;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That no action shall be maintained under this act unless commenced within one year from the time the cause of action accrued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DANIEL. I move to strike out the proviso beginning in line 22, page 2, and going down to line 2, page 3.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia moves an amendment, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 22, after the word "employee," strike out the following proviso:

Provided, however, That upon the trial of such action against any common carrier the defendant may set off therein any sum it has contributed toward any such insurance, relief benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employee, or, in case of his death, to his personal representative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like the Senator from Virginia to give the Senate the benefit of his views on that matter. It seems to me that if these railroads have contributed money to their injured employees they ought to be given due credit for that if damages are assessed against them by the court.

Mr. DANIEL. I do not want to imperil the passage of the bill; otherwise I should like to state my views in full on that subject.

Mr. GALLINGER. I shall certainly state my views briefly against it.

Mr. DANIEL. The employees of a great modern carrier are in large measure under their sway. They are not required to give their employees anything, and it is not according to common law that such a matter should go as an offset. It is a change of the present law on the subject, as it ought to demonstrate itself. It is mixing in with an action of damages a collateral matter which has nothing to do with it. If they choose to give a man something, they have no right to charge it as an offset. If a man chooses to send a basket of flowers or a basket of fruit to a sick man, he can not make a bill of it because that man has an action of damages against him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. DANIEL. It is not the kind of thing that belongs to lawsuits, and it is a matter of relationship in which the superior has a large influence over the conduct and over the doings of the inferior.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that he withdraws his amendment?

Mr. DANIEL. No, sir; I do not withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. It does seem to me, if I have read this bill aright, and I confess that I have read it very hastily, that in the event of an employee being injured, and the railroad corporation takes him to a hospital, paying perhaps hundreds and possibly thousands of dollars for his care, if afterwards action is resorted to to recover damages for that injury, the railroad corporation ought to have the benefit of that expense. I chance to know, Mr. President, that these railroad corporations, which seem to be under the ban at the present time, are doing a great deal for their employees, and I want to say a word in their behalf.

In my own city at the present time a railroad corporation is constructing a fine building for the benefit of its employees. They are to be furnished a place where they can have amusements, literature, and everything necessary for their comfort. I do not think we want to make a foolish raid upon the corporations in view of the good things they are doing for their employees.

I repeat, Mr. President, whatever the legal technicalities in the case may be, if a railroad corporation expends money for the comfort and restoration of health, or it may be the preservation of the life of an injured employee, in the event of the employee being awarded damages in the courts, the corporation should have the benefit of what it has contributed; and that, I understand, is what this bill proposes to do. I think, when the Senator from Virginia gives the matter a little more careful consideration—possibly he has thought it all out—he will see that we ought to be just to both parties in the controversy.

PANAMA CANAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will state.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 6191) to provide for the construction of a sea-level canal connecting the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and the method of construction.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, now on the Vice-President's table, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. KITTREDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; but I do not expect to take any time except to move that conferees be appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota rises with respect to the unfinished business.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to yielding.

Mr. KITTREDGE. I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

WHARVES AND PIERS IN THE WATERS OF PORTO RICO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of water in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House of Representatives, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. FORAKER, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. MALLORY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, last Wednesday, before we adjourned, I gave notice that to-day, because of communication I had with respect to some executive business, I would feel it my duty to move for an executive session at the earliest possible hour. I propose to make that motion now, but before doing so I want to say a word about the bill that has been under consideration.

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] has just moved, I understand, to strike out the proviso in section 3. I hope the Senator will not insist upon that amendment. I think I know what the men who have asked for this legislation want in that respect. I think they are honorable, fair-minded men. I have always found them such, and I do not believe there is a man in all of the many employees of the railroads of this country who would want to deny to the railroad in a suit, such as has been provided for here, a credit on a judgment or against a verdict that might be rendered to the amount that he had received of benefits out of the beneficial fund which the railroad had helped them to maintain.

There was a great deal of difference of opinion in the Senate committee as to whether the legislation involved in section 3 should be enacted at all, but we finally agreed to report it in the form in which it stands here.

This legislation in the form in which it here stands met with the approval of the House committee and of the House. This particular provision has not been objected to, so far as I am aware, by anyone until now the Senator from Virginia makes a motion to strike out. When the bill can be again taken up, I shall insist further upon this view; but for the present, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio withhold his motion and yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FORAKER. For a question; not to make an argument.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not going to make an argument, but, believing that Senators may desire to be present when the roll is called upon the passage of this bill, I give notice now that to-morrow, after the routine business is finished, I shall ask unanimous consent to resume its consideration. If objection is made, I shall move to take it up. If that motion is voted down, or if the bill is not disposed of during the morning hour, and is again forced over, I shall then move for its consideration upon the day following. I shall continue to press its consideration from day to day until it is passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FORAKER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. FORAKER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to know some reason why, with the great number of bills we have on the Calendar, it becomes necessary to move an executive session at the very beginning of our morning's work and to hold an executive session at the expense of all other character of legislation.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator from North Dakota knows exactly why I am moving for an executive session, because he was present in the executive session when I made the statement to which I referred a few moments ago. I can not state in open session matters that pertain to executive session. When we go into executive session, if there is any good reason why we should not stay there, it can be shown to us in executive session and we can come back into legislative session, but for the present I insist on my motion.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. FORAKER. I will yield, if it be a very brief matter.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. It is a very short bill that I desire to call up.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to have a vote on the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio. [Putting the question.] By the sound the noes seem to have it.

Mr. FORAKER. I ask for a division.

Mr. PATTERSON. Why not have the yeas and nays?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 38, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Aldrich	Daniel	Hopkins	Proctor
Bacon	Dick	Kean	Scott
Bailey	Dolliver	La Follette	Smoot
Berry	Flint	Lodge	Stone
Blackburn	Foraker	Millard	Taliaferro
Brandegee	Frazier	Nixon	Teller
Burkett	Frye	Overman	Warner
Burnham	Fulton	Patterson	Warren
Clark, Wyo.	Gallinger	Piles
Clay	Gearin	Platt

NAYS—14.

Ankeny	Dubois	Money	Rayner
Carmack	Kittredge	Nelson	Spooner
Carter	McCumber	Perkins
Culberson	Mallory	Pettus

NOT VOTING—37.

Alger	Crane	Hansbrough	Morgan
Allee	Cullom	Hemenway	Newlands
Allison	Depew	Heyburn	Penrose
Beveridge	Dillingham	Knox	Simmons
Bulkeley	Dryden	Latimer	Sutherland
Burrows	Elkins	Long	Tillman
Burton	Foster	McCreary	Wetmore
Clapp	Gamble	McEnery
Clark, Mont.	Gorman	McLaurin
Clarke, Ark.	Hale	Martin

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNATIONAL BUREAU OF THE PERMANENT COURT OF ARBITRATION.

To meet the share of the United States in the expenses for the year 1905 of the International Bureau of the Permanent Court of Arbitration, created under article 22 of the convention concluded at The Hague July 29, 1899, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, $1,250.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, on the first day of this Congress, namely, on December 4, 1905, I introduced the bill (H. R. 2799) for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster. The bill is a very short one, and I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask to have it read in my time, in order that it may be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby invested with jurisdiction and authorized and directed to hear, examine into, determine, and adjudicate the claims of the victims, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, of the General Slocum disaster, which occurred in the East River, New York Harbor, on the 15th day of June, 1904, by the burning of the said steamer General Slocum, and award to them and each of them such damages as may be just and equitable in the premises; and the said Court of Claims shall ascertain and fix the amount of all such damages to which each or any of the survivors of the said General Slocum disaster, or the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of any of those who lost their lives, shall be entitled to, and render judgment therefor in favor of said claimants, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns; and the amount of such judgment is hereby appropriated, and shall thereupon be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to said claimant or claimants, their executors, administrators, or assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the statute of limitations on the part of the Government is hereby waived.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, that bill speaks for itself, and relates to one of the saddest and one of the most deplorable catastrophes that ever happened in the history of this country—the burning and destruction of the excursion steamer General Slocum in the East River, New York Harbor, on the 15th day of June, 1904, by which over 1,000 men, women, and children—mostly children—lost their lives, and hundreds of others were maimed and scarred and disfigured for life.

No words of mine, sir, can adequately describe in all its saddening details the heartrending and sickening scenes of that lamentable tragedy. The lives of entire families were wiped out in almost the twinkling of an eye, and the fearful horrors of it all cast a black pall upon the first city of the land and brought tears to the eyes of every sympathetic inhabitant of our country. The awful story of this unprecedented calamity can never be, and will never be, forgotten.

The General Slocum was an excursion steamer plying in and around the harbor of the city of New York. On the 15th day of June, 1904, the steamer was chartered to carry an excursion party consisting of over 1,500 souls—men, women, and children—from St. Mark's German Lutheran Church, which is located in the heart of my Congressional district. It was the Sunday school's annual holiday outing. These excursions are of frequent occurrence in the city of New York during the summer months and are social events of much importance in the lives of the people in the thickly populated sections. All the members of the church, with their families and their friends, took advantage of the opportunity afforded by this Sunday school picnic to go on this outing and have an enjoyable time. The occasion was to be a gladsome holiday in their uneventful lives.

The General Slocum left her wharf early on that fateful morning, freighted with her human cargo, and started on her trip up the East River. It was a beautiful summer's day; the steamer was crowded; all her flags were gayly flying; merry music was playing; happy children singing and laughing; parents and friends talking over the topics of the day, and as the steamer wended her way all on board was joy and merriment. She had not proceeded far up the East River, however, when the terrible cry of fire startled the passengers. In less time than it takes to tell it flames burst forth from several parts of the steamer and, fanned by the breeze, quickly enveloped the boat. Amid cries and confusion that beggar description, and with a startling suddenness that can not be pictured in words, a most frightful scene ensued, too horrible for narration. Suffice it for me to say that in all the annals of our country nothing like it ever occurred before, and I pray to God that nothing like it will ever happen again.

The captain of the steamer lost his head, as so often happens under similar circumstances—he was no Jim Bludsoe—and instead of immediately beaching the steamer, as he should have done, he ran her up the river several miles in the teeth of the increasing wind, where she finally grounded near North Brothers Island, a charred and blackened wreck.

Oh, the pitiable scenes that ensued! The life preservers were rotten. The fire apparatus useless. The crew raw deck hands who were never drilled and tried only to save themselves. Pandemonium reigned, and amid the tumult and the shouting and the scorching flames, hundreds and hundreds of helpless men, women, and children, caught like rats in a trap, were burned to a crisp on the ship, and hundreds and hundreds of others, just as helpless, were scorched and burned until, frantic, they threw themselves into the rushing waters only to be drowned. It is too terrible a scene to contemplate even now. Fathers who were there lost their reason, and mothers, unable to save their childern went mad. The frightful horrors of it all will never be effaced from the memory of this generation. It took strong men to investigate and write what they saw, and the horror-stricken country shrank from reading its sickening details.

The city of New York was shocked and appalled by the awfulness of the calamity, but her generous citizens rendered all the aid within their power. A large section of the first city in the land was devastated of the living, and thousands and thousands of her inhabitants were weeping and mourning for their dead and refused to be comforted. The church bells tolled, the flags were at half mast, for blocks and blocks crape was on every door, and a great city stopped its activities, stunned by the appalling magnitude of the indescribable loss of human life.

The funerals of the victims lasted for more than a week and taxed the best energies of all the undertakers. The distress and the misery, the sorrow and the lamentation following this frightful tragedy can never be forgotten, and the saddening scenes were heartrending to witness. The city of New York responded promptly and nobly, as it always does in all calamities. The sympathetic people did all they could for the unfortunate dead and the injured living, but, after all, how impotent they were in their poor human ways to do more than bury the stricken dead and comfort the burned and injured living.

Mr. Chairman, I know whereof I speak. I was in the city of New York at the time, and as soon as I heard of the tragedy I went to the awful wreck to render such aid as I could, and hence I witnessed much of these frightful and distressing scenes. Most of these unfortunate people were my constituents; many of them my personal friends. I rendered all the assistance I could for them at the time, and since then I have been doing all in my power to aid them to get justice. I know all the sad facts and details in this awful case. All my sympathy is now, always has been, and always will be, with these poor and stricken people. I know and I love the people on the great east side of the city of New York whose ranks were so cruelly decimated by this pitiable tragedy. They are among the kindliest, the most intelligent, the most charitable, the most generous, and the most sympathetic people in all the world. They are poor, but they are frugal and honest and industrious. They did all in their power to relieve the suffering and comfort their broken hearted neighbors. Their heroic efforts, their heartfelt sympathy, and their noble generosity will never be forgotten. They were the true heroes and the true heroines of the tragedy. But after the dead were buried and the widows and orphans cared for, there went up a Macedonian cry, an indignant demand, form all over the land for a thorough and rigid investigation of this awful calamity, with a view of fixing the responsibility for the terrible loss of life. Somebody had been negligent, and the negligence was criminal.

The Government ordered an investigation. That investigation dragged its slow length along and lasted for weeks and months, and the testimony and findings in the matter filled a book, with the contents of which many here are thoroughly familiar. It was ascertained by this governmental investigation and by other inquiries, official and unofficial, that the terrible loss of life incident to this lamentable tragedy could have been prevented if the officials of the Government charged with the responsibility had performed their duty in accordance with the law. It was proven conclusively that the life-preservers and the fire apparatus on board of the General Slocum were old and worn-out and absolutely useless, and this fire apparatus and these life-preservers had only recently been inspected by the Government inspectors, who had passed them as being in compliance with the provisions of the statutes of the United States. The law had been flagrantly violated. The testimony proves conclusively that if these inspectors of the Government had done their duty and enforced the law the frightful loss of life never would have occurred.

After the official investigations had conclusively demonstrated the criminal negligence of these Federal officials some of them were indicted, and some of them have been tried, and others are yet to be tried. The captain of the steamer has been convicted and sentenced to a long term of imprisonment. But these prosecutions and these convictions can not bring back to life the dead, can not restore to the living the loss they have sustained in the death of their beloved relatives and guardians, and can not compensate the injured and the maimed and the deformed. There must be financial relief in the nature of substantial damages for these poor people. No act to-day of the Government, civil or criminal, can make just restitution to these unfortunate citizens who went aboard that ill-fated steamer on that memorable day, full of hope and of life, for the irreparable losses they have sustained through the Government's negligence.

Mr. Chairman, I take a deep and an abiding interest in the welfare of these people. Nearly all the victims of this terrible tragedy lived in my Congressional district. Many of them I knew and have known for years. They were and are my friends, and from the day of the catastrophe down to the present time, in season and out of season, my heart and my sympathy have gone out to them, and I have done all in my power to render them such assistance as I possibly could. Many of them lost all that they had, and they have no remedy except through the enactment of a measure similar to the bill I have introduced in their behalf. It is a just bill and a fair bill, and it ought to meet the approval of the Members of this House and be enacted into law. The Government, by reason of the gross negligence of its officials, was, directly or indirectly, responsible for this frightful loss of life. The findings of the investigating committees conclusively prove it. These people—these victims—want their day in court, and can only get it by this bill of mine. Shall we deny them justice?

Mr. Chairman, there is no way under existing law by which these unfortunate and destitute people can secure relief, in law or equity, save by an act of Congress, and in view of this fact I assert that my bill should become a law. Under the persent law the victims can not recover damages from the owners of the vessel. This may seem strange to those who do not know the law, or have not investigated the facts, but under an old section of the United States Revised Statutes (sec. 4289), there is no personal liability to the owners of vessels used in rivers or inland navigation. Here is a wrong without a remedy. I think this old law should be changed, and I introduced a bill (H. R. 3112) on December 5, 1905, to amend that old and unjust statute. I have the bill here, and as it is very short I will read it. I know my time is limited, but it will only take a minute. It is entitled "A bill to amend section 4289 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," and reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 4289 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 4289. The provisions of the seven preceding sections of this title, relating to the limitation of the liability of the owners of vessels, shall not apply to the owners of any canal boat, barge, or lighter, or to any vessel of any description whatsoever used in rivers or inland navigation: Provided, however, That the owner or owners of any steamer or vessel of any character carrying passengers on any bay, harbor, lake, river, sound, or inland waters of the United States be not entitled to avail himself, itself, or themselves, of the provisions of the seven preceding sections of this act, if the loss of life and personal injuries, or loss or damage be caused or contributed to by the insufficiency or incompetency of the officers or crew, or the omission to comply with all or any of the provisions of title 52 of these statutes."

The proviso is the amendment I propose to make the owners of these excursion steamboats personally liable in damages, and I say it is a good bill, and a measure of immediate importance, and it ought to be passed, but thus far the Republicans of this House have treated it with the same silent contempt that they have the bill for the relief of the victims of the Slocum disaster.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there was a hearing on my bill for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster before the Committee on Claims—a very largely attended hearing—and many speeches were made in favor of the bill by eloquent gentlemen from New York City. I was there and spoke in favor of the bill, and I want to say that I have done everything in my power to get the Committee on Claims to report the bill to the House, but thus far without avail. I am informed the committee is opposed to the bill, and ultimately intend to report it adversely; but I hope it will be reported, without further delay, one way or the other, so that this House can take official action in regard to the matter and determine the rights of these unfortunate victims.

Mr. Chairman, this bill briefly provides that the Court of Claims of the United States Government be invested with jurisdiction to adjudicate this matter to ascertain if the Government is responsible by reason of the negligence of its officials; and if the court finds, in the first instance, that the Government was guilty of negligence, that then the court shall hear and audit the claims and render such judgment in damages to the claimants as may be fair and just and proper in the premises. That is all the bill does. It is a very simple bill, and it means just what it says and says just what it means. Not a dollar will be taken out of the Treasury by reason of the enactment of this bill unless the Court of Claims—the Government court created for the purpose of protecting the rights of the people and the Government, and known from the day of its creation down to the present time to always favor the Government if there is a single doubt as to the justice of a claim—finds as a matter of law or equity that the claims of these victims are honest and just and proper claims against the Government.

Sir, I want to impress on the Members of Congress the justice of this measure, the humanity of it, and its absolute legality, and to say that if any Member of this House, or anybody else, for that matter, has any fear that by reason of its enactment the Government will be charged with the payment of a large sum of money in damages, I beg that gentleman to remember that this bill simply gives the court the right to ascertain if the Government is liable, and then, if the Government is liable, to award such damages to those who are entitled to damages as may be fair and just and equitable. In other words, to do impartial justice; and every man connected with this Government knows that the Court of Claims never gives a dollar to any citizen unless the Government ought to pay the money. I have no fear about the Government being mulcted in damages. I feel that the court can be trusted to do impartial justice in the premises, and I know that the victims of this catastrophe will never receive one dollar more than they are justly entitled to receive. These unfortunate people want their day in court—that it all. Will Congress refuse them this inherent right?

Now, Mr. Chairman, I observe my time is nearly exhausted, but ere I take my seat I want to give notice that I shall keep up the fight for these victims of the General Slocum disaster, in which over 1,000 human lives were lost, until justice is done; and I demand, in the name of fairness and decency, that the Committee on Claims without more delay make a report on my bill, either favorably or unfavorably, so that the Members of this House can take some action of a decisive character in regard to the matter. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print some data as part of my remarks in the RECORD in connection with this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The data referred to is as follows:

REWARD THE SURVIVORS.

A bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. WILLIAM SULZER, of New York, for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster, which occurred in New York Harbor on June 15, 1904. The bill invests the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of the victims of this horrible catastrophe and award to the heirs of the victims and the survivors such damages in the premises as may be just. There is no way by which these poor unfortunate and destitute people can secure any relief except by an act of Congress, and in view of the fact that the Government was primarily responsible for the disaster, the measure of which Mr. SULZER is father should become a law. The bill is as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby invested with jurisdiction and authorized and directed to hear, examine into, determine, and adjudicate the claims of the victims, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, of the General Slocum disaster, which occurred in the East River, New York Harbor, on the 15th day of June, 1904, by the burning of the said steamer General Slocum, and award them and each of them such damages as may be just and equitable in the premises; and the said Court of Claims shall ascertain and fix the amount of all such damages to which each or any of the survivors of the said General Slocum disaster, or their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, or any of those who lost their lives, shall be entitled to, and render judgment therefor in favor of said claimants, their heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns; and the amount of such judgment is hereby appropriated and shall thereupon be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to said claimant or claimants, their executors, administrators, or assigns, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; and the statute of limitation on the part of the Government is hereby waived."

This is a just and reasonable measure and it should receive the support of the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senators. There is plenty of evidence to show that the horrible catastrophe was caused by the negligence of the officials of the United States Government, and it is no more than fair that in return the Court of Claims should have the power to determine the claims in order that these people, many of whom are orphans without any means of support and living on the charity of their friends, may secure relief.

THE SLOCUM SUFFERERS.

A bill for the relief of the surviving victims of the General Slocum disaster, which occurred in New York Harbor on the 15th of June, 1904, has been introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. SULZER, of New York. The bill invests the Court of Claims with jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of the sufferers in the disaster and award to the heirs of the dead and the survivors such damages in the premises as may be meet and just.

The United States Government was primarily responsible for this disaster, by which over 1,000 men, women, and children lost their lives. Under the law there is no redress for the sufferers. The Sulzer bill is the only method by which these unfortunate and destitute people can obtain any relief. It seems to be an eminently fair bill, and its passage is urged by many thousands of petitioners.

[Editorial from the Brooklyn Times, January 15, 1906.]

PASS THIS BILL AT ONCE.

The Organization of the General Slocum Survivors, of which Charles Dersch is president and Fred W. Hotz secretary, has a deep interest in a bill which the Hon. WILLIAM SULZER has introduced into Congress. The aim of the bill, which is officially known as "H. R. No. 2799," is to permit all those who rightly have claims because of the terrible steamship disaster of June 15, 1904, to present their claims to the United States Court of Claims. The bill also appropriates such damages as the court may see fit to award, and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay them.

It is just a year and a half since New York City and the country shrank from reading the details of the General Slocum horror, when more than a thousand women and little children were either roasted to death or drowned in the East River, near one of the city's islands. It was too terrible an occasion to dwell upon. It made strong men pale and women who were in no way connected with the fatality to weep. The story dragged its weary length through the papers for many days, but only the most courageous dared to read the incidents. It took strong men to investigate and to write of what they saw. Reporters who were hardened to serious sights sickened at this task.

At once this generous city sprang to the relief of those who had been the more piteously bereft of means of support. Quite a sum was freely given for immediate relief. But great as was this amount, it was but temporary. It did not suffice to maintain the homes whose breadwinners were gone. It did not recompense those firesides to which the mothers and the children will never return. In no way have the survivors or the near relatives of those who were lost been properly recompensed for the agony endured.

The question which at once arises is, To whom shall these people turn for this aid? Shall it be to the State, to the city, or to the National Government? Without hesitation the Brooklyn Times would declare that it is to the Government at Washington that they should go, as they have, through the instrumentality of the bill which Mr. SULZER has introduced for them. The Government should receive and adjust and pay these claims. The Government is directly responsible for this disaster. The General Slocum was under Government supervision. It was Government inspectors that had passed her powdered-cork life-preservers and had allowed such a floating coffin to ply in these waters. It was Government law which limited the liability of the owners of this vessel, the Knickerbocker Steamship Company, to the value of the burned hulk. It was under Government regulations that this death trap set sail, manned, as she was, for the the most part, by wharf rats devoid of all manly sentiments.

This organization has turned in the right direction for help. Congress is a slow mill in adjusting these matters. But in this case all that is kindly, all that is sympathetic in the hearts of its Members should respond, and respond promptly, to this appeal. H. R. No. 2799 should pass at this session of Congress.

[Editorial from the Washington Post, February 15, 1905.]

AGAIN THE SLOCUM HORROR.

The Boston Post is one of many newspapers that have noted with approbation all the steps that have been taken in the work of reforming the Steamboat-Inspection Service since the Slocum horror exposed its disgraceful and criminal inefficiency. Our Boston contemporary refers to the various bills on this subject recently passed by the House of Representatives, and which will soon become laws, and adds: "The needlessness of the General Slocum disaster will rankle so long as the present generation remains on the stage. It was such a stupendous exhibition of the disregard of human life! And not the least guilty participant in the crime was Uncle Sam."

If the responsibility for that calamity—or for the conditions that produced it—could be located on one, or a dozen, or a hundred men, it might not be possible, under the laws as they existed at the time of its occurrence, to punish them according to their deserts, but they would be almost universally regarded as among the most despicable of human beings. It is true—shamefully true—that "not the least guilty participant in the crime was Uncle Sam;" in other words, the Government of the United States, as represented by a single branch of the public service. Gross betrayal of the confidence of the American people, a people who are always ready to be taxed to any extent needful for the protection of life on our rivers, harbors, coasts, and lakes, was an exasperating feature of that tragedy. Calmly considered in the light of all that has transpired in this connection since that awful slaughter startled the country and shocked the civilized world, it may be set down as the product of the worst betrayal of public confidence, the most wicked default on a public trust, that has ever occurred in our history. And it is scarcely conceivable that any future event will dislodge it from that place.

But the Post regrets the necessity of remarking for the fifth time, and in the interest of justice and fair play, that the country has an indisputable right to information on this subject which has been persistently withheld. It has a right to know whether or not there was any truth in the statement made when the Slocum tragedy occurred to the effect that the inspection service owed its shameful condition to remission of penalties imposed for violations of law. If no remissions were made, let that fact be officially stated, and that will effectually dispose of the matter. But if remissions were made, the country has a right to know when, by whom, to whom, and for what reasons. And in course of time, although it may be a long time, this information will be given out. The zeal displayed in reforming the inspection service is all right, but the mere fact that so much reforming is needed discredits the past of that service. And before the subject is permitted to pass to the rear the Administration should let the country know all about the remission of penalties. Here is a case as to which publicity is the only proper course.

Thousands and thousands of petitions similar to the following, signed by thousands and thousands of citizens from all over the country, have been sent to Congress and are on file in the Committee on Claims:

ORGANIZATION OF THE "GENERAL SLOCUM" SURVIVORS.

[Chas. Dersch, president, 76 First avenue, New York. Fred. W. Hotz, secretary, 70 Bedford street.]

To the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senators of the United States Congress:

GENTLEMEN: We, the undersigned, the committee heretofore duly appointed for the relief of the victims of the General Slocum disaster, by which over 1,000 lives were lost on the 15th day of June, 1904, in the harbor of New York, by the burning of the steamer General Slocum, respectfully urge and request you to vote for, and aid all you consistently can to pass, the bill introduced in the House of Representatives by Mr. WILLIAM SULZER, of New York City, on the 4th day of December, 1905, for the relief or the victims of the General Slocum disaster.

This horrible catastrophe was caused by the negligence of the officials of the United States Government, and the Government is primarily responsible in damages to the victims and their heirs, and the survivors, who were injured and maimed. Under the law these people have no redress except through Congressional action.

This is a just and reasonable measure, and the whole matter can be determined in a spirit of equity by the said Court of Claims.

Under all the circumstances, we respectfully urge Congressional action at this session of Congress, and hope you can see your way clear to give your earnest support to this worthy measure, in order that these poor and destitute people, many of whom are orphans without any means of support, and living on the charity of their friends, may secure some relief from the Government of the United States, the negligence of whose officials caused this horrible tragedy.

Dated, New York, January 3, 1906.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHAS. DERSCH.
FRED. W. HOTZ.
HENRY G. KOEPPLER.
GEO. WUNNER.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move to strike out the last two words, not for the purpose of making any remarks on this bill, but to ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD some remarks made by Mr. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, at St. Louis, which I append.

Before the Missouri League of Republican Clubs, Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, Secretary of the Treasury, speaking on national issues, in part said:

Political parties are indispensable to republics. Formulated political principles believed in, well defined and clearly expressed political policies adherred to, are essential to the perpetuity and progress of the nation. Prominent, if not paramount, among the political evils which confront us, I count the trend toward the obliteration of party lines.

The fatal weakness of our political opponents is their incoherency. They believe nothing; they teach nothing; they have no plans, no policies, no purposes. Enough of them believe in free trade so that their platform in 1892 and again in 1904 specifically declared that protection is robbery of the many for the enrichment of the few, but a sufficient number believe in protection, so that the Wilson-Gorman law, enacted by a Congress elected upon an out and out free-trade platform, provided ample protection for the iron and steel industry, for citrus fruits, and for a score of other articles. The law, as a whole, was as incoherent as the party that enacted it. It was open free trade here and protection there. The pledge of the platform was kept as respects many industries, which were ruined in an hour, and when some industries are ruined no amount of protection will save others.

A tariff law to be successful must be coherent. It must protect, if you please, as does the Dingley tariff law, the man who grows barley, and it must then protect with a higher duty the man who makes malt from barley, and with yet a higher duty him who makes beer from malt, with another increase of duty when bottled. A tariff law that is not built upon principle is a legislative failure, and a party composed of men who do not believe in the principles set forth in their platform is a political failure. It may be occasionally successful at the polls; it may elect its ticket once in a while; it may now and then dominate Congress; it may at long intervals place its standard bearer in the White House, but it can never successfully manage the affairs of the nation. Political principles are everything; men are nothing.

The leaders of all political parties are honest, patriotic, and high minded. The Democratic party, the Prohibition party, the Socialist party, are each dominated by honorable men. A few scamps in a party—and they exist in smaller number in all parties than ever before in our country's history—do not justify universal condemnation any more than a few scamps in a church—and they, too, exist in smaller number, thank God, than ever before in the history of the church—justify its universal condemnation. But a party that believes nothing, has no doctrine, is not built around a principle, is as worthless as a church without a belief.

I knew one such so-called "church" in my State. It was organized by a very reputable gentleman of the legal profession, and its absence of belief was its boast. Its doors swung welcome to those who believed in the divinity of Christ and equally wide to those who denied the miraculous conception. It invited those who believed in the atonement and those who denied the necessity of a Redeemer. Like certain of the opposition parties, it sprang up in protest to some admitted evils and weaknesses of the churches. It was successful for a time in attracting numbers, and it built a fine edifice, but it died of incoherency, for it believed nothing, taught nothing, had no plans, no policies, no purposes. The eloquence of its founder, his sweet spirit, the influence of his blameless life did not make a church. A church presupposes a belief, and a political party ought to presuppose some political principles. It requires affirmative plans, affirmative policies, affirmative aims to carry the nation forward to higher ideals and to grander consummations.

Do not misunderstand me. I am not advocating adherence to party because of party name, regardless of the political principles which it professes, but loyalty to political principles because they are believed to be correct. The independent voter, the man who sees nothing in political parties but the personality of their candidates, may be a good man and a patriotic citizen, but we are in a sad plight when those who believe in nothing in particular and everything in general, and who vote according to the instinct of the hour instead of according to the principles of a lifetime, control our elections. I have no fears for my country so long as the American people think out their plans, formulate their policies, and consistently adhere to them. My fear is of an incoherent, independent, undisciplined aggregation of well-intentioned men following a purposeless though ambitious leader, who promises much impossible of fulfillment, and whose chief argument is an indefinite protest against well-recognized and inherent evils which have existed from the infancy of the race and which will continue while men remain mortal and so long as human nature continues to control the human family.

Permit me to refer briefly to one of the affirmative principles of the Republican party; a principle that was as correct and as capable of definite statement in the days of Thomas Jefferson as in the days of Theodore Roosevelt; a principle that has never been put in operation in this country without bringing prosperity to all our people, and that has never been abandoned without universal ruin. On the historic correctness of these propositions let the Republican party stand or fall.

The Republican party believes in protection to American labor. Originally it was thought that our industries needed protection until they should become established, and that thereafter they could successfully face world-wide competition. It was not then anticipated that adherence to the policy of protection would create a standard of wages fully 50 per cent higher than that of any other country and more than 100 per cent higher than the average standard of the world. Had conditions continued as early protectionists supposed they would, and had all the world opened its markets to all people on equal terms, the expressed thought of the fathers would have been verified in our experiences. Protection, however, has been beneficial in unexpected ways. It has created a scale of wages and established a standard of living to which the outside world is a stranger and renders necessary the continuance of protection or the abandonment of these high standards.

Let me state the principle more clearly. Every industrious citizen is a producer. He may produce a day's work, which he sells in the labor market. He may be a consumer of labor and a producer of farm or of factory products. He may produce exchanges of merchandise or exchanges of credits, or he may produce transportation. Anyone who by his efforts adds to the sum total of our production, or in any way increases the aggregate of our commerce, is a producer. Then, we are all, whether industrious or not, consumers. We consume food and clothes and cover. Therefore we have dual interests. We would like to buy that which we consume as cheap as possible and sell what we produce as high as possible. The man who produces a day's work is interested in high-priced labor, while he who buys labor and produces farm or factory products seeks to buy this labor as cheap as possible and to sell his products as high as possible.

In recognition of these dual interests the two great political parties for many years have appealed to the American people from opposite standpoints. Our opponents appeal to the consumer and insist that all that is essential to make us prosperous and happy is cheap articles of consumption. They say it matters not who produces that which we consume, provided it is cheap. They advocate opening wide the doors of trade, so that we may buy of him who can produce the thing needed at the least possible expenditure for labor, for they insist that all we want is cheap goods. The Republican party, on the contrary, appeals to the producer. It says to the man who has nothing to sell but labor. "It is important to you that wages be high." It says to the farmer and to the manufacturer, "It is important to you that your products find ready market and that they command good prices." The Republican party declares it to be relatively unimportant what price we pay for labor or for the products of labor, provided the wages paid go to our own people and the price of the products of labor go to those who pay high prices for labor. Our opponents say, "Put us in power and we will open wide the doors of trade, so that you can buy the cheapest things in the world's markets." We say, "Put us in power and we will give the American market to the American people." They say, "Put us in power and we will give you the best market in the world in which to buy." We say, "Put us in power and we will give you the best market in the world in which to sell." And you can not have both.

The Republican party, therefore, having for its aim the establishment of high standards of living, which shall make possible all necessaries, most comforts, and some luxuries, has sought from the first to build industries. It has sought to create a ready market for the labor of our people by insuring a ready market for the products of labor. It has never sought to cheapen anything. It has never debased men, nor cheapened the labor of men, nor thrown the products of American labor into open competition with the products of the less-paid labor of other countries.

Listen, and I will give you an illustration of how industries are built, how a market for labor is created by protecting the products of labor, and how good wages are insured by the Republican party. When Mr. McKinley was preparing his tariff law of 1890, he looked over the list of importations to see what was being purchased abroad that our people could produce to advantage. He discovered that large quantities of pearl buttons were being imported. He next inquired if clam shells existed in abundance anywhere in this country. He learned that they were plentiful in the Mississippi River, in the Wisconsin River, in the Arkansas River, and in other places. He therefore put in the McKinley bill a provision to the effect that if any foreign producer desired to sell a dollar's worth of pearl buttons in the United States he must put a little over 25 cents in the Treasury. Section 429 of the McKinley bill placed a small specific duty and in addition an ad valorem duty of 25 per cent on pearl buttons. What was the result? Men purchased button machines. This gave a little employment to the iron miner, to the smelter, and to the machine maker. They then employed men to operate the machines and more men to gather shells. Thus the industry was established, and there is now paid out in wages in the button industry in one little town of 10,000 inhabitants in my State more than three-quarters of a million dollars per annum. Other towns along the river do the same.

What do these men do with this money? They spend it. They spend it for food, for clothes, for lumber. They spend it for necessaries, for comforts, for luxuries, and a little foolishly. What do the farmers who furnish the food do with their share? They spend it also. What for? For clothes for their families. What do those who furnish the clothes do with their share? They pay it out in wages. What do these wage-earners do with it? They again spend it for food and clothes. And thus on and on it goes, blessing everyone it touches and being transferred in blessing still to others.

Take the silk industry. We grow no silk. It is not necessary, therefore, to protect the producer of raw silk. He is not among us. Sometime, by the aid of the Agricultural Department, which is engaged in working out the problem of how this thing and that thing can be grown by us to advantage, we may seek to develop the raw-silk industry. If so, then a tariff duty will be placed on raw silk. Now raw silk comes in free of duty. But the foreign manufacturer of silk must pay into the Treasury from 50 to 75 cents out of every dollar's worth of finished silk product he brings to this country. What is the result? There was imported last year over $60,000,000 worth of raw silk, and there was paid out in wages, in manufacturing this silk into thread and textiles, more than $30,000,000 in wages.

What was done with these wages? They were spent, or, at least, expended. Everybody spends or expends all he receives. The man who owns the factory spends his share, and the laborer spends his also. The manufacturer may expend a part of his share in building another factory, or he may spend it for luxuries. He spends it for something, and though he spend it for a fine estate with macadamized roads and beautiful towers, and fountains, and lawns, and gardens, and greenhouses, and stables, yet it goes for wages, and the people who get it spend it for food and clothes and cover, and on and on it goes, in blessing and still to bless.

So successful has been this plan of building industries that our factories turn out finished products equal in home-market value to the products of all the shops and all the factories of any other three countries on the map.

It is estimated that England, France, and Germany produce an aggregate of $14,000,000,000 worth of manufactured products per annum, of which they consume about 80 per cent and are compelled to look to the outside world for a market for $2,500,000,000. Our shops and factories also produce $14,000,000,000, but so high is our standard of living, so prosperous are our people, that we actually consume 94 per cent and have to look to the outside world for a market for but a fraction over $500,000,000 of manufactured products.

Do you wonder, then, that the ill-paid people of the earth are seeking our shores by the million per annum? More than 50,000 people, representing a score of countries, arrived at our shores during the first three days of last week, to share with us our unequaled pay roll. Shall we now follow the advice of our opponents, and swing ajar our doors for the larger importation of merchandise which we now produce, or shall we rather safeguard ourselves by safeguarding these immigrants, and insure to all the privilege of producing the largest practicable share of that which the American people consume?

There be some who profess alarm at this large influx of immigration. I suggest one sure way of stopping it. Put the Democratic party in control. Immigrants never seek our shores in large numbers when free-trade policies have closed our factories. When millions of our own people are walking the streets, their families begging bread, there is little temptation for the people of other countries, however unfortunate their condition, to turn their faces this way. And be it known that our doors of trade can not be opened to the free admission of competitive merchandise from abroad without closing the doors of the shops and factories where this merchandise is now produced.

William Henry Harrison was elected President in 1840, and following his election a protective tariff law was enacted, which remained in force only four short years. During these years the country prospered as never before, but in 1844 the Democratic party elected James K. Polk, a free trader from Tennessee, President, and George M. Dallas, an avowed protectionist from Pennsylvania, Vice-President. Our opponents, it will be seen, were about as consistent then as they are now. Half protection and half free trade is about their present complexion. In 1846 the so-called "Walker tariff law" was enacted. England also adopted the policy of free trade that same year, and it is generally conceded that English money was freely used in controlling the economic policy of this country.

Do not misunderstand me. It is not claimed that this money was used illegitimately. It is not claimed that anyone was bribed. It is only claimed that it was used in the dissemination of free-trade literature, in the payment of salaries to free-trade writers, and in the payment of legitimate campaign expenses of free-trade candidates for office. I utter no criticism of all this, and I state it simply as a conceded historic fact.

The natural results of this law were not felt for some years. Our free-trade friends point to the first few years following its enactment with manifest pride, seeming to have forgotten that the potato rot, which extended well-nigh over Europe, created an unusual demand for American foods, which was continued by the subsequent breaking out of the Crimean war, while the gold excitement in California took a large number of our people from ordinary industrial pursuits, and that the unexampled inflow of gold greatly contributed to our financial well-being. But these things could not last forever, and the natural, the irresistible, the inevitable results of insufficient tariffs followed in the panic of 1857.

History repeats itself. The eyes of the world are again upon our markets. People who are compelled to find a foreign market for 20 per cent of the products of their factories are not unmindful of the unequaled consumptive capacity of the American people. I shall not be surprised, therefore, at the liberal expenditure of foreign money in legitimate ways to create sentiment in favor of opening our doors for the increased admission of competitive articles. I am not surprised at the subtle sophistry that is being promulgated that, if we will but admit competitive goods from abroad, there will be immediately thrown open to us an unprecedented foreign demand for our food products. It is the old argument which was used in 1846.

Do not misunderstand me. I criticise neither the enterprise nor the method by which it is sought to influence political results in this country. I recognize their appropriateness. Admission to the American market is worth a contest. Entrance to these markets on more liberal terms is worth a well-organized and systematic campaign and the expenditure of much money, and those of our people who fail to comprehend the inevitable result must be excused for lending willing and unrequited service. So while I recognize the conflict that is upon us, and welcome it, too, I must warn the people of Missouri of what is involved in that conflict. They must not forget that the admission of fifty millions additional competitive merchandise takes from American labor the opportunity of producing that fifty millions of products. The production of $50,000,000 of merchandise calls for the expenditure of about $25,000,000 in wages. Should the proposed policy prevail, the men who now receive these wages will then be out of employment, and out of employment means out of the market as consumers of food and every other necessity of life.

Is there a farmer in Missouri with so poor a memory as to have forgotten 1894, when we consumed 45 per cent less wheat per capita than we did in 1892? Is there a farmer in Missouri who does not now feel the difference between the consumption of more than 6 bushels of wheat per capita, as against the consumption of less than 3½ bushels per capita during 1894? Is there a farmer with so short a memory as to have forgotten the effect upon him of the loss in the price of live stock, averaging over $4 for every horse, mule, steer, cow, calf, sheep, and pig between the years 1892 and 1896? Is there a farmer in Missouri who does not now recognize the difference between an average price of $18.34 per head for every horse, mule, steer, cow, calf, pig, and sheep in 1905, as against an average of only $13.41 in 1896—an average gain of nearly $5 per head? There were over 16,000,000 head of live stock sold in Chicago alone during 1905, which netted the farmers tributary to that metropolis an aggregate of very nearly $100,000,000 over corresponding sales ten years before.

Do not misunderstand me. I do not object to increased importations of noncompetitive articles. Our imports were never so large in the aggregate and never so large per capita as now. In 1895 and 1896, when our factories were closed, a million men out of work, and a million families out of bread, our imports were less than $11 per capita. Now, with furnaces ablaze, factories operated overtime, and no man out of employment except from choice, we are importing at the rate of over $15 per capita.

I welcome the importation of the things we do not produce. I welcome the free importation of pig tin, raw silk, crude rubber, and other raw materials which we do not produce and which is consumed in our factories. I welcome, also, the importation of laces and fancy carpets and high-priced rugs and decorated china, and a thousand other articles with which the wealthy of our land vie with each other in filling their palatial homes, the duty on which pays for our battle ships, our public buildings, and our internal improvements. What is a battle ship? What is a public building? Granite in the quarry, iron in the mine, brick and tile in the clay, lumber in the forest are relatively worthless; but mined, quarried, shaped and fashioned, and put together by the hand of man, the battle ship and the building represent labor, and little else.

The Clerk read as follows:

Cologne, Constantinople, Cork, Florence, Huddersfield, Liege, Munich, Odessa, Solingen, Tampico, Zittau, and Zurich, at $600 each, $7,200.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in line 9, page 18, I move to strike out the word "Solingen." It is not in the act which we passed some time ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 9, strike out "Solingen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paying for the feeding and keeping of prisoners in China, Korea, Siam, and Turkey, $9,000: Provided, That no more than 50 cents per day for the keeping and feeding of each prisoner while actually confined shall be allowed or paid for any such keeping and feeding. This is not to be understood as covering cost of medical attendance and medicines when required by such prisoners: And provided further, That no allowance shall be made for the keeping and feeding of any prisoner who is able to pay or does pay the above sum of 50 cents per day; and the consular officer shall certify to the fact of inability in every case.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the last proviso in the paragraph just read for the purpose of finding out something about its meaning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The proviso seems to require prisoners who are confined in foreign prisons, who are financially able, to pay the expense of their own keeping. That is an unusual thing. I have never known a practice of that kind in this country. I never knew one who is serving a sentence in prison to be required to pay the expense of his board and maintenance, and this provision seems to apply only to those who are able to pay. It does not prolong the sentence any of inmates of prisons who are not able to pay the expense of their support. Unless there is some good and satisfactory reason I will insist on the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of extraterritoriality existing in Turkey, the strict laws do not prevail which exist in our own country, and the prisoners who are held there are not held under strict prison regulations. It has long been the custom that if they were able they should pay for their own support. I can not give any actual reason for it, but it has been the practice all along. It is not a strict prison confinement as we understand it, and I think people who could do so have generally been willing to pay for their own maintenance during imprisonment, instead of coming down to 50 cents a day, which I do not believe provides a Delmonico menu.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Is not this a limitation anyhow?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It is a limitation.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Then it is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, it does not occur to me that the gentleman has given any sufficient reason for this peculiar provision. I understand that under the doctrine of extraterritoriality Americans who commit crimes in certain foreign countries are tried in American consular courts, and when found guilty are sentenced to a special prison. The American Government maintains in China and certain other foreign countries special prisons for the incarceration of American convicts, and it authorizees the payment of 50 cents a day for their board and maintenance, and this proviso requires men who have means, who are able to pay the entire expense of their board and maintenance in those prisons, to do so. It might as well require them to pay room rent for their cells. This proviso changes existing law. There is no law requiring anything of this kind to be done. I therefore insist on the point of order.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order, but before he addresses himself to the point the Chair would like to call his attention to public law 140 and ask him whether that applies to this section?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. It does, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is that law?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. This is not a change of existing law. I must say frankly that I can not tell the reason for this peculiar provision. I do not wonder that the attention of the gentleman was called to it. It provides that the consular officer shall certify to the fact of inability; but it is in conformity with the act referred to by the Chair and has been in the bill for many years.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. What is the object of it?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. It is to enable the Government to collect from people who are able to pay.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I submit that this has been appropriated for every year in exactly the same language, and for that reason I submit it is not a change of existing law.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not have in mind the provisions of public act 140 which the Chair inquired about.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Indiana that the appropriation act of last year uses the identical language which is used in this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. In interpreting this proviso in the connection in which it is used, it has reference to the provision contained in the paragraph for maintaining or boarding prisoners or inmates of prisons in the countries named. I think clearly it is confined to the appropriation. It is part of the appropriation itself. The appropriation is made and then the proviso is added that no allowance shall be made for the keeping and feeding of any prisoner who is able to pay or does pay the above sum of 50 cents per day. It directly relates to the appropriation carried in the paragraph. The fact that it has been carried in former diplomatic and consular appropriation bills does not make it permanent law. It is a limitation on the appropriation—that is, it applies to the appropriation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the appropriation made here is of $9,000 for the food of prisoners in certain places. This proviso is distinctly a limitation that no portion of that $9,000 shall be used in certain ways. Now, as I suppose the rule to be, if the appropriation itself is not subject to a point of order, and it is not, a proviso which limits the manner in which it shall be expended is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, upon that question, it is a limitation that is pregnant with affirmative matter.

Mr. PERKINS. Every limitation is that.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is a limitation that requires something to be done that the law does not provide shall be done.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] if he contends that that same proviso when found in an appropriation bill of last year was a limitation or made a permanent law?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was made law for that year, because it related to that appropriation. It would have been subject to a point of order in my judgment, if it had been made.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then it was a limitation on that appropriation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Not necessarily a limitation. It contained legislation and remained in that bill, but a point was not made.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understood the gentleman to say, when occupying the floor previously, that it was a limitation upon the appropriation contained in that bill. If so, it would be a limitation on the appropriation in this bill.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I used that language in the sense that it was tied to the appropriation instead of being a limitation upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that it is a limitation on the office, though not on the money, and sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE AT KOBÉ.

Contribution toward the support of the Seamen's Institute at Kobé, to be paid by the Secretary of State upon the assurance that relief will be afforded by the said institute to indigent American seamen, $25.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, as we have nearly finished the bill I shall take the liberty of moving to strike out the last word, that I may be able to offer a few suggestions in reference to some remarks that were made the other day as to the inadequacy of the salaries paid diplomatic representatives, and also with reference to the suggestions made which stirred the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to unwonted warmth, in reference to the amounts expended by some representatives of our Government. Mr. Chairman, it is true, not only of the diplomatic service, but of every branch of this Government, that there are many who do not find the salary paid sufficient to enable them to continue in it. It is true of Congress. Every session there are Members who retire from this House because they do not feel that their personal interests will allow them to give the time required for the salary which is paid. That, certainly, is to be regretted, but it does not seem to me that this justifies some of the criticism passed with reference to the manner of life followed by the representatives of this Government abroad. It happens that these positions are sometimes held by men of large wealth, and sometimes by those of smaller means. I see no harm; I am unable to see why any criticism should be passed, if any representative of this Government, favored by the possession of large wealth, should expend that in such a way as to him seems fit. Why should anyone criticise if a person, holding any position under the Government, employs his wealth? It may be in renting residences that are rich, that are ancient, that are interesting, in throwing open to those who may visit them treasures of art, in extending a hospitality, enjoyed by all. It seems to me that such conduct helps to add to the beauty of life, does harm to no one, and is open to criticism from no one.

The suggestion was made that as a result others holding similar positions might find themselves embarrassed. If any man holding a position should feel himself embarrassed, should feel himself humiliated, because he was the possessor of less wealth than others who had held it, this would seem to me an indication of a somewhat contracted mind. There is nothing which deserves less respect than the snobbish and servile adulation of large wealth, and, on the other hand, it seems to me that there may be error on the part of those who are unduly disturbed by the presence of that wealth. Any man holding a diplomatic position with the ability to fill it will discharge its duties, living in that manner of life which his means or his salary allow him to follow, entirely undisturbed by the fact that some other man with larger resources may have been able to live in a different, a larger, a more profuse manner. Anyone fit for the office knows that the fact that he is obliged to follow a more modest manner of living does not lower him in the opinion of any man in this land or any other land. He will form his outward life with due regard to the private resources he may possess, undisturbed by the fact that others before him may have been richer or poorer. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the indulgence of the committee for not over two minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that he may have five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PERKINS. Five minutes is more than I shall need. There can not be, it seems to me, a better instance of this and a better illustration that the fears of the gentleman from Kentucky were unduly excited when he thought that a liberal expenditure by any person possessed of large wealth might be an embarrassment to those called to fill a similar position than was furnished within a few years at the Court of St. James itself. The position of minister there was filled, as we all remember, by Mr. James Russell Lowell, not a man of large wealth—a man of small means, compared with many of those who preceded him and who may follow him—yet he filled the position with satisfaction to this Government, with satisfaction to all others with whom he had to deal, with entire freedom from any embarrassment from the fact that richer men had been there before or richer men might follow him, because he recognized that, living according to the standard he was able to, he filled with full ability the requirements of the position. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if anyone holding such a position and so fortunate as to possess large wealth expends this in any way that may be fitting, he neither brings discredit on himself nor discredit on the Government that he represents nor creates embarrassment for any proper man who may be his successor.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, UNITED STATES CONSULATES.

Expenses of providing all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, signs, rent, postage, furniture, statistics, newspapers, freight (foreign and domestic), telegrams, advertising, messenger service, traveling expenses of consular officers and consular clerks, compensation of Chinese writers, loss by exchange, and such other miscellaneous expenses as the President may think necessary for the several consulates and consular agencies in the transaction of their business, $300,000.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill a question. Is this provision for contingent expenses ample for the different consulates, so that consuls themselves will not have to devote any of their own pay to pay expenses?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I will state that this has been increased $20,000. The Department did ask for more, but throughout this bill there have been various increases in clerk-hire allowances which really increase this item very much more, because formerly clerk hire was paid out of this contingent fund, so that it is increased more than $20,000, as appears in this particular item. We had before us the fact that at the present time the contingent fund of the Department is exhausted, and the consuls are paying their own postage, if they wish to perform their duties fully, but I think the Department is satisfied with this amount. Under the conditions that I have already stated, with the increased allowance in the various consulates which have been made in the bill, it really increases this item, because formerly clerk hire was paid out of this item.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman tell me how much increase has taken place in the various parts of the bill; how much do they amount to in the aggregate?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. The whole bill?

Mr. PARSONS. The whole bill. I mean, of course, the increase in the items which formerly came out of this contingent-expense item.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. We increased the contingent fund of the diplomatic service $30,000, and we increased the emergency fund $20,000, if my recollection is correct.

Mr. PARSONS. What did you increase that affect expenses that have to be paid by consuls?

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Well, that is indefinite. The expenses paid by consuls are charged up to the contingent fund and they each have a certain allowance from the Department from that fund, but if the gentleman will look at the allowance, for instance, for clerk hire, Mexico City, it was raised $500; Rio Janeiro, $900; Shanghai, $900, and so it runs through all the bill. All these sums which formerly were allowed came out of the contingent fund, and the raising of these allowances to each consulate for clerk hire is practically a more liberal allowance to this contingent fund.

Mr. PARSONS. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to say a few words on the point raised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARSONS].

I was one of those who believed an additional allowance should be made under this head of the contingent fund. Only a very slight increase was made, whereas $50,000 additional was asked for. I had thought it should be placed at $325,000. It is well known that during the last year the allowances for many of the consulates were cut a certain per cent all along the line on account of the fact that the contingent fund did not contain sufficient with which to pay them. In many instances these consuls had been paying for their own postage. They had made certain contracts, for instance, for a messenger—which was the only help they had to assist at the consulate, having no clerk—and when this order went out reducing their allowances by a certain percentage, in some cases they were obliged to pay these messengers out of their own pockets in order to fulfill their contracts. There has been a good deal of talk of late about consular reform, and when we see that many of the consuls abroad have to pay their own postage in answer to hundreds and thousands of letters that come to them from business men over the country, it seems to me that the last objection that should be made would be an objection to a necessary contingent fund out of which these expenses of the consuls should be paid.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not a fact that there are a very large number of consulates that are not equipped with a typewriter and that therefore they have to write all letters in longhand?

Mr. COUSINS. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I know of some cases—though not many, as I did not visit many of the consulates—but I know of some cases where they did not have even a typewriter for a year or two after they had reached their posts. They had to either purchase them themselves or do without them.

Now, there were some things said day before yesterday in regard to student interpreters, and I think that the discussion of it went on rather jocularly for a time. It was represented that these student interpreters were of no value to the country; that, perhaps, they had been there long enough so that they had long beards, and all that sort of thing. As I stated at that time, the first student interpreters were commissioned in 1902, the balance of them in 1903, and they are all young men yet, and all Americans. Their commissions were provided for in the preceding consular appropriation bill. They accepted those commissions with the agreement that they would give their services to the United States for ten years, if required. These young men have mastered the language, and several of them are now assigned and are doing the work of vice-consuls and deputy consuls at various points in China. I can recall some of them, and I can tell you where they are, and I believe there is no class representing us abroad who are rendering better and more useful service to this country than these student interpreters at $1,000 per year.

I remember that one of them was appointed from my State, and is now doing service as deputy consul at Hangchow. His name is Willard B. Hull, and he is a most estimable young man. I believe he began his course at 18 years of age. There was one appointed, Mr. J. H. Arnold, from California, who is now doing service as deputy consul at Shanghai; another, Mr. Charles Williams, from Ohio, and another, Mr. Albert W. Pontius, from Minnesota, and he is now acting as deputy consul-general at Tientsin.

And these serve as illustrations of what these young men are doing, and of the excellent service they are rendering, and the whole amount they are receiving for such services is but $1,000 per year.

There has been much talk, I said, about consular reform. This is one thing illustrating what can be done in the way of consular reform; better than anything I could cite. Instead of undertaking to pass unconstitutional legislation providing what the President shall do and how he shall exercise a constitutional prerogative which no act of Congress can limit, qualify, or take away, effectual consular reform is for the President himself and the State Department to make such requirements of fitness and ability as will secure the best service. And this commissioning of student interpreters was one of the best beginnings ever undertaken. They were selected from the best class of young men from various States and sent over there, and they studied the language, became efficient, and are doing the service of deputy consular officers, and, as I have said, in some cases of vice-consul-generals.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 18, in order to correct the total.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I ask that in line 10, after the word "each," the word "seven" be stricken out and the word "six" inserted. Also in line 18, after the word "thousand," the word "eight" be stricken out and the word "two" be inserted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 18, line 10, strike out the word "seven" and insert "six," and strike out the word "two" and insert "six;" so that it will read "six thousand six hundred."

In line 18, strike out "eight" and insert "two;" so that it will read "one hundred and twenty-seven thousand two hundred and ten dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CURTIS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 19264) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and had directed him to report the same with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and the bill as amended do pass.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON ENROLLED BILLS AND COMMITTEES ON PENSIONS.

Mr. CASSEL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the following privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the chairman of the Committee on Enrolled Bills be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint an additional clerk to said committee, whose compensation shall be at the rate of $6 per day from and after the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties (which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of said chairman) until the end of the present session; and the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Herman Gauss $1,000, and to D. S. Porter $750 for extra and expert services to the Committees on Invalid Pensions and Pensions, respectively, as assistant clerks to said committees, by detail, and to Clarence E. Gauss $500 for services rendered as assistant stenographer to the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the session, all of which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before that vote is put I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether or not this is a unanimous report?

Mr. CASSEL. It is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman to give the House some explanation as to the necessity for this resolution.

Mr. CASSEL. The Committee on Enrolled Bills always has an additional clerk at this time of the session. They are now away back in their work, and it is necessary to have this additional clerk in order to have their bills prepared for final passage. The other part of the resolution is to pay the clerks for the Pensions Committees for the extra work which they have performed for those committees; and it has always been done. The resolutions are ordinary, and are the same as we have passed each year for them.

The SPEAKER. Is this a separate resolution?

Mr. CASSEL. This is a resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. Has the whole resolution been reported?

Mr. CASSEL. Yes, sir; that is all there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is the usual resolution passed at this time of the session?

Mr. CASSEL. It is.

The question was taken; and the resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 18333. An act granting land to the city of Albuquerque for public purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 18502) to empower the Secretary of War, under certain restrictions, to authorize the construction, extension, and maintenance of wharves, piers, and other structures on lands underlying harbor areas and navigable streams and bodies of waters in or surrounding Porto Rico and the islands adjacent thereto, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. FORAKER, Mr. WETMORE, and Mr. MALLORY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 16472) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post-Office appropriation bill, with Senate amendments, disagree to the amendments of the Senate, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Post-Office appropriation bill, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to move to concur in a certain amendment in the bill, but I have not a copy of the bill with amendments, so as to be able to refer to it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would like to say to the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Tennessee, not on my own behalf, but on that of the leader of the minority, who is absent, that during his absence I can not consent that the gentleman take this unanimous-consent order until the gentleman from Mississippi comes in.

The SPEAKER. There is objection.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I submit the following privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which will be read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill H. R. 16953, entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department," etc., is hereby taken from the Speaker's table, to the end that the Senate amendments be, and hereby are, disagreed to in gross, and a conference be, and hereby is, asked with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and the Speaker be, and hereby is, directed to appoint the managers of the conference without intervening motion.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, upon that I ask the previous question.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 160, noes 41.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 69, answered "present" 18, not voting 140, as follows:

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called, and giving attention?

Mr. WALDO. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not bring himself within the rules.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know if the gentleman from New York, Mr. PAYNE, voted.

The SPEAKER. He did not.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] is entitled to twenty minutes and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is entitled to twenty minutes.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary that I should occupy any time in the explanation of this rule. It has relation to the Post-Office appropriation bill. That bill is now on the Speaker's table, with eighty-three Senate amendments thereto. The purpose of the rule, if adopted, is to take the bill from the Speaker's table, to nonconcur in all of the Senate amendments, and send it to conference. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. DALZELL. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate adopted an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill providing that farmers can buy such boxes as they see fit for rural delivery service.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I will say that I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET].

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, an amendment similar to the one the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] has referred to was adopted, but the character of that amendment, as well as the character of a large number of other amendments carried by the bill, is the justification for sending the bill to conference. The amendment referred to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] would permit any individual patron of a rural route to place at his home any kind of a box, whether half a shoe box or part of a cigar box, and consider that as a proper box, requiring the Government to continue to safeguard and protect it with all the laws, both civil and criminal, which are applicable to the Post-Office Department. I will say that it is necessary to consider a proposition of that kind intelligently.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman believe that farmers throughout the country ought to have the right to determine what kind of a box is satisfactory to them, and should not be required to buy a box made by a certain manufacturer which has the approval of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the difficulty with the gentleman is that there is no such requirement now as that referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. No requirement that he shall buy a certain make of box?

Mr. OVERSTREET. A large number of the new boxes are permitted by the Department, by way of its approval, but the Department does not direct any patron to furnish any particular kind of a box.

Mr. RUCKER. There are some dozen or more boxes from which the patron may select, but the point I make is this, that farmers living throughout the country are satisfied with a box that they themselves can make or can buy, and prefer them rather than to be compelled to select one of those particular boxes approved by the Department.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, that is a matter that requires consideration, and for that reason this bill ought to go to conference.

Mr. RUCKER. One more question. There is another amendment, I understand, that provides that no order shall emanate from the Post-Office Department prohibiting postmasters and rural route carriers from furnishing Senators and Representatives in Congress the names of the patrons of their offices and along their routes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. There is an amendment something along the line which the gentleman has suggested.

Mr. RUCKER. That is the substance of it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That I should say would be the substance of the amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to state to the gentleman that in my opinion the House is practically a unit in favor of that amendment, in order that Members of Congress may get the correct names and addresses of people in their districts for use in the distribution of patronage.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would say to the gentleman, however, that if the amendment he refers to is not modified in some way there would be nothing to prevent a Member of Congress, without any action that is improper on his own part, from turning over that list to any advertising house and enabling that advertising house to use that list for its own purpose. Therefore it would be very unwise, in my judgment, to accept an amendment of that kind without very careful consideration.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman conceives the idea that it is necessary to put a provision in the bill which would prevent Members of Congress from violating the spirit of the law——

Mr. OVERSTREET. But I have not agreed to that proposition. I do not concede that.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the better practice will be to send the bill to conference with these eighty-three sundry amendments, which have resulted in an increase in the bill of a little less than a million dollars, and permit the conferees to consider them carefully and then report to the House.

Mr. RUCKER. I would like to have an expression of opinion from the gentleman, and therefore I will ask him if he does not believe that a large majority of this House favors both the amendment in reference to furnishing Members with the names of patrons of offices and on rural routes and the other amendment in reference to post-office boxes?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The only opinion I would express in answer to the gentleman would be that there is not, in my judgment, 5 per cent of the membership of this House familiar with the amendment, much less in favor of it.

Mr. RUCKER. If that is the gentleman's position, why do you not give us a chance to vote on these propositions?

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I trust this is not coming out of my time——

Mr. RUCKER (continuing). Why do you not give the Members of this House a chance to vote upon them instead of trying to gag us?

Mr. DALZELL. I will yield to the gentleman in charge of the other side of the question. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the House about the Senate amendment which has been discussed by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET]. I introduced a bill in this House, which was referred to the gentleman's committee, to permit the patrons on rural routes to put up boxes in which to receive their mail of either wood or metal, subject to all the rules, regulations, and requirements of the Post-Office Department. Under that bill the Department will have the right to provide that these boxes shall be of certain dimensions; that they shall be placed at certain distances from the road which the carrier travels; that the Department shall have the right to make all regulations so far as convenience of service is concerned. The gentleman from Indiana says there is no law requiring patrons to buy a certain kind of box. Literally that is true, but in practice it is not. When a patron can not buy any kind of a box except one that is approved by the Department, he is prohibited from buying any other kind and is virtually commanded to buy that particular kind. Let us take a practical view of this matter, and inasmuch as I am replying to the gentleman from Indiana I hope to have his attention. Before a route is established there is no need of boxes in that neighborhood, and none are kept for sale. Being no demand, none are kept by the country merchants, and the fact that a large number of boxes have been approved by the Department cuts no figure. Consequently, in every case when a rural route is ordered established, there is not a box in that neighborhood anywhere that can be purchased—not one. There might be a hundred approved varieties, but if there are none of that variety kept for sale, it is just as inconvenient to the patrons to have to order their boxes from a distance, although you have a hundred varieties to select from, as it would be to order if only one variety were approved.

Now, I want to know if it appeals to the judgment and common sense of this Congress to say that the patron has not the right to make for himself or have made by the employment of a near-by tinner such a metallic box or wooden box as he is willing to risk his mail in, subject to such rules and regulations as the Department may require? That my argument is absolutely unanswerable is proven by the action of the Post-Office Department in permitting patrons on star routes to put up just such boxes as they see fit in which to receive their mail that is in all respects just as valuable and as important as that received by them on rural routes. It is just as important that a letter delivered in a box on a star route have Government protection as it is if the same letter is delivered in a rural route box. The sender of a letter to be delivered in a box on a star route certainly has as much right to demand that his letter be put in a Government-approved and protected box as if the same were put in a box on a rural route. To contend otherwise is too absurd to be dignified by the name of argument.

You can not put a registered letter, a special delivery letter, or a pension letter in a rural mail box. In other words, mail about which there is any indication of value can not be put in the rural box. Under the ruling of the Department five families can use the same box. Under the present regulation they do not have to be locked. Five families getting their mail in one box is the very thing to cause neighborhood difficulties and troubles. Why not let these five families put up just such boxes as they are willing to accept their mail in?

The idea that the farmers in this country have got so little self-interest and so little common sense that they will not put up a box that will sufficiently protect their mail is ridiculous. A man so ignorant as that will not get any mail. A man that is trifling and good for nothing to the extent that he will not protect that which is his own will not get any letters to protect. But it is the desire of the Department to get power and hold on to it, even though in little things. I say, let the American citizen who votes for you and votes for me have the right to manufacture his own box or get his neighbor to do it. I might be a mechanic, a tinsmith, or a blacksmith, and be able to make the best box possible, but I could not use it, because I can not send that box to Washington, D. C., to have it approved by a Department officer that wishes to take a hand in my private domestic affairs.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand that in a bill the gentleman has introduced it is provided that the boxes made by the patrons are to be subject to the regulations of the Department?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, sir.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the amendment that has been added in the Senate that provides for no regulation whatsoever?

Mr. SIMS. I know it does not, but we can amend the Senate amendment either in the House or in conference.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then you are in favor of sending the bill to conference, so as to have it perfected?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; if the bill is sent to conference, let the conference committee take it up and perfect it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman, if it did not go to conference, would it not be possible in the House, when the matter came before it, to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment that would perfect it as he desires?

Mr. SIMS. Yes, indeed. I wanted to ask that it be concurred in with an amendment. At the time I asked the question I thought that part of my bill was in the Senate amendment, and did not know it was not until it was pointed out to me, but that part may be put in, if necessary, either in the House or in conference, and I am discussing this matter in order that the House may understand it and see the importance of it. I do not care where it is perfected, so it is done; but it is evident from the argument made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] that he is opposed to it, and I wanted the House and the people who think the farmers have sense enough and self-interest enough to protect their own mail to give them an opportunity to do it. To-day routes are being refused because 75 per cent of the patrons of the routes do not in advance procure approved boxes. Seventy-five per cent of the iron or steel material out of which these approved boxes are manufactured is made by the steel trust. Why force the people, through legislation or through regulation, to patronize a trust in procuring boxes for their private mail? There is no combination in the manufacture of the boxes that I know of, but self-interest never fails to take hold of good opportunities to help itself. I would like to see a Member of this House go before his farmer constituents and tell them "I will not trust you to make or have made a box that will protect your own mail."

I would like to see him go back home and get the vote of any man of whom he expressed such an opinion. If you will have a yea-and-nay vote on this proposition, it will carry three to one. I am perfectly willing that the conference committee shall take hold of this and perfect it, but I do want the House to know the object and purpose of the amendment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COUSINS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to have a minute more to answer a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. COUSINS. What standard do you propose to fix as to the kind of wooden box that can be used? Any definite standard?

Mr. SIMS. Let the Department by regulation provide what kind of a box is to be used—that is, as to size, length, manner of opening, and convenience of same to road traveled by carrier and everything of that kind, but permit the patron to have made and put up, of either wood or metal, such box as he desires, in compliance with the general regulations of the Department, and do not force patrons to send often hundreds of miles to some manufacturer and pay for a patented article several times as much as it would cost if made at home and added to the price express or freight charges.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this bill has come back from the Senate to the House with certain Senate amendments incorporated in the bill. If this rule is adopted, the bill will go into conference without any chance of being considered in Committee of the Whole. If the committee had an opportunity to consider some of these amendments—two or three of them—so far as I am concerned, it seems to me there would be no objection to the plan now proposed; but I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the House is in favor of at least two Senate amendments, which are important to the country and to the membership of this House, and we should have an opportunity to say so and not be compelled to submit unconditionally to the judgment of the conferees.

One of the amendments to which I refer reads as follows:

Provided, That patrons on all rural free-delivery mail routes now established or that may hereafter be established may put up, for their individual use, boxes constructed of such material, either wood or metal, as they desire, and that carriers on all rural mail routes shall deposit mail in such boxes in like manner as in boxes now in use.

Now, the fact is this: In my district, which is a rural district, there are to-day thousands of farmers who are using boxes purchased and put in use before this post-office order went into operation. Under the new dispensation these boxes must be torn down and every one of these patrons, these people all along the routes, must buy new boxes which conform to the post-office regulation, costing the people in my district alone a very large sum of money. The same is true in very many other districts. Now, it does seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman who has charge of this bill ought to allow the House, in Committee of the Whole, to consider this matter, and if a qualification or limitation is necessary, make it, but leave the bill so as to permit these people all over the United States to put up such boxes, under proper regulation, as they see fit to use. They should not be required to send to some great manufacturing center and buy a certain make of box.

The other amendment to which I referred a moment ago is one which, it seem to me, no gentleman on this floor will oppose, though I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] to say that not 5 per cent of them would favor it, a statement which I think entirely misrepresents the judgment of the House.

The amendment is as follows:

The Post-Office Department shall make no regulation which will prevent any postmaster or any rural-route carrier from furnishing a Senator from a State the names of those to whom he delivers mail in that State, nor to a Representative or Delegate the names of those to whom he delivers mail within the district or territory so represented.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say to this House that I have been informed by a number of gentlemen that they now get mailing lists from the postmasters in their districts. It seems to me every gentleman knows, when he applies to a postmaster for such a list, that he violates, if not the law, at least a regulation of the Post-Office Department, which might be a serious thing to the postmaster if known. The postmaster who furnishes any one of us a mailing list from his office or a rural-route carrier who furnishes a list of the patrons on his route violates a postal regulation. This amendment simply permits—does not require—but permits a carrier or a postmaster to furnish Senators and Representatives or Delegates in Congress such a list. The gentleman suggests that without some restriction these lists might be turned over to some mail-order house. I for one never dreamed of the possibility of such a thing. I have heard elsewhere Members of Congress accused of almost all sorts of wrongdoing, but this is the first time that I have heard it suggested on this floor by one who is a Member himself that his colleagues would for pay or without pay wantonly violate the spirit if not the letter of the law. I sincerely hope the conferees on the part of the House will agree to these two amendments.

There can be no earthly reason suggested by any man here or elsewhere why the postmaster, who will gladly do it for his own convenience, or the rural-route carrier, who for the same reason would gladly give us this information, should not be permitted to do it.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] to use some of his time, unless he intends to close in one speech.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not think there will be more than one speech on this side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the reason I am opposed to this rule, and rules of a similar kind, is because I believe they take the government of this House away from the individual Members and place it in the hands of the governing machine of the House. Now, I admit it is necessary to have a governing machine. We must have some kind of a business machine, but that machine ought to confine its business to the question of determining what shall come before the House and the disposition of business. It ought not to attempt to come in here by special rules and take away from the individual membership of this House the substance of legislation, the facts of legislation, and put them into the hands of a conference committee or any other committee that goes behind closed doors and brings a final report to this House, which the House must take as a whole or reject as a whole, on which the House is not enabled to use its individual judgment as to the various items made up in the conference report. The people of the United States send the individual Members to Congress here to exercise their judgment, not the judgment of the Speaker, not the judgment of the Committee on Rules, not the judgment of a conference committee. Now, what effect has this rule upon the business of the House? If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] had not presented this rule to the House, it would have been the duty of the Speaker to refer this Post-Office bill back to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There is new matter in the bill; matter that has not as yet been considered by the membership of this House; matter that the Members of this House have a right to consider. It would have gone to that committee; been thrashed out in committee. They would have come before the House, presented their report for the consideration of the House, and then, item by item, the House would have considered the question, agreeing to such of the Senate amendments as they thought were wise, disagreeing to the others, and then finally the bill would have gone to conference. But instead of that the House, by adopting this rule, blindly sends every bit of the legislation that the Senate has put on this bill, unconsidered, without any chance for consideration by the Members of this House, back to a conference committee, where it will be determined behind closed doors.

Mr. DALZELL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. DALZELL. Does the gentleman think we could have considered the bill in the manner he suggests without having at least eighty-three roll calls?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I do not know about that. The gentleman pleads for time. The membership of this House are paid by the year. We are not paid by the day. I should like as well as any Member of this House to go home at an early date, but if the business of the country requires us to stay here until August, in order that we may properly consider it, the membership of this House ought to stay here and do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to that proposition. I do not complain of any proper use of time, but of the waste of time. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman well knows that this side of the House have no desire to waste time. [Laughter.] But there are times that come in a legislative body when the minority can have no hearing unless it puts its protests on the records of the House, in the only way that the rules of the House permit it to do so. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to address myself to the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The time on that side is exhausted.

Mr. DALZELL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has fourteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Pennsylvania to yield me some time. I was in the Committee on Ways and Means——

Mr. DALZELL. Well, Mr. Speaker, if I had not been here, I would have been there also. I can not yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I imagine that everything has been said on that side that can be said, and said as well as if any other gentleman on that side had said it. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a suggestion that, I think, from his standpoint was an unfortunate one. From ours, it was a good one. He said he desired to have the business of the House in the hands of the individual Member. Well, we have got the business of the House pretty well in the hands of the individual Member, and I think it is about time that the aggregate began to move, and not the individual factor. There are here some eighty-odd amendments to this bill. A great many of them are unimportant, most of them are unimportant, but, as I understand from the chairman of the committee, some of them are very important. Are we to have one hundred and sixty-odd roll calls on the question of the disposition of these eighty-odd amendments?

We have not missed an opportunity to have a roll call for the last two weeks that I can remember of, and there is nobody who can give any assurance that we are to have any better condition. What is the practical result? How many of the Members of this House know anything about all of these eighty-odd amendments? Very few. The proposition therefore is to send this bill to a committee of conference, a great and important factor in legislation, and let that committee of conference sift out these amendments and see how many of them they can agree to in both Houses, and then come back here. In that event we will be exactly in the condition that the gentleman wants to be in, excepting that we shall have the result of a committee, one side representing the views of the House and the other side representing the views of the Senate. In that way we will try to go forward. I am not hurrying to the close of this session of Congress. I think we can stay on here very profitably and let the galleries be entertained by this byplay that we have been having here for a week or two, this coercive measure to coerce the majority of this House into doing what they have not yet got ready to do. There is no better way to exhibit the impotence of effort than to let the party which is trying to demonstrate it demonstrate the impotence themselves. When they get tired of that, I think we will go forward. What I want to protest against is the suggestion that anybody has been gagged here. Why, this has been the customary course of things ever since I was a Member of Congress. Scarcely ever do we have any debate or consideration of individual items or disagreement upon a great supply bill. It is unwise to spend time of the House in considering all of the small amendments. It is far better to have the estimate of the skilled conference committee to eliminate the unimportant and bring back again the important amendments. That has been the practice of the House always. It has been practiced by both sides of this House. The Democratic side of this House got away from that proposition once and brought in here a bill with 600 amendments, and it was not an appropriation bill either; and instead of giving us a committee on conference that we begged for, they gave us forty minutes, under a motion to concur, twenty minutes on this side and twenty minutes on the other side, and voted en bloc, and created a tariff bill, created a bill of "infamy and dishonor."

Mr. OLMSTED. And of disaster.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And of disaster. I accept the supplementary suggestion. And now because this side of the House desires to go ahead, gentlemen on the other side are agonizing over each individual amendment to the bill. I hope that the rule will be sustained. It is the only possible way that we can get along with the business. We have not created the necessity. The necessity has been created by others, and we are trying as well as we can to meet the emergency and get rid of the effects of the condition we find ourselves in.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Speaker, I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 150, noes 56.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 154, nays 69, answered "present" 23, not voting 135, as follows:

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Journal stands approved.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF NEW HAVEN.

At a stated meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, held on Monday evening, May 28, 1906, upon the recommendation of the committee on legislation the following preambles and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas for many years the political conditions in Santo Domingo have been such as to render unstable commercial enterprises there, and the customs department of the Republic has been so conducted and mismanaged that the business interests of this country can not safely either export or import goods because thereof; and

"Whereas on account of the debts and obligations owing to foreign countries by the Dominican Government and its citizens there is danger of still further disturbances to our commercial relations, not only with this, but with those countries to whom these debts and obligations are owing; and

"Whereas there is pending before the Senate of the United States a treaty which is designed to place upon a more satisfactory basis the collection of the tariffs and revenues of the Dominican Republic and the settlement and adjustment of its affairs with all its creditors; and

"Whereas the ratification of this treaty makes for the welfare of this country and of the Dominican Republic as well, and for the betterment of trade conditions with it: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Chamber of Commerce of New Haven, That this body hereby approves the ratification of the treaty pending in the Senate of the United States between this country and the Dominican Republic providing for the collection and disbursement by the United States of the custom revenues of the Republic; and it is further

"Resolved, That the secretary of this chamber be, and he is hereby, instructed to send copies of these preambles and resolutions to the Senators of this State in Congress, with the request that they favor the ratification of the pending treaty."

JAMES T. WELLMAN.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5373) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James T. Wellman, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

On request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADVERSE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY BILL S. 5373.

The Committee on Military Affairs, which has had under careful consideration the bill (S. 5373) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of James T. Wellman, has had the same under careful consideration, and hereby reports it back to the Senate adversely, recommending its indefinite postponement.

James T. Wellman appears to have enlisted in the Regular Army in September, 1864, and deserted in April, 1865. This is wholly different from enlistment in a volunteer regiment. Many young men who were away on furlough or on special details when the war ended did not appreciate the importance of rejoining their regiments and being regularly mustered out. Such men were, therefore, borne on the rolls as deserters; but although technically such, in many cases they were morally innocent. In cases of this sort your committee frequently reports favorably bills to correct the record. But when a man has enlisted in the Regular Army he owes the Government service whether in war or peace, and to overlook the desertion of a regular soldier would establish a very dangerous precedent and open the door to endless applications for correction of Regular Army records, which would be most detrimental to the service.

For the above reasons your committee feels that the bill (S. 5373) should be indefinitely postponed.

WILLIAM R. VAN NOTE.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 421) to correct the military record of William R. Van Note, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

On request of Mr. LODGE, and by unanimous consent, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADVERSE REPORT TO ACCOMPANY BILL S. 421.

William R. Van Note is shown by the record to have been mustered into service September 21, 1861, in Company D, Twenty-ninth Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and the muster rolls of October 31, 1862, report him absent a paroled prisoner of war, of which the records of prisoners of war furnish no information. According to his own story, he was taken prisoner at Lawrenceburg, Ky., was paroled, and went home ill. He never reported himself in any way to his regiment or to the authorities at Washington, but under the name of Riley Higginbotham, two years after his desertion, he was drafted in Michigan, examined, and held to service on October 4, 1864. This shows that his health, which he alleges as the reason for not rejoining his Indiana regiment, had been reestablished. In the Michigan regiment to which he was drafted, he served until the end of the war, and was then mustered out with an honorable discharge. The facts disclosed by this summary do not seem to your committee to warrant a correction by law of the record of William R. Van Note.

For the above reasons your committee feels that the bill (S. 421) should be indefinitely postponed.

UMATILLA INIDAN RESERVATION LANDS IN OREGON.

Mr. FULTON. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6300) providing when patents shall issue to the purchasers of certain lands in the State of Oregon, to report it favorably without amendment. It is a short bill and local in its character. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that all persons who have heretofore purchased any of the lands of the Umatilla Indian Reservation in the State of Oregon and have made or shall make full and final payment therefor in conformity with the acts of Congress of March 3, 1885, and of July 1, 1902, respecting the sale of such lands, shall be entitled to receive patent therefor upon submitting satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Interior that the untimbered lands so purchased are not susceptible of cultivation or residence, and are exclusively grazing lands, incapable of any profitable use other than for grazing purposes.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN G. FONDA.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask a favor which I have not asked before during this session. I should like to call up the bill (S. 6240) granting an increase of pension to John G. Fonda. The beneficiary is 85 or 86 years old, and is absolutely without funds for a living.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with an amendment, in line 8, before the word "and," to insert "and brevet brigadier-general United States Volunteers;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John G. Fonda, late colonel One hundred and eighteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and brevet brigadier-general United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CANAL BETWEEN PUGET SOUND AND LAKE WASHINGTON.

Mr. PILES. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6329) authorizing James A. Moore or his assigns to construct a canal along the Government right of way connecting the waters of Puget Sound with Lake Washington, to report it favorably with amendments, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to have the first three or four lines read again.

The Secretary read as requested.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BACON. I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill whether this canal is to be constructed by a company or by an individual.

Mr. PILES. The bill provides for its construction by James A. Moore, a private individual, or his assigns. It is a matter where the county of King, in which the canal is to be constructed, will donate about $500,000 to the Government. The bill gives authority to construct a canal across the right of way, which the people of King County presented to the General Government some years ago.

Mr. BACON. As I understand the purport of the bill, it is simply to gain the consent of the Federal Government, so far as that consent is necessary as to navigable waters.

Mr. PILES. To construct a canal from Lake Washington to a connection with Lake Union in the northern part of the city of Seattle, and thence through Salmon Bay to a connection with the waters of Puget Sound, a distance of about 6 miles all told, land and water.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Committee on Commerce will be stated in their order.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the words "ship canal," to insert:

Not less than 25 feet in depth and with a bottom width of not less than 60 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 5, after the words "timber lock," to insert:

Of not less than 600 feet in length and 72 feet in width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 11, after the words "United States," to insert:

Which shall include provision for the discharge of waters from Lakes Union and Washington and afford adequate protection against claims for damages for changing the level of Lake Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, after the word "jurisdiction," to insert:

And the said Secretary of War may compel the execution of a sufficient bond by the said James A. Moore, or his assigns, insuring compliance with the provisions and conditions imposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 24, after the words "United States," to insert:

But the said James A. Moore, or his assigns, shall operate and maintain in suitable condition the said canal and lock after completion for a period of three years to the satisfaction of said Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers of the United States, free of cost to the United States, and from charges of any kind whatever, and free from the payment of all tolls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill, but, as I gathered from the reading, there is no incorporation by the bill or the grant of any corporate power; it is simply permission to use the waters where such permission is required on account of those waters being navigable. Am I correct?

Mr. PILES. That is correct. The bill simply gives the consent of the United States to the construction of a canal along the right of way which the people of that county themselves gave to the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. MORRIS.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3521) to correct the military record of Thomas J. Morris, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

WISCONSIN FOREST RESERVE.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4284) granting to the State of Wisconsin the residue of unappropriated and unreserved public lands within said State as an addition to the State forest reserve of said State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

BUILDINGS FOR EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000,000 for the acquisition in foreign capitals of proper sites and buildings which shall be used by the embassies and legations of the United States, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

GAZETTEER OF THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound in the form of the edition of 1902 (S. Doc. 280, 57th Cong., 1st sess.) 5,000 copies of the Gazetteer of the Philippine Islands, revised to January 1, 1906, with suitable maps and charts, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department, and 1,000 copies for the use of the Philippine Commission.

REPORT ON ALASKAN SCHOOLS, ETC.

Mr. TELLER. I submit a resolution of inquiry. I ask to have it read and considered.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish the Senate with a copy of any communications received from the Commissioner of Education commenting upon, or in reply to, the report of the investigation made in 1905 by Special Agent Frank C. Churchill, regarding the condition of educational and school service and the management of reindeer service in the district of Alaska, the same to be attached to and printed with the report of Special Agent Frank C. Churchill, which was called for by the Senate in session May 31, 1906.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yesterday I offered a resolution substantially the same, which was agreed to, asking the President to communicate that report to the Senate. I think, if the Senator will look at the RECORD, he will see that it covers the point.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator from New Hampshire introduced a resolution calling for Mr. Churchill's report, and I am asking for the reply of the Commissioner of Education to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, I beg pardon.

Mr. TELLER. So as to have the two together.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think that is very proper. I thought it was the same report.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

APPEALS IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15434) to regulate appeals in criminal prosecutions.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert a substitute, which was read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TELLER. That is a class of bills that I do not think should be passed in the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will lie over.

PUBLIC LAND LEASES IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 18600) to amend section 10 of the act of Congress approved June 21, 1898, to make certain grants of land to the Territory of New Mexico, and for other purposes, to report it favorably without amendment. This is a House bill, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask if it is the unanimous report of the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I will say to the Senator that this bill is the existing law with some slight exceptions. Under existing law the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease lands in New Mexico in areas not exceeding 640 acres. It is found that owing to the character of the land there the Department can not make any leases; that nobody wants them. It is proposed by the bill to allow the Secretary, in his discretion, to lease them in larger areas than 640 acres. That is all there is to the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is it a unanimous report by the committee?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. It is a unanimous report by the committee.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to inquire if there is no limit in the bill upon the area which the Secretary of the Interior may lease?

Mr. HANSBROUGH. No; there is no limit. It is supposed that the Secretary——

Mr. SPOONER. I am not in favor of giving unlimited power in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. I think it had better go over, that we may look at it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under objection, the bill will lie over. It will be placed on the Calendar.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 16953) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes, and asking a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PENROSE. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, that the request for a conference by the House be granted, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. PENROSE, Mr. DOLLIVER, and Mr. CLAY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 19264. An act making appropriation for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PROPOSED ISLE OF PINES INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to call up the resolution submitted by me on a former day, which went over by consent, and is on the table, subject to call.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN March 22, 1906, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed by the Chair, with instructions to make diligent and careful examination into the condition of the people of the Isle of Pines before and since the enactment of the law known as the "Platt amendment" to the Army appropriation bill, approved the 2d day of March, 1901, and up to the time of the execution of this order and their report thereon.

Such inquiry shall include the form of the so-called "government de facto" in said island, its officers, and by whom appointed, and the manner in which such government has been conducted by those who claim or have claimed to be in authority there since the Army of the United States was withdrawn from the island of Cuba and the government of that island was turned over to the Congress and people of Cuba.

The committee shall inquire and report whether under such government in the Isle of Pines any official abuses or oppressions have occurred with reference to the people of that island affecting their liberties, their persons, or their schools, their churches, their sepultures, their taxation, their employment or vocation, their property of any description, the registry of their land titles or wills or other conveyancies, their intercourse and trade on the island, or with other ports or places, or with shipping engaged in the trade of the island.

They will inquire and report in respect of any alleged judicial proceedings, civil or criminal, conducted or entertained by any judge, magistrate, or alcalde acting under the laws of Cuba, against any of the inhabitants of the Isle of Pines, resulting in their imprisonment or amercement in fines or forfeitures, and of the places at which such trials were had, and as to the removal of such defendants, by force or compulsion, to any place in the island of Cuba to answer such accusations or prosecutions. And also whether the alleged judicial officers so employed in such proceedings were appointed by the Government of Cuba or of any department thereof.

Said committee will further inquire and report as to the number of American citizens that were residing in the Isle of Pines at the time when the Government of Cuba was turned over to the Congress and people of the Republic of Cuba and before that time, and when the immigration of such citizens into said island first begun.

They will further ascertain and report as to the progress of such immigration, and the classes of people who settled in the island as seekers and builders of permanent homes or places of residence, and the number of such citizens who now reside in the Isle of Pines as permanent settlers; and also what increase or decrease of population and of what citizenship, respectively, has taken place in that island since the evacuation of Cuba by the Army of the United States.

The committee will also examine into the condition of the island as to agriculture, fruit growing, and the extent to which the immigrants from the United States are landowners and cultivators, and whether their crops, orchards, and farm productions, such as cattle, hogs, and poultry, are becoming productive and prosperous.

They will also give descriptions of the topography of the island, its waters and water courses, and its coasts, bays, inlets, and harbors, with reference to navigation; and its roads and bridges and by whom constructed and paid for; its forests and their value; the healthfulness of the island, and the character and conduct of the citizens of the United States who reside there, and, generally, any facts that will inform the Senate as to all material facts concerning the duty of the Government toward the safeguarding, protection, and regulation and control of its citizens who inhabit the Isle of Pines.

2. Said committee is empowered to visit the Isle of Pines, or to designate a subcommittee to visit the same, and to send for persons and papers. Oaths to witnesses may be administered by any member of the committee or subcommittee.

3. The committee is empowered to appoint a secretary, a stenographer, a typewriter, and a sergeant-at-arms, and to pay them their compensation at the rate prescribed by law.

The necessary allowances for travel and board of the committee and its officers and for attendance and the mileage and attendance of witnesses shall be paid on proper vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The committee may sit during the sessions of the Senate or during its vacations and at any place in the United States or in the Isle of Pines.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator from Alabama yield that I may call up the bill which was not finished yesterday?

Mr. MORGAN. How long will that bill take?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can not say, but I do not think it will take very long. It was under consideration for some time yesterday.

Mr. MORGAN. Unless some definite time could be fixed, I can not consent. If a definite time is fixed that the bill will occupy, then I would know whether I would have the opportunity to present this resolution before the Senate to-day?

Mr. LODGE. What is the status of the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is noted upon the record that it went over on a former day subject to the call of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HALE. It evidently ought to be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I make that motion.

Mr. MORGAN. The motion is to refer it.

Mr. HALE. To refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I do not think a matter of this magnitude, with a treaty pending, should be passed upon here without the action of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very glad the motion has been made, as it brings the subject directly in review before the Senate.

Mr. President, I propose now to proceed with my observations upon the resolution.

I offered the resolution in the Senate at the request of a number of people in the United States, and also in the Isle of Pines, which I think is a part of the United States. I have many of their letters here. Some of them I have not preserved.

There has been and is very great solicitude on the part of the people concerned in the Isle of Pines and on the part of many thousands of people who are not concerned in the Isle of Pines to have some rational, honest, just settlement of the question that has taken hold of the public mind in a very earnest way that can not be suppressed.

The matter has been before the Senate in the form of treaty negotiations for three years. The Senate has been very reluctant even to consider the question, it appears. I desire now to bring to the attention of the Senate reasons why we should have what I will call official and authentic statements in regard to the situation of the people in that island, and of the laws that are obtaining there, and also of certain alleged abuses of those laws on the part of the Government of Cuba.

It may be proper for me to premise by saying that the elder members of this body who have been here for several years and who were here during the struggle for the independence of Cuba know that there is no man in this body who was more devoutly concerned in the efforts to bring to the Cuban people the relief that they claimed against the Spanish Government than I, and that I have always been a friend of that island and of its people, and am to-day.

But, Mr. President, above the people of Cuba or any other people in the world I am the friend of American citizens. In this matter there is presented a controversy between the Government of Cuba on one side and the people of the United States on another side which requires to be settled in some friendly and proper way. Otherwise it will aggravate itself. I do not mean that it will be aggravated. It will aggravate itself into a condition that will bring very serious consequences upon both countries—Cuba and the United States.

I think that I may properly say that the present Administration of the Government of the United States is antagonistic to this claim of the people of the United States; that instead of throwing its embracing and protecting arms around these people it antagonizes them in a very severe and in a very unjust and unlawful way. That is my view of the situation at present, and I think I shall be able to demonstrate it as being true.

Now, that treaty is before the Senate in executive session. I do not propose to enter into any discussion of the merits or terms of that treaty, yet it has been published, and the world at large has taken the liberty of discussing it in the most unlimited way.

That treaty, Mr. President, has been the first occasion since I have been in the Senate of the United States when the diplomatic department of the Government has arrayed itself directly and distinctly against a very large and a very respectable body of American citizens. This is a lamentable condition, for which I am sure I am in no way in the world responsible. I have tried in every way I knew how to bring a reconciliation between the Government of the United States and its own people upon this subject, and I am here to-day for that purpose. I am not here for the purpose of launching any material or fuel for political campaigning. If I felt that the opportunity was very great, as it probably may be, and is to take that course in this controversy, I would hesitate to do it, because these are questions that belong more properly to the jurisdiction of the Senate of the United States than of any other body in the Government. The Senate has the exclusive jurisdiction of considering and ratifying treaties, and it is also a representative political body of very great importance.

I have been among the Senators on this side of the Chamber and on that side of the Chamber for days and days together, petitioning, arguing, and trying to persuade them that this resolution be allowed to pass without discussion. It has recommended itself so thoroughly to the judgment, wise discretion, and forecast of the Senate that I can not doubt that it will pass this body. Yet I have not attempted to ascertain by a count or anything like it whether it has the strength to pass this body or not.

Many of the gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have agreed with me that the resolution ought to pass this body without discussion, that the facts which lie behind it and support it ought not to be brought through discussion to the sharp attention of the people of the United States. Others, however, for reasons that, of course, are best known to themselves, probably reasons derived from suggestions from the Administration, demand that there shall be no such resolution passed; that there shall be no inquiry into the existing conditions in the Isle of Pines; that these people whose petitions have come here shall not be heard; that they shall be dealt with as if they were outlaws and vagabonds without anybody to care for them or to protect them in the United States Congress.

I think if gentlemen find themselves driven upon that line of discussion they will become satisfied before we get through with the fact that, from the presentation of the case as it appears, they have made a wide mistake in joining issue with those people upon the conditions existing in the Isle of Pines and in Cuba.

I am here now, Mr. President, to present this resolution as a peacemaker, a measure of reconciliation, a measure that will lead to the adjustment of very severely antagonized and disputed rights claimed by the people of the United States, and what I conceive to be very unjust, very arrogant, very unlawful pretensions on the part of the Government of Cuba, that friend of mine for whom every pulsation of my heart beats in kindness. But I can not afford to stand here and see the little remnant of Spanish arrogance that remains in Cuba dictate wrong and injustice and imprisonment in the penitentiary, and the like of that, contrary to the laws of the United States and contrary to the laws and the constitution of Cuba, upon honest, just, and law-abiding men. I can not afford to do that. If those people insist upon pushing matters to extremities against just and upright people of the United States, they will find themselves mistaken.

The first paper to which I will call attention is a list of between 1,900 and 2,000 people in the Isle of Pines, which has been compiled by a very respectable committee of that island on personal examination from house to house, setting forth a census of those people in the Isle of Pines. This census, I think, contains over 1,900 names, and yet this is only a part of it. Another part of it was mailed to me from the Isle of Pines, as I am well assured, and robbed out of the mail. Robberies of mails between here and Cuba are very frequent. This census list gives the names of all of the different landowners and settlers in the Isle of Pines. There are forty-one pages of the paper that I hold in my hand. The name of each person is given—for instance, "William Flint, Spencer, Iowa; number of family, 7; average of land owned, 300 acres; acres improved, 40," and so on. The list goes through with every American citizen in the Isle of Pines.

It was a troublesome matter to get up. It was expensive. It has been honestly taken by three gentlemen as respectable as sit in this Chamber, for that matter, so far as the question of respectability is concerned; but it was interrupted by arrests by Cuban officeholders in the Isle of Pines for undertaking to take this census. The taking of this list has been considered a very grave offense against the Government and the people of Cuba, and members of the committee have been arrested and carried before officers for daring to go around and take a list of their own people for the information of the Congress and of the people of the United States.

Mr. President, I will not make the motion now, but at the proper time I will ask that this list and the one that has been robbed out of the mails, if I can get hold of it, may be printed for the use of the Senate and for the use of any committee that may be sent down there to examine into this subject to ascertain whether it is true. If it is true, it is a very important document. It speaks of the actual facts in regard to this entire transaction in a very thorough and honest way. These facts themselves, if there were no other facts in this case, would show that there are there in the Isle of Pines, as estimated, between 1,800 and 2,000 of the citizens of the United States, who have gone to the Isle of Pines in good faith, bought property, and in every respect have acted without any thought of covin or fraud or any matter of a dishonest kind, whose good faith is as perfectly sincere as that of any settler who ever went from the East out to the broad plains of the West and took up his homestead. These people are there to-day. At the time when the treaty was negotiated, three years and more ago, there were not more than 400 or 500 of them there, and since that time they have built up that country until there are, I suppose, at least 1,800 of them, and perhaps 2,000. I can not get the figures accurately, because I can not get hold of the papers that have miscarried and have failed to reach me.

Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to this important matter, as I conceive. In passing upon this treaty, under which we propose to sell the Island of Pines to Cuba for an expressed but undefined consideration, ought not that question to be considered at this day and this hour in the light of facts as they now exist, and not in the light of facts as they may have existed on the day of the adoption of the Platt amendment or on the day of the negotiations of this treaty which is said to be in pursuance of that amendment? Can the Senate of the United States, or the Congress of the United States, afford to take up this subject and treat it as if those people were not there, as if no new rights had supervened there? Are we not bound, in the very nature of things, and bound by the obligation of honorable duty to our own people, to send a committee of this body down there to ascertain what are the present conditions and whether or not it is just, right, politic, and wise that the Island of Pines should be sold by the Government of the United States, as is proposed to be done by this treaty, to the Government of Cuba? I wish now to draw attention to and to emphasize these two propositions. First of all, this is a treaty that three years ago proposed to sell the Island of Pines to the Government of Cuba—there can be no doubt of that, because the second article of the treaty says so—for a consideration unexpressed or undefined in the treaty, merely hinted at and alluded to probably for the purpose of justifying the conscience or promoting the popularity of the Administration; I do not know which. I will not take up the question as to what that consideration is or probably may be, for it is a suppositious matter, and we have got to guess at it, except that it has some connection with the purchase of a coaling station on the Island of Cuba, at Guantanamo; but there is to be a sale on that consideration of the Island of Pines to the Cuban Government in that treaty.

Why are we selling it unless we own it? Has not an American citizen the right to believe that he will be protected in all the rights acquired before the sale is made and while the negotiations may be going on? Has he not a right to believe, reading the face of that treaty, that the Government of the United States owns the Isle of Pines, and that the flag is at home over that island, because the Government proposes to sell it to Cuba? Take that one single fact and look at it alone, by itself, in this mass of facts that are presented here, and let this question of the sending of this committee down there be determined by that fact, and the resolution will be adopted. The Government of the United States three years ago offered to sell this island to Cuba for a consideration. That matter has been held up in the Senate of the United States, because, no doubt, the Senate could not get its consent to cooperate with the diplomatic Government in making that sale. The Senate has never been called upon to say whether Cuba owned the island or the United States owned it, for the reason that the diplomatic power of the Government of the United States in the treaty itself has announced the fact that the Government of the United States owns it and proposes to sell it.

The people who have gone there, those who were there before this thing took place and those who have gone there since this thing took place, have a perfect right to take the same attitude on the subject which the Government took, which is that the island belonged to the United States; but it is nevertheless proposed to be sold to Cuba. Those people have not believed that the Government could or would denationalize them and force them to accept Cuban citizenship or else abandon their homes, to the utter ruin of the most of them. No American has had occasion heretofore to take such a view of any American administration.

Those people, Mr. President, in looking at that situation, have been—I will not say entrapped or deceived; but according to the present attitude of the Government of the United States, and especially of the Secretary of State, they have been very grossly misled, for, notwithstanding that treaty is here to-day and demanding ratification in the form in which it was negotiated, the Secretary of State has come forward in a letter, which I shall presently present to the Senate, and has stated that the Island of Pines always belonged to Cuba and belongs to it now, and that the United States can never get any title to it except through a treaty of cession from the Government of Cuba. Why, then, is the Secretary of State here urging and demanding the sale of that island to the Government of Cuba, when he announces that Cuba always owned it? If, for reasons that are satisfactory to him, politically or personally, he wants the Government of Cuba to take this island, let him take his treaty out of this body, withdraw it from consideration, and stand on the doctrine that Cuba always owned the island and owns it to-day and that the Government of the United States can not get title to it except by treaty with Cuba ceding it to us. Let the honorable Secretary of State, with all of his great character and his great legal information, stand up before the country and answer this question. He can not afford to do it, having stated that attitude as presented on the face of the papers.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MORGAN. I do.

Mr. CULBERSON. Do I understand the Senator from Alabama to make the proposition that the treaty which has been pending here for three years in one of its sections proposes to sell to Cuba the Isle of Pines, and that after that treaty was submitted and after that position of the United States was known citizens of the United States became financially interested in the Isle of Pines?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, Mr. President, before that time and since that time; but since that time there has been a greatly accelerated immigration. The people of the United States have gone there and have settled up this island until, if the Senate can see it [exhibiting a map], the red colors there represent American ownership of the land and the yellow colors represent Spanish ownership—not Cuban, but the ownership by Spaniards—of the land of that island. The few little black specks scattered about the map, amounting to probably not 20,000 acres, represent land belonging to men who were Spaniards and registered themselves as Cubans under the treaty of Paris. Here it is [exhibiting].

We have had various statements from time to time about the American ownership there. At one time it is put down as one-fourth, the next time as one-half, the next time as two-thirds, the next time as seven-eighths of the island, and now it is nine-tenths, showing the accelerated immigration and the increased improvements that have been going on there; and farms have been laid out and houses built, on which money has been expended by the people who have purchased lands in the island. It can not be less than two and a half million dollars which has been expended in their improvements.

They have been acting since that treaty was signed upon the statement contained in the body of the treaty, that the United States owned the property and was selling it to Cuba, and they have been migrating there and trying to occupy that country in the hope that they would be able to show the United States that it was better for the people of the United States and better for the people of Cuba and of the world that an honest, enterprising, industrious American citizenship should go there and improve that beautiful and lovely island rather than that it should remain in the neglect which Cuba and Spain had bestowed upon it heretofore. Were they covetous? Had they no claim to a just interpretation of their motives, when they considered the vast sums our people had expended in redeeming Cuba from Spanish despotism, and of the lives of their sons sacrificed in battle and in camp for the independence of Cuba? We will see where the boasted gratitude of Cuba is exhibited in the unlawful and brutal treatment of our worthy citizens on the Isle of Pines.

Mr. President, I wish to present some of my credentials to the Senators of the United States in connection with this particular subject. I have not got a single constituent in the Isle of Pines, except one poor fellow who migrated to the Isle of Pines long before this treaty was made—as soon as the Platt amendment was adopted. He went from the county of Blount, took his wife and his three or four children with him, and bought himself about 10 acres of land, planted it with orchards—oranges, pineapples, and what not. When he saw that a Cuban officer had gone in on the Island of Pines, hauled down the American flag and put up the Cuban flag over that country, he became alarmed about his little family, and he wrote me a quiet, beseeching letter, that I would try to look after his interests in the Senate. Since that time, until the day before yesterday I have never received a communication from any man in Alabama in regard to this business; but I have received hundreds of communications from Ohio, from Pennsylvania, from New Jersey, from New York, from Iowa, from Wisconsin, and from Michigan, all north of the river Ohio, beseeching me, a Democrat, a southern man, an "ex-Confederate brigadier," and a man, of course, who is the despised of the despised of the world in the estimation of those people—beseeching me that I would come forward and advocate their cause, and I am here for that purpose.

These are my credentials in connection with the advocacy of their case. I am not here to advocate anybody—if there is anybody of that sort in the Island of Pines—who is a mere exploiter of capital or of speculation; but there are very many hundreds of honest, upright, industrious, faithful citizens of the United States who are there engaged in attending to their own business and really making the desert blossom as a rose. These are the men to whom my first allegiance is due. That is an allegiance of affection; the other is the allegiance of the law. Both the law and an honest pride in defending the rights of my countrymen unite in supporting me in an honest effort to see that justice is done to them. Age and weariness will not cause me to fail in that duty, especially when our own Government reproaches them for quietly demanding justice.

I have here, Mr. President, some petitions that I desire to read on this subject. The first one that I will read was handed to me this morning. It explains how it happens that this charge got abroad throughout the United States that the Isle of Pines was being settled by speculators for the purposes of money making, and that those are the men whom Senators on the other side of the Chamber are trying to oppose, I must not say, in justice to the other side of the Chamber, because there are a number of Senators on that side of the Chamber who are as much interested in this matter as I am and in the same direction—I will speak of those gentlemen who are afraid that the Isle of Pines is a big speculaton, a land speculation, and who therefore raise their voices against it.

The people whom I am trying to represent here are the farming elements and the mechanics of that region of country, the men who raise fruit and crops of very valuable sorts, and the owners of boats who fish for sponges and other fishes. The last papers I have got explain the reason why it was that in the beginning of the operations in the Isle of Pines it required cooperation in order to raise money enough to get hold of any title that could be made use of. I will read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1906.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SIR: In my last communication to you I neglected to mention a few facts relative to the early purchase of land in the Isle of Pines, which I deem of considerable importance to this discussion. The first American purchasers of land on the Isle of Pines after the Spanish-American war were a number of Iowa farmers, headed by Ira A. Brown, who secured their holdings about July or August, 1901. On their visit to the island they found it impossible to purchase land in small lots. The only tract which they found that they could purchase at that time was Santa Rosalie, containing 20,000 acres. They formed a syndicate of Iowa farmers, consisting of forty or more, and purchased this tract for division. They then incorporated under the name of the Isle of Pines Land and Development Company, and spent about $5,000 in surveying and subdividing the same. Following this, they set aside for each member of the syndicate 100 acres, which was turned over to him as his private property, and the balance, divided into 10, 20, and 40 acre tracts, was reserved for sale to others. Nearly every man in the syndicate immediately went to work improving his hundred-acre holding. They laid out the town-site called Columbia, each taking a lot, and since then this town has been slowly building and improving.

A few weeks after this was purchased I took an option on the estate of Don Juan Costa, deceased, an old ex-Spanish military officer, who had been living on the island for many years, and who was a direct descendant of Captain Duarte, to whom the whole island had been ceded by the Spanish Crown. With the aid of some gentlemen from New York, we purchased this large estate, consisting of about 60,000 acres and a large number of houses and lots in the town of Nueva Gerona, at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars. That was the largest estate on the island, but not a single house upon it or a foot of land in it could have been purchased as a separate entity. The whole estate had to be taken intact, as the heirs of Costa were scattered in different parts of the world. They could not agree upon a division, so the whole property had to be sold together. We have since interested nearly 500 American citizens in small tracts of this property.

Many other syndicates of Americans were formed in this way, as they were forced to raise large capital to buy large tracts of land, as the whole island was divided into large divisions and the owners would only sell on condition that their land was taken as a whole.

All titles in all land on the island go back to Captain Duarte, a Spanish army officer, to whom the whole island was granted by the Spanish Crown, as a reward for cleaning out the pirates who infested the island.

Before the Spanish-American war there never was any great number of civilians living on the island. There were only a few large Spanish landowners, engaged in raising cattle and hogs, who utilized prison labor, as the island was a penal and military station, where prisoners from the other West Indian islands of the Spanish possessions were sent rather than to the Spanish penal possessions in Europe.

The reason that the census taken by the American military in 1899 showed a population of over 3,100 in the Isle of Pines was due to a great influx of Spanish refugees, who had gone there for protection during the change from Spanish to American sovereignty, fearing to remain among their Cuban neighbors, who they believed might attempt to wreak vengeance on all Spaniards in Cuba. At one time these refugees were said to have numbered over 14,000, but when the census was taken, in 1899, the larger portion of them had returned to their homes in Cuba, and within a year after the census was taken they had practically all returned to Cuba, leaving the normal population of the island—which, in my judgment, at that time was not more than 1,500. I believe that about half of these have since emigrated to Cuba, after selling out their holdings to Americans, their places being taken by the purchasers. I believe that the present population of the island is between 1,600 and 1,800. Nearly all of the native population live in Nueva Gerona and Santa Fe, and nearly all the farms are owned and operated by Americans. When all of the 2,500 Americans, many of whom are heads of families, remove with their families to the Isle of Pines and begin improvements on their real estate holdings, as were their intentions when they bought, you can readily see that the American population on the island ought to aggregate 6,000 or 7,000, even if no more land is purchased by Americans down there. In my judgment, the island is capable of supporting a population of 200,000 people.

Yours, truly, S. H. PEARCY.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, ss:

Personally appeared before me S. H. Pearcy, a resident of the Isle of Pines, who, first being duly sworn, deposes and says that the above letter to Senator JOHN T. MORGAN is true and correct to the best of his personal knowledge and belief.

[SEAL.] BENJ. VAIL, Notary Public.

I requested these gentlemen, if they wrote me any letters in regard to conditions in Cuba, to please swear to them, not that I in the slightest degree suspected their veracity, but because their veracity has been frequently questioned. They are constantly accused of false exaggeration in their statements. I undertake to say, with my knowledge of the people there, so far as it goes, and my observation of humanity, that it is about as respectable a community as any community of the same size that you can find in the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I present and ask the Secretary to read for my relief, because I am not very strong, the other petition to me, which causes me to attempt to get justice for these people.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary proceeded to read the petition referred to.

Mr. FORAKER. May I interrupt the Senator before the Secretary proceeds with the reading?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. May I inquire what the paper is which the Secretary is about to read?

Mr. MORGAN. The paper is a sworn statement of Mr. S. H. Pearcy with regard to conditions on the Isle of Pines.

Mr. MONEY. May I ask the Senator from Alabama does he expect to get action on this resolution to-day?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know. It is here at the disposal of the Senate. I want to press this resolution to a vote. A motion has been made to refer it to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I am willing to take a test vote on that motion.

Mr. MONEY. I want to say now that before any vote can be had, I desire to be heard in reply to the Senator from Alabama as to certain statements he has made. With all respect to the Senator and in perfect kindness, I have something to say regarding the passage of a resolution like this, which intrusts to a committee of the Senate a duty that belongs, in my opinion, to the diplomatic department of this Government.

Mr. FORAKER. I will want to say something also.

Mr. MORGAN. I seem to be calling gentlemen to their feet before I get my case stated.

Mr. FORAKER. I was not called to my feet by that. I did not hear the Senator state what the paper was which he asked to have read.

Mr. MORGAN. I am just now making a statement of the case.

Mr. FORAKER. I was spoken to by another Senator at the moment, and I wanted to know what the paper was, and so I made the remark as to my desire to say something in answer only because I was on my feet at the time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the petition.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, as the reading of this paper will occupy more time than I believe ought to be occupied this morning, and inasmuch as the resolution will probably have to go over, as it is going to be debated, I will ask leave to insert the petition in the RECORD without further reading, instead of having it read at length, and I will proceed with my other statement. I do not expect to be able to do more in the time remaining than to get my case stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama that the paper referred to by him be printed in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. CULLOM. Let it be printed as a document.

Mr. MORGAN. It is suggested to me that it also be printed as a document.

Mr. CULLOM. No; I thought it would be better to print it as a document and not print it in the RECORD.

Mr. MORGAN. No; I want it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks that the paper referred to be inserted in the RECORD without further reading, and also printed as a document.

Mr. CULLOM. It seems to me we ought not to double up the printing unnecessarily.

Mr. MORGAN. I have the floor, and I will stay here and read the petition myself, if necessary.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to its being printed in the RECORD, as the Senator desires. I only suggested to him that if he preferred it could be printed as a document, or in the RECORD, whichever he preferred.

Mr. MORGAN. I prefer to have it printed in both forms.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator so prefers, I am satisfied, but I do not think it ought to be printed in both forms.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator suggested that it be printed as a document after I had asked that it be printed in the RECORD. It was to accommodate the Senator that I also asked to have it printed as a document.

Mr. CULLOM. I suggested to the Senator that perhaps he would prefer the latter.

Mr. MORGAN. Either way, I do not care; but let it go in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I ask that I may have leave to print it in the RECORD without further reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama requests that the paper referred to by him be printed in the RECORD without further reading. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1906.

Hon. JOHN T. MORGAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to call to your attention a few of the conditions existing in the Isle of Pines for the past five years, but more particularly since the American soldiers were withdrawn from Cuba, May 20, 1902.

I am a citizen of the State of Tennessee, but for the past five years have lived in the Isle of Pines. I became a resident of that island on account of assurances which I myself and other American citizens received from the War Department of the United States Government. These assurances were of such a character as to leave no doubt in our minds at the time as to the sovereignty and title to the island being in the United States Government. This belief was further strengthened and confirmed by assurances received from the Hon. John Hay, Secretary of State, at his office in the State Department in Washington, in the presence of other witnesses, who can be produced to verify my statements. These assurances were of such a nature as to leave no doubts in our minds that the island would be retained as American territory. The American citizens resident in the Isle of Pines for a long time never doubted or questioned the fact that the island was American territory, but as the time grew near for the American Government to be withdrawn from Cuba and nothing had been stated in an official public way with respect to what arrangements were going to be made regarding the future government of the Isle of Pines upon the withdrawal of the American troops, we deemed it advisable to see General Wood at Habana and find out from him if any steps were to be taken with regard to an American government in the Isle of Pines after he would withdraw from Cuba on May 20, 1902. Accordingly a mass meeting of the residents of the Isle of Pines was called three or four weeks before the turning over of the island of Cuba to the Cuban Government by General Wood. A committee was selected at this meeting to call on General Wood at his headquarters at Habana and get such information as we could upon the subject directly from him. Messrs. William Mason, Charles Raynard, and T. J. Tichenor were appointed as spokesmen of this committee. Other Americans as well as myself accompanied the committee to Habana. General Wood received the committee, discussed the matter fully, and gave it every assurance that the people of the island need not have any doubt upon the subject, as he had already selected a United States Army officer to be installed in command of the Isle of Pines on or before May 20, 1902, and that he was to remain there until the United States Congress had made a proper disposition for the future governing of the island.

A number of us Americans left the Isle of Pines and went to Habana to witness the ceremonies of the transfer of the sovereignty of Cuba to the Cuban Government by General Wood, and to congratulate the Cubans and help them celebrate the day. When we returned to the Isle of Pines next day, May 21, 1902, we were surprised and chagrined to learn that the American flag had been pulled down on the custom-house at Nueva Gerona, and the Cuban flag substituted. This act of duplicity, we ascertained, had been forcibly done in spite of the protests and active resistance of the captain of the port of Nueva Gerona, a Cuban serving under the American military government, by one Juan Sanchez, alcalde, a Cuban who had been, and was then, serving under authority of General Wood, from whom he had received a commission as the American governor of the island. This captain of the port, who had refused to pull down the American flag, was shortly afterwards dismissed from the service by the Cuban authorities, but never received any notice from General Wood or the American authorities that he was to pull down the American flag and substitute the Cuban flag therefor. Mr. Sanchez, appointed to his place as alcalde by General Wood during the American régime in Cuba, as an American official, is to-day the alcalde of the island but ostensibly serving the Cuban government. He openly admits that he was appointed by General Wood, and that he has never since received any other commission than that received from General Wood as an American official.

Among the other officials serving to-day ostensibly under Cuban authority are Benito Ortiz and Pedro Ordung, registered as Spanish subjects, under the protection of the Government of Spain, and therefore in no wise Cuban citizens or entitled to rule over Cuban or American citizens. They are serving to-day as deputy alcaldes. Benito Ortez has also been acting as alcalde for the past three years for the reason that Sanchez is seldom on the island.

The present executive officials of the island are: Alcalde, Juan M. Sanchez Amal (a Cuban); first assistant alcalde, Benito Ortiz y Ortiz (a Spaniard); second assistant alcalde, Pedro Ordong y Ortiz (a Spaniard).

Executive council are: Francisco Romitto y Ortiz, Ramon Arrojo Aldave, Jose Gomez Ortiz, Serero Blanco Postrana, Manuel Fernandez Castillo, Ramon Diaz (all Cubans).

Treasurer, Rufino Duarte y Duarte.

Municipal guards or constables: Jose Corvalan (Spanish), Euscvis Blanco (Cuban).

All the executive officers are either Spanish or Cuban citizens. There are very few natives of the island holding public office.

When there is an election to be held for one of these councilmen a constable or city policeman goes around secretly and notifies a few people which the authorities can trust to vote to suit them to come to some place agreed upon and vote for the previously chosen candidate or candidates. No election notice is ever published or posted, and the general public never knows when an election is held or who the candidates are.

There is a register of deeds, who necessarily must be a lawyer. This register has an official secretary, who is a registered Spanish subject. The register is a Cuban from Habana.

For a time we had a notary, who was sent from Habana. He also must be a lawyer. He afterwards resigned, and for the past year the resident notary at Batabano, Cuba, has been coming to the island for a week or ten days out of each month, and he always went away with several hundred dollars of American money in his pocket, as he seldom charges less than $10 for acknowledging an instrument. Just as I left the island to come here a young lawyer arrived there from Habana, and informed us that he had been officially appointed as notary for the island. The notary in the Isle of Pines makes all deeds, contracts, etc., in his own name, asserting that he makes the deed, and the buyer and seller of the property, as the contracting parties, simply sign, as acquiescing to all his acts in transferring the property.

There is also a judicial department, composed first of the municipal judge, being one member of the council, so designated by the judge of first instance, who is sent to us from Habana. This judge has control of all minor civil cases involving less amounts than $200 each. He has two secretaries.

Second, there is the judge of first instance, who has control of all larger civil cases and misdemeanor criminal cases, and is committing justice in all felonious and higher criminal cases for trial at Habana. This official is usually shifted back about once a month and his place filled by another Cuban. He is appointed and sent to the Isle of Pines from Habana. It is generally believed by the Americans in the Isle of Pines that the reason that this official is changed so frequently is because, as soon as he thoroughly knows the Americans, he refuses to be a party to judicial persecutions of respectable people, and therefore must be replaced by another, who can be utilized for useless and trivial prosecutions until he discovers he is making a mistake, when a fresh judge is needed to carry out the concealed purposes of the Cuban Government.

There is on the island a company of the Cuban National Rural Guards, commanded by a captain. They have charge of the prison, and roam over the island at will and make arrests. They generally number from twenty-five to forty.

The customs authorities are composed of the chief of customs or captain of the port and two inspectors or secretaries. They are appointed by the secretary of the treasury of Cuba at Habana. All matters coming before this department, which give rise to protest or misunderstanding, must be referred to the Cuban custom authorities at Habana.

It appears, if I can truthfully judge from the many instances in which I was directly concerned, that the Cuban custom officials are religiously and upon all occasions endeavoring to discourage, by a system of fines, penalties, and confiscations, the importation of American goods, especially all goods which do not come through Cuba by way of Habana, so that the Cuban merchants, railways, truck lines, brokers, and express companies can get a rake off, and thereby add to the cost of our goods.

By this policy the Americans would be forced, in my opinion, to deal in Habana, a market where foreign goods, not made in America, are in many lines exclusively dealt in, and in which Americans can not get the kind of goods, materials, and machinery that they are accustomed to and particularly desire. To show the methods in use by the Cuban customs officials to discourage the bringing in of American goods, especially by any other route than via Habana, I will cite some of the tribulations which I passed through in trying to run a line of boats from Mobile, Ala., to the Isle of Pines direct, thus avoiding Habana and endeavoring to save considerable expense in freights on American household goods and exports sent to the Isle of Pines.

In the first place, they have been in the habit of watching the arrival of my boat from Mobile a week or ten days ahead, employing from one to three revenue cutters for the purpose, and sending these boats out 10 or 20 miles to escort the schooner into port. After her arrival, the Cuban revenue officials will not allow us or any of our people to go on board of the boat for the purpose of inspection, for the purpose of checking off the goods, or of carefully supervising the unloading of fragile goods. We are not allowed even to get the goods until the whole cargo has passed through the custom-house, a week or two after the boat has unloaded and left port. We are not even allowed to cover up the goods, in transit on the lighters plying between the ship and shore, with tarpaulins to save perishable goods from the effects of the rain, consequently when heavy rains were falling we had several hundred dollars worth of goods destroyed.

On one occasion we lost $500 worth of goods in this way at a time when we begged to be allowed to put tarpaulins over them.

On the slightest clerical error, made by any irresponsible shipping clerk at the port of shipment in the manifest or consular invoice, the whole consignment of goods is usually confiscated in spite of protests and abundant evidence that no fraud is intended. The goods are taken from us and put into the custom-house and kept from one to three weeks, and we are not allowed to guard them. The custom-house being a ramshackle affair, with doors and windows insecure, and with a leaking roof, so that thieves can enter at will. We attribute many of our losses to sneak thieves getting into the custom-house and stealing anything that can be carried away. I lost $500 in damages and thefts in one cargo of oats, hay, corn, and perishable fancy groceries on account of this leaking roof and the insecure condition of the custom-house. I have personally paid thousands of dollars in customs into this custom-house, and yet the Cuban authorities have never spent a cent to repair the roof or the other defects in the building.

Through these fines, damages, confiscations, and purloinings I have personally lost in the last fifteen months more than $5,000, all of which I can prove by my books and by numerous witnesses.

To show how irregular their methods of collecting duties are I will state that I paid $18 duty on a little rowing skiff only 11 feet in length. Another American only paid $1.50 duty on a 14-foot skiff, identically the same in material and construction, which cost $20 more than mine. Mine was classed as fancy furniture, and his as a boat. I protested, but they refused to remedy the error. By diligent inquiry as to the procedure of custom-house officers in other countries, I find that all of these petty persecutions are irregular and devised apparently to hound and persecute Americans. I will, if called upon, cite scores of instances of a similar nature.

ARRESTS OF AMERICAN CITIZENS.

In regard to arrests of American citizens, I will say that there have been many made for trivial causes, and persons have been confined in jail and fined, and several have been removed to Cuba for trial, in my opinion contrary to the constitutional rights of the Cuban Government. The first case that I will cite is that of James M. Steere, a prominent citizen and a man of high standing, who was arrested because he had refused for a short time to give up goods to the courts until the storage charges had been paid after a portion of the goods had been surrendered and the storage charges on them had not been paid. For insisting on the payment of these storage dues Mr. Steere was arrested and cited to appear before the higher court in Habana on charges of malversation of public property—an absurd charge. Mr. Steere and myself went to the American minister, Mr. Morgan, at Habana, to ask advice, and a clerk brought us word while we were waiting to see him that Mr. Morgan was so busy that he could not see us. This aforesaid clerk said to us: "We are instructed by Mr. Root to the effect that we are to treat all cases of appeal of Americans in the Isle of Pines to the American minister at Habana in accordance with the declarations of the letter written by Secretary Root to Charles Raynard last November." Mr. Steere, by making inquiries, ascertained that he was liable to imprisonment for a long period on this trumped-up charge, and he immediately departed for Washington to seek the protection of the State Department. On the day of trial in Habana another American, myself, and four Cubans appeared at the court in Habana, in obedience to summons, to give witness in the Steere case, having been given notice that if we did not appear in Habana we would be subject to a $25 fine each, and that the Cuban authorities would collect it in the Isle of Pines. A copy of the summons is herewith inclosed. The four Cuban witnesses were examined, but the Americans were not. We were instructed that we would not be paid our expenses in coming to Habana, and that we would have to return again when notified. Mr. Steere not being present, the court decreed that he be arrested wherever found for contempt of the Habana court. Consequently he could not return to the Isle of Pines, but was obliged to abandon his home on account of the possibility of getting into trouble with the courts of the neighboring Republic of Cuba. His wife was forced to sell out her furniture and other personal property in the Isle of Pines at a sacrifice and follow him to the States.

Another peculiar incident of Cuban court jurisdiction in the Isle of Pines was the arrest of Mr. Otto Parrish, of Cincinnati, at Santa Fe, on the charge of resisting an officer. Parrish was arrested at Santa Fe by the rural guards while intoxicated. His alleged resistance to the officer was so trivial that it was ludicrous to the bystanders. Parrish was kept in jail five or six weeks without trial in the Isle of Pines. He was kept in a small cell with a brick floor and without furniture of any kind, not even a bed. I furnished him with a bed myself. He was afterwards taken to Habana about two months ago, where he has been since kept in prison. His trial has been held and the prosecuting attorney has demanded a sentence of one year and eight months. It is the usual custom in Cuban courts to impose the sentence asked for by the prosecuting attorney. As yet, however, the court has not formally pronounced sentence.

THE LEE CASE.

Another case I will report to you is that involving two brothers by the name of Lee, which has already been circumstantially given to you in letters and affidavits. The two brothers were living together at Columbia, Isle of Pines. One of them died and he was buried in the burial plot set aside for burial purposes by the American colony. A few days after the funeral Mr. Lee, the remaining brother, who was afflicted with consumption, was informed by the Cuban authorities that he would have to dig his brother's remains up and rebury them in the established burying ground at Santa Fe, 9 miles distant, under penalty of imprisonment. Mr. Lee, not being able to understand the seriousness of his trivial offense, refused to comply. He was soon afterwards arrested and placed in jail in Nueva Gerona for a few days. He was then secretly removed to Cuba on a schooner and confined in jail at Bejucal, Cuba. Here he was subjected to all manner of indignities, and being a man of 70 years of age and weak in health, it resulted in his death afterwards. The full particulars of this incarceration have been reported to you by others. Sufficient it is to say that the whole proceeding was so inhuman as to alone justify a committee being sent to the Isle of Pines to investigate it. The Americans have been refused the right to establish a burying ground anywhere in the island. The principal burying ground is at Nueva Gerona and belongs to the Catholic Church. No one can be buried within the consecrated walls except by permission of the priests, which is only given to communicants of that church.

The church also owns outside of the walls a small lot called the "potter's field," which is kept for the burial of paupers and criminals, and in this plot all Americans in that section of the island must be buried, as if Americans were only fit to be buried among paupers and criminals.

Five or six Americans have been buried there. When new graves are made old skeletons and bones are dug up and thrown away. I have seen as many as four skeletons dug out in the making of one grave. At the time of Mr. Lee's incarceration I wrote to the American minister, Mr. Squiers, at Habana, giving him the full particulars, and received a reply to the effect that he could not interfere with the Cuban courts and the law would have to take its course. Naturally under these conditions we are forced to bury the Americans who die in the island in the potter's field, the same as if they were criminals or paupers, for the reason that the Cuban laws are very strict and do not permit the Americans to have a burying ground of their own.

THE MOERKE CASE.

Another case, which has already been fully and truthfully reported to you, is that of the former postmaster at Columbia, Isle of Pines, Mr. Moerke, who had failed to pay the 30 per cent additional war tax added to his regular license fee for running a small store. Mr. Moerke was willing to pay his regular license tax, but could not understand why he was required to pay an additional tax of 30 per cent imposed by recent act of the Cuban Congress to defray the Cuban war debt. He was arrested, imprisoned, and after some delay was fined $50 or given the alternative of fifty days in jail. Next day the Cuban rural guards took a wagon and went to Moerke's home, which they found locked up. They broke in the doors and, in spite of the protests of his wife, removed all his stock of goods and some of his furniture, including his wife's sewing machine, and leaving his wife and five little girls destitute. They were obliged to live on the charity of neighbors. After sixteen days of incarceration in jail the American residents paid Mr. Moerke's fine and he was released. His furniture and household goods are still held by the Cuban authorities and never have been returned, and his business has been completely wiped out.

It has been stated by the Cubans and other misinformed persons that Mr. Moerke was fully amenable to the Cuban laws because he had taken the oath of fealty to Cuba in order to secure the office of postmaster. This is a mistake. He never took the oath of allegiance to Cuba, and only gave a bond for the faithful discharge of his duties. He did this at the earnest solicitation of his neighbors, as there was no Cuban or native living within several miles of Columbia upon whom the duties of postmaster could devolve.

It is needless for me to recite the other cases of this character that I could, as the details would only weary you.

The persecutions and arrests of members of my own family, consisting of myself and five sons, are too numerous to mention. For instance, my son, 15 years of age, was grabbed by the collar by a Cuban rural guard in a store because he did not get out of the building on orders from the guard quite as quickly as he thought the boy ought to. My son was paraded through the streets in front of my house while being shaken by the collar and roughly pushed by this negro guard, which was observed by my wife and myself.

Naturally I ran out to see what was the matter. I asked the guard why my son was arrested, and received no reply. I followed him to the jail and inquired there, and was arrested, and a bond of $25 each for the appearance of myself and son to answer to the court was demanded. The captain of the guard also demanded bonds of other bystanders who came into the jail to find out about the arrest. The next day my son and myself were fined $10 each, which I paid. I inclose the receipts. Members of my family and myself have been arrested and fined a great number of times on charges which would not be recognized in any civilized country as worthy of notice. This was the most serious charge ever brought against a member of my family in the Isle of Pines.

CUBAN CUSTOMS REGULATIONS.

The Cuban laws with respect to boats and pilots and coast regulations under recent orders are very troublesome; at times prohibitive, and always wound around with an abundance of red tape.

Americans are not allowed to own a boat of any kind, not even a launch, in their own name. They are not allowed to use them unless they have a licensed Cuban pilot aboard for sail boats, and a licensed Cuban engineer and pilot for steam or gasoline launches. I have recently been forced to tie up my sailing yacht, which I have owned and operated under the Cuban flag, with a Cuban licensed crew, for several years. The Cubans made a demand on me that I put the boat in the name of a Cuban. I would not do this, as I feared to do so. This forced me to suspend work on the south side of the island, where we have a large property and are working a large number of men, as I could only get to this part of the island by boat, there being no road or any other means to get there.

Spanish subjects, registered as such, are allowed to own boats and hold office upon the island, and are also allowed all the privileges enjoyed by Cuban citizens, while there are only a dozen or so of them, but there are several hundred American citizens who are not allowed any of these privileges.

Some of the minor regulations with regard to boats are very troublesome, and cause delay, sometimes amounting to a day or two, to make out the necessary papers and comply with the unnecessary red-tape proceedings. We are not allowed to move our little launch even 10 feet, or take on water or fuel, without getting out a batch of papers. All this must be done on primitive forms, and we have to send to certain Cuban printing firms in Havana and buy all these forms. Should we run out, we can not use our boat until we get another supply from Havana, as they can not be bought elsewhere. They cost from 5 to 10 cents each, and it requires five different kinds of these forms before we can move our little boat, after wasting a lot of time to fill them out. In addition to all this, the blanks must be filled out by Cuban pilots. There is now but one Cuban licensed engineer living in the island, and he is employed on one of the steamers plying between Batabano and the Isle of Pines, consequently the only way we can run our boat is to send to Cuba and get a licensed Cuban engineer. Our last man who acted as Cuban pilot could not read or write, and my son Edward had to fill out all the blanks for him. He was a half-breed negro fisherman, and quit his place here because he got stuck up as the master of a ship, and therefore declined to be ordered when and where it might be necessary for us to go.

THEIR SYSTEM OF TAXATION.

The system of taxation enforced in the Isle of Pines is about as follows:

For owning a wagon or vehicle of any kind for hire it is necessary to pay a road tax of $5.50 a year.

For individual use the tax on the same vehicle is $10.50 per year. This tax is rigidly enforced, although the Cuban Government has never spent a cent for roads or any other purpose, except the salary of officials in the island.

All licenses expire on July 1 each year, and if a man should purchase a vehicle in June a Cuban official would be after him as soon as he saw the vehicle taken off the boat to take out a license, which would cost the owner the same amount for the unexpired month of June as it would for a year, and the owner on July 1 would be obliged to take out another license, paying for the full year.

A license is charged for almost every act that a man can perform of semipublic nature. For instance, for operating a sawmill it costs from $21 to $29 per quarter.

For merchandising a special license is required for each class of goods sold, running from $3.50 to $29 for different articles per quarter. For each pair of scales used $2.50 per quarter is levied.

For a hotel or boarding house or lunch room $5.91 per quarter is levied, with $10 a year extra where wines or liquors are kept.

For killing a pig an application to the alcalde must be made, a permit secured, and 75 cents paid.

For killing a beef $1.50 is levied.

An American living in Nueva Gerona a few weeks ago had a small pig in his back yard, for which he had paid 25 cents. The town policeman came in and notified him that he must not keep the pig in town. He concluded that the only thing he could do was to kill it and eat it, although it was very small. The policeman returned in the afternoon to find out what he had done with the pig, and when he told him that he had killed the pig the policeman arrested the citizen and took him before the alcalde for not having obtained a permit and not having paid the 75 cents. The alcalde fined him and gave him a severe reprimand for violating the law.

Every kind of industry and mercantile pursuit and privilege is taxed, but they are too numerous to mention, and many Americans do not discover that they are violating the laws until they are arrested and fined.

The taxes on real estate are supposed to be based on the rental value, a certain per cent thereon being levied. Unimproved and unused land is supposed not to be taxed, but we as American citizens nevertheless are paying taxes on thousands of acres of unused lands. Recently there has been a sudden and enormous increase in these taxes, in some cases as high as 3,000 per cent. In some instances the present taxes amount to more than the rent received from the property. I subjoin a report of property under my control, showing the differences and the immense increases in taxation as per the old and new assessments. The following is a comparative statement of taxation on country property belonging to the Isle of Pines plantation. The taxation is levied semiannually:

Name of tract.	Old assessment.	New assessment.
San Andra Jorobado	$4.50	$26.76
San Andra Copao	9.00	12.00
San Andra Millcon	9.18	28.00

Lot No. 11	.45	1.31
Lot No. 7	.68	2.50
Lot No. 9	1.13	2.81

I also inclose the official notices from the treasurer of the island, showing the assessments for last year and this year, and indicating, on an average, an increase of over 700 per cent, notwithstanding that there have been no increases in the rental values upon which the tax is supposed to be based. All licenses and taxes, by a special act of the Cuban Congress, are assessed with an additional 30 per cent for the purpose of paying the Cuban war debt.

Any nonpayment of a license or of taxes before the end of the first month in the quarter or semiannual term in which they are to be paid in advance will bring upon the delinquent a penalty of 6 per cent added, and if not paid by the end of the term a 12 per cent added penalty. In case that a quarterly tax is not paid in six months, the property is seized and sold. In case that a quarterly license is not paid in six months the penalty is arrest and fine, and imprisonment in case the fine is not immediately paid. In case of six months' license term the same rule holds.

SCHOOLS AND THE LANGUAGE USED THEREIN.

There are several public schools on the island, conducted exclusively in the Spanish language by teachers sent there from Habana. Their method of teaching is absolutely of no value to the Americans on the island and, in my judgment, of no value to the native children. The Americans are forbidden to carry on private schools at their own expense, unless they can employ teachers who are able to take the Cuban examination in Spanish, and obtain a special permit for the school. This is impossible, as no teacher who could be employed for the salary we could afford to pay and who would be of any value to American children can take this examination.

The Catholic priest at Neuva Gerona recently opened a private school to teach both Spanish and English, but his method of conducting the school is unsatisfactory. Several friends and myself employed a teacher last winter for our school, but we were officially notified that we must have the teacher examined and get a permit or we would be arrested and fined. I went to the school board and told them that it was impossible to allow our teacher to attempt to stand an examination, as she did not understand any Spanish, and that we had brought her from the States at considerable expense and we could not afford to suspend the school. They insisted that we should, and I told them that we would guard the door and shoot anybody who interfered with the school. They then proposed, as a special favor, that she might teach at our homes until we sent a special application to Habana to allow her to teach our children in our homes. This I refused to do, but offered to apply to them for a permit if they would grant it at once, without going to Habana or suspending the school. After a long and troublesome debate, they submitted to this, but prohibited the Americans at Santa Fe from carrying on a similar school, under threat of arresting the teacher. Under this method of carrying on schools of course it is impossible to get any satisfaction either in method or teacher.

AS TO THE POPULATION.

The number of Americans, in my opinion, living on the Isle of Pines is about equal to the number of native Spaniards and Cubans combined, the latter not being more than fifty or sixty. Most of these are nonresident officeholders, as we term them "carpetbaggers," sent there from Habana to govern and guard us. I think there are more American men than there are men of the others combined, but I think that the children of Latin blood are in excess.

The natives and Spaniards, as a rule, are in favor of American rule, but they are afraid to admit it openly. Nine-tenths of the habitable land of the island belongs to the Americans, and the balance belongs to the Spaniards and natives. I do not know of a single Cuban who owns land on the island. There are about 4,000 or 5,000 acres of land that formerly belonged to the Crown of Spain which has recently been taken possession of by a Spaniard (I believe fraudulently), who acts as first assistant alcalde. He is a very rich man, and is selling or offering for sale portions of these lands to Americans at from $25 to $40 per acre. Hence this Spaniard, who was heretofore strongly in favor of American control, is now openly fighting for Cuban rule, as he knows that he would lose this land if the island came under control of the United States. I am informed that he has recently applied for Cuban citizenship papers, although he has been an officer under the Cuban Government for several years without citizenship.

At a mass meeting of the Americans held in the island a short time ago a committee was appointed to take the census and ascertain exactly the number of Americans and other nationalities living on the island. The man who had charge of this work in the Santa Fe district was arrested and fined and prohibited from proceeding further. The parties who had charge of the Neuva Gerona district were arrested and taken before the alcalde and reprimanded and told that if they proceeded further they would be arrested and locked up. These arrests prevented from taking a census by a house-to-house canvas. Hence we have no way to ascertain the exact population of the island, which, in my judgment, is less than eighteen hundred. But as over twenty-five hundred Americans have purchased land in the island, many of whom have not yet come to live there permanently, there is a continual immigration there of these people and their friends to look over the island and arrange for improving their lands. Here I wish to state that very few of these have obtained deeds to their property, but nearly all have purchased upon contract to avoid the heavy expenses of filing deeds until the "carpetbag" government is a thing of the past.

One tract of 5,200 acres, which has been colonized from the city of Buffalo, has nearly 500 purchasers in small amounts, running from 3 to 20 acres, and only about twenty-five of these have deeds. As I have the making of these deeds I can positively assert the truth of the above statement.

If all the land that is now sold to Americans on the island was to be deeded to the purchasers, the fees to two Cuban officials, the notary and the register, would amount to more than $125,000, say nothing of the 1 per cent that we are forced to pay to Cuba on all deeds, mortgages, contracts, etc., that are placed on record, on the amounts of consideration in such instruments. For instance, if you should sell a piece of property for $1,000 and take a mortgage for one-half of the selling price, you would be forced to pay 1 per cent on the full selling price and also the same per cent on the mortgage. So also when you dismiss and satisfy it you will have to pay another 1 per cent on the face value of the mortgage. This 1 per cent always goes to Habana and is paid directly to the Cuban Government, and this in the case mentioned would amount to $20, or 2 per cent, on the face value of the original sale. This tax has nothing to do with the notarial and registration fees, which are extra. It cost us $500 to have the notary write one deed for us, $1,160 to put the same instrument on record, and $1,310 in Cuba State taxes of 1 per cent. In view of these charges, there can be little wonder that the Americans in the Isle of Pines are not anxious to place their deeds on record. The expense of the instruments of record, taxes, etc., in small sales, such as town lots, are frequently almost equal to the cost price of the property.

THE OLD SPANISH LAWS.

In truth, the laws administered in the Isle of Pines are such anachronisms, smacking as they do, of the sixteenth century, that they could hardly be administered without gross inequalities and hardships under modern enlightened conditions anywhere in the world. The laws made by the Crown of Spain to govern the Cubans, when violence and revolution were rife in Cuba against Spanish rule, are to-day being administered by the Cubans in the Isle of Pines against the Americans, and no effort is made to change them. The Cubans openly boast in the Isle of Pines that these laws suit them, as long as they have the administering of them, although they made a great outcry against them when they were administered by the Spaniards. Verily I believe to-day, if the famous reconcentrado order of General Weyler was permanent instead of temporary, the Cuban authorities in the Isle of Pines would be enforcing it now against the Americans.

For example, a man came into our hotel at Nueva Gerona and attempted to kill a woman, but was prevented by two Americans. He was held by them until taken in hand by the authorities and placed in jail in Bejucal, Cuba.

While there he reported to the judge of that district that the two young Americans who arrested him had tried to kill him. A large number of people, including the alcalde and the priest, saw the whole affair, including the resistance and arrest, but notwithstanding this fact and that the truth could easily have been ascertained the two Americans who had prevented the crime were arrested and forced to put up $200 each as collateral to appear in Bejucal, Cuba, for trial. Afterwards the prisoner escaped from the Bejucal jail, but the two Americans did not find it out for a year, as the Cuban authorities never notified them that the prosecution had been abandoned, owing to the escape of the prisoner. After another year of hard work, with numerous legal complications, the two Americans got their money back. It cost them over $100 in expenses and numerous trips to Cuba. There are many other instances too numerous to mention going to show that any kind of a charge preferred by a criminal or any other irresponsible person will cause an American to lose his liberty and the most flagrant prosecution and persecution by the Cuban judicial authorities both in the Isle of Pines and subsequently in Cuba. Until he can prove himself innocent under Cuban-Spanish laws the American is treated as a convicted criminal, no matter how irresponsible the Cuban accuser may be, or how responsible the American may be. Hence our lives, liberty, and property are continually imperiled and some of our people have been forced to abandon their homes and property in the island and flee to the United States to avoid persecution. Others of us have so far stood our ground, notwithstanding these persecutions, continually hoping to get recognition and protection from our own Government, which to date has been denied us by the executive authorities.

One of the old Spanish laws, which dates back for centuries, and was intended to be enforced against filibustering expeditions, is revived and rigidly enforced against the Americans. It is the law to prevent anyone from carrying arms or having ammunition in his possession. It is rigidly enforced down to squirrel and bird guns.

No American is allowed to have any kind of a firearm in his possession (a right guaranteed in the American Constitution) unless he secures first a permit from the governor of Habana Province in Habana, for which he is obliged to pay $6 per gun per annum, provided the permit is granted. It is very difficult to get such a permit. A prominent American who has a $60,000 winter residence on the island recently brought a little gasoline launch to the island and purchased a rifle and cartridges for the purpose of running up and down the rivers and shoals to shoot crocodiles. His rifle and cartridges were confiscated, and he was refused the privilege of running his launch because he would not put it in the name of a Cuban and hire a Cuban pilot. It was only 21 feet in length, and was secured for the purpose of having the members of his family run it, any of whom were perfectly competent to do it.

In view of all the facts above set forth, which are only a few of the many abuses practiced upon Americans in the Isle of Pines, I, as a special representative of the people sent here to plead before Congress for our rights and for recognition and simple justice, have come here to lay before the Senate, through you, the whole facts, and to assure them that hundreds of witnesses in the Isle of Pines can substantiate every fact set forth in this letter, and many others that I do not at present care to set forth in this already too lengthy instrument can be brought before any committee that their honorable body may see fit to appoint.

We believe that the Senate is a just and honorable body, and we think that ours is a just cause. We are only asking for a very little. Heretofore we have sent innumerable petitions and memorials to the State Department, to the President, and to others, but have received no answer or recognition except in one letter addressed to Charles Raynard, from the Secretary of State, in which he said, in part, as follows: "The island is subject to the control and government of the Republic of Cuba, and you and your associates are bound to render obedience to the laws of that country so long as you remain on the island." The truth of this statement we deny, and we think that the facts will fully support our contention. We only beg that the Senate investigate for itself, through a proper committee, and we guarantee to furnish any quantity of evidence that we are right in all that we have asked for.

We also beg that measures be taken to have the War Department resume its control over the government of the island pending the settlement of its status and the question of sovereignty in order that our lives, liberty, and property be immediately placed under proper protection, and thus remove any possibility of persecutions and unforeseen troubles.

Sincerely, yours, S. H. PEARCY.

WASHINGTON, District of Columbia, ss:

Personally appeared before me S. H. Pearcy, a resident of Nueva Gerona, Isle of Pines, who, first being duly sworn, deposes and says that all of the facts above stated in his above letter to Senator Morgan are true and correct to the best of his personal knowledge and belief.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 22d day of May, 1906.

[SEAL.] ANNA M. ANDERSON,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

Mr. FORAKER. I should like, before the paper is passed by, to have the Senator tell us what is in it. I do not know what is in it, and it is almost impossible to go back and read long communications in the RECORD the following day when we are being pressed so by other matters.

Mr. MONEY. If the Senator from Ohio will allow me, I think it had better go in the RECORD, as the Senator from Alabama requests. It can not do any harm, and there may be some information in it.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not object at all to its going into the RECORD. The only thing I asked of the Senator from Alabama was if he would not state something about the nature of the paper. I do not ask to have it read. That would take up a good deal of time.

Mr. MONEY. That would take up a good deal of the time of the Senator from Alabama, which he says he wants to use in stating his case. I hope the paper may be published in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAKER. I will be satisfied if the Senator will tell us something of the nature of the paper—what is in it which is new, if anything; that is all.

Mr. MORGAN. I now present four letters written by the same party, whom I do not know; I have not the honor of her acquaintance. But the letters will explain themselves and the motive of their having been written, and I think they will show that there pervades in the Isle of Pines about as high a sentiment and about as keen a sense of propriety as can be found in almost any community in the United States.

Senator MORGAN,
The Senate of the United States:

Noting that you are a champion—

I beg pardon for reading that word here—for a just settlement of difficulties in the Isle of Pines, I take the liberty of addressing you upon the subject. Your proposition to send to the island a committee of investigation is most fair, and I hope it may be acted upon favorably and immediately by the Senate. It will be cordially approved by the Americans who have homes on the Isle of Pines. They wish the true conditions to be known. They have tried again and again to get some leading journals of the North to publish, as a mere piece of justice, their "side" of the situation, but all in vain. Most untruthful statements as to the assurances given by the Government to investors during General Wood's rule at Habana have had to go uncontradicted, as have absurd assertions pronouncing the island "worthless except for grazing purposes."

I inclose some general notes upon the subject. They are probably unnecessary, but I think they can at least do no harm. I write from personal knowledge, having spent several months upon the placid, fruitful isle, exploring it and noting conditions.

If I can serve you by any further communication as to the Americanized island, I shall take pleasure in doing so.

I am, very truly,

(Miss) GERTRUDE E. WALL.

1406 L STREET, WASHINGTON, March 26, 1906.

Amongst the inclosures which this lady sent to me is a transcript of the indorsement of the Commissioner of Public Lands upon a map of the United States published by order of Mr. McKinley, in which he asserted that the Isle of Pines was the property of the United States, and then there is another statement in which she gives the area and the productions tabulated, both of which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD.

The papers referred to are as follows:

MAP IN THE NEWBERRY LIBRARY, CHICAGO.

Date, 1900. Gift of Hon. H. S. BOUTELL. Date, "12, 29, 1902."

Inscription: Department of the Interior, United States General Land Office, Hon. Binger Hermann, Commissioner. United States and Territories and Insular Provinces.

Compiled from official surveys of the General Land Office and other authentic sources.—Harry King, C. E.

Philippine Islands.
Guam.
Hawaiian Islands.
Pine Island.
Porto Rico.

[NOTE (by Miss Wall).—Is there not governmental encouragement in a map issued by the Department of the Interior, with an inscription such as this, and a definite arrangement of "possessions?" This map sent broadcast over the country, is, I believe, not the only publication of the kind.]

SOME OF THE PRODUCTS OF THE ISLE OF PINES.

Cocoa, cotton, corn, coffee, cocoanuts, cane, bananas, limes, oranges, lemons, grape fruit, figs, olives, guaras, pineapples, custard apples, rice, melons, maumee, breadfruit, grapes, strawberries, mangoes, kumquats, sapodillos, English walnuts, citron, etc.; potatoes, onions, tomatoes, okra, cassava, etc.; sea-island cotton, tobacco, India rubber.

N. B.—Two or three crops to the year.

N. B.—The island is below the frost line. It has no volcanoes. It has no wind storms. It has never had (as yet) a case of yellow fever. It has cool nights. It has a mingling of mountain air and sea breezes. It is a land of pines and palms. Its present development—a mere beginning of possibilities—is due entirely to American energy and capital.

Mr. MORGAN. The next letter which I shall read is from the same lady. Although I have the consent of the lady to read this letter in full to the Senate, I have thought it was better perhaps to keep her out of contact with a certain question she suggests here and in regard to which she sends some testimony. So I omit that part of her letter.

MARCH 21, 1906.

DEAR SENATOR MORGAN: To the packet left yesterday for you at the Senatorial post-office, I think the inclosed clipping should be added. The tobacco question is of no interest to me, but I believe it is an important factor in the present Cuban-American controversy. The clipping is from a paper of influence in trade.

It is a paper called "Tobacco." Without reading it I will insert it at this place in her letter:

LAY BLAME AT THE TRUST DOOR—IT IS STRONGLY HINTED IN WASHINGTON THAT IT WAS THE TOBACCO COMBINE THAT CAUSED THE AMERICAN FLAG TO BE HAULED DOWN IN THE ISLE OF PINES.

[Special to Tobacco.]

WASHINGTON, December 26, 1905.

The fight which will be made at the present session of Congress to have the Isle of Pines declared a part of American territory by the rejection of the treaty with Cuba, which makes it a part of the territory of that Government, will be as vigorously prosecuted as the representatives of the 1,200 or 1,500 Americans on the island are capable of. The stories of Cuban misrule, to which the Americans on the Isle of Pines are subjected, sound like tales from the middle ages.

Secretary Root recently announced in emphatic terms that the Isle of Pines was the territory of Cuba, and that any attempt to set up a territorial government under the United States would be justly regarded by Cuba as action calling for the exercise of governmental authority to suppress. Secretary Root was thus carrying out an entirely new policy of the United States Government toward the Isle of Pines.

The American Government seems never to have had any doubt as to the sovereignty of the Isle of Pines until within a year or two ago. The treaty of Paris, through which all our difficulties with Spain preceding and resulting from the war of 1898 were settled, provided for the cession to the United States of the Philippines, Porto Rico, "and other islands," in the neighborhood of Cuba.

The minutes of the conference between the American and Spanish envoys prior to the adoption of the treaty show clearly that the intention was to cede the Isle of Pines to the United States. When one of the Americans objected to the payment of $20,000,000 for the Philippines, one of the Spanish envoys called attention to the fact that, while we were not getting Cuba, we were getting not only the Philippines, but Porto Rico and also the Isle of Pines.

The War Department recognized the Isle of Pines as American territory. A citizen of the United States wrote the Department in August, 1899, for information concerning the sovereignty of the Isle of Pines. Captain Pershing (now Colonel Pershing) wrote him, by direction of the Assistant Secretary of War, that the island was the territory of the United States, under the terms of the treaty of Paris, though it was at that time a part of the Department of Habana for purposes of administration.

Captain Pershing also inclosed his correspondent a copy of a pamphlet prepared by the Department exploiting the resources and advantages of the island for the purpose of inducing Americans to locate there.

Americans did locate there, acting on the assurance that the island was American territory. Some forty families from Iowa went to the Isle of Pines, bought land, set out their orange and banana groves, and some of them began the cultivation of tobacco.

This tobacco, it is claimed, was the starting point of all the troubles that have since befallen the band of Americans who have settled in the island under the assurance that the Stars and Stripes were hoisted and were not to be hauled down.

The War Department, acting under the orders of President McKinley, was at that time assuring Americans that the Isle of Pines had become ours by the treaty of Paris, and was inducing Americans to emigrate and begin the development of the resources of the beautiful isle.
